C. C. GHOSE, JACK AND M. C. GHOSH, JJ.

Prodyot Kumar Bhattacharjya — Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Death Ref. No. 12 of 1932 and Criminal Appeal No. 597 of 1932, Decided on 22nd August 1932.

(a) Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (1925), S. 3 (2)—Reference by District Magistrate and not by Commissioner is not incompetent.

A reference under S. 3 (2) is not incompetent merely because the records were submitted by the District Magistrate and not by the Commissioners. [P 2 C 1]

(b) Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (1925)—Judgment must be one by whole tribunal—Commissioner disagreeing cannot write separate judgment.

In a trial under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1925, the Commissioners are bound to follow the directions contained in the Act. It is not a trial under the Criminal Procedure Code simpliciter before a tribunal of three Judges and there cannot be as many as two or three judgments. The judgment that has to be pronounced is a judgment of the Tribunal, i. e., one single judgment embodying the findings and the views of the Commissioners who composed the tribunal. If any Commissioner does not agree with the other two Commissioners as regards the sentence to be imposed on the accused the only course that is open to him is to intimate to the other two Commissioners his views on the question of sentence and to leave it to the Tribunal to embody his views on the question of sentence in the course of the judgment which is to be pronounced by the Tribunal. He has no right whatsoever to write a separate judgment of his own. [P 2 C 2]

(c) Criminal Trial—Sentence—Tender age by itself is not sufficient to mitigate punishment—It should be considered with other circumstances—Penal Code, S. 53.

There is no hard and fast rule that because the murderer is of what is called tender age he must necessarily escape the normal penalty prescribed by the law. Age is no doubt a circumstance to be taken into consideration, but this has got to be taken into consideration along with various other circumstances present on the record and to which attention may be drawn either by the prosecution or by the defence. Judgment.—The accused Prodyot Kumar Bhattacharji was tried by three Commissioners appointed under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1925 on charges under Ss. 302/120-B, 302/34 and 302/114, I. P. C., and also under S. 19 (f), Arms Act. The Commissioners unanimously found him guilty under S. 302/120-B, I. P. C., and also under S. 302-34, I. P. C., and convicted him accordingly under the said two sections. As regards the charge under S. 302/114, I. P. C., the Commissioners stated that having regard to their finding on the said other two charges they did not convict him under this charge and the accused was thereupon acquitted of the charge under S. 302/114, I. P. C. As regards the charge under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, the accused was found guilty and convicted accordingly. So far as the sentence on the accused was concerned two of the Commissioners were of opinion that having regard to the circumstances disclosed on the evidence on record nothing could be said in mitigation of the sentence of death and they accordingly directed that the accused should be hanged by the neck until he was dead. The other Commissioner Mr. J. Do was of opinion that the ends of justice would be sufficiently met by the accused being sentenced to transportation for life. The dissenting Commissioner has purported to write a judgment differing from the majority of the Commissioners on the question of sentence and a question has been raised whether, having regard to the language of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act 1925, and the rules made thereunder, the dissenting Commissioner was competent to write a separate judgment of his own. On this question we shall have something to say later on.

After the conclusion of the trial before the Commissioners the records of the proceedings were submitted to this Court by Mr. Burge, Deputy Magistrate, Midnapore and it has been argued before us by learned counsel on behalf of the accused that Mr. Burge was incompetent to submit the records of the proceedings to the High Court and that the proper persons who could have submitted the records were the Commissioners and not the District Magistrate. It has been argued by learned counsel for the accused that the reference is incompetent and that we cannot legally go into the question of the confirmation of the sentence of death passed on the accused and that the only course open to us is to re-transmit the records to the place wherefrom they were sent. This contention, in our opinion, has absolutely no substance and in this connexion we would content ourselves by drawing attention to S. 3 (2), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Supplementary) Act, 1925, which runs as follows:

"When the Commissioners pass a sentence of death the record of the proceedings before them shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court which shall exercise, in respect of such proceedings, all the powers conferred on the High Court by Chap. 27 of the Code."

(After considering the facts and discussing evidence the judgement proceeded). As stated above, we have examined the entire record from cover to cover with a single desire to find out the truth and we are bound to state that the prosecution has satisfactorily brought home to the accused his guilt in this matter. We are therefore in agreement with the Commissioners in holding that the accused has been rightly convicted under the sections referred to above including the section relating to the offence under the Arms Act. In coming to this conclusion we have not overlooked the significance of the medical evidence and the case for the prosecution that the bullets which killed Mr. Douglas were of 380 bore and that these were apparently not fired by the accused.

The only question that now remains for our consideration is the question of the sentence to be passed on the accused. Our attention has been drawn to what has been written by Mr. De— one of the Commissioners—in what he calls a dissenting judgment. We desire to make it plain that the trial being one under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1925, the Commissioners were bound to follow the directions contained in the Act. It was not a trial under the Criminal Procedure Code simpliciter before a tribunal of three Judges; it was a trial before a Special Tribunal under a Special Act and there is no room for the contention that there can be as many as two or three judgments in the case. The judgment that had to be pronounced was a judgment of the Tribunal, i. e. one single judgment embodying the findings and the views of the Commissioners who composed the Tribunal. If Mr. De did not agree with the other two Commissioners as regards the sentence to be imposed on the accused the only course that was open to him was to intimate to the other two Commissioners his views on the question of sentence and to leave it to the Tribunal to embody his views on the question of sentence in the course of the judgment which was to be pronounced by the Tribunal. He had no right whatsoever to write a separate judgment of his own, and what he did was clearly not contemplated by the law and was in every way irregular. But, be that as it may, we have allowed the learned counsel for the defence to adopt what Mr. De has said as part of his argument and it need not be stated that we have considered the matter fully and with much anxious care.

The assessment of sentence in cases of this description is always beset with difficulties, but we desire to make it plain that there is no hard and fast rule that because the murderer is of what is called tender age he must necessarily escape the normal penalty prescribed by the law. Age is no doubt a circumstance to be taken into consideration, but this has got to be taken into consideration along with various other circumstances present on the record and to which attention may be drawn either by the prosecution or by the defence. The murder in this case was of an extremely cowardly character. The murdered man had not even a sporting chance. He was felled down and done to death while he was engaged in doing the duties imposed on him by virtue of his office as District Magistrate of Midnapore. He had done, as far as the present record goes, no injury to any human being and there was no earthly reason whatsoever as to why he should have been done to death unless it be that he was of alien origin and that therefore vengeance was to be wreaked on him on account of some vague, unknown, unsubstantial and indefinable grievance: see in this connection Exs. 1, 19, 14-22, 19, 21, 16 and 15. Remember also that this is not the first case of its kind. We are bound to take notice of the recrudescence of murders of this description. There is nothing on the record which can be urged in mitigation of sentence, although we have explored the whole of the record in our endeavours to find something or other in favour of the accused. We are of opinion that we should be failing in our duty if we refrained from confirming the sentence of death passed by the Commissioners.

The result therefore is that the sentence of death passed by the Commissioners is confirmed and the appeal preferred by the accused is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 268 of 1932, Decided on 23rd May 1932.

Bengal Embankment Act (1882), S. 76 (b)—“Existing embankment”, Meaning of explained.

By “existing embankment” is meant the embankment as it existed at the date when the additions were made, that is to say, that permission of the Collector is necessary even for repairs, if those repairs involve additions to the embankment in the state that it is in, when these repairs begin. It does not mean the embankment as it existed at the date of the notification under S. 6: 38 Cal 413 and 111 R 1919 Cal 669, Ref. [114 C 23]

Narendra Kumar Bose and Saroj Kumar Maity—for Petitioners.

D. N. Bhattacharji—for the Crown.

Judgment.—A point of some importance is raised by this Rule. That point is indicated by ground 3 which is in the following terms:

“For that in the absence of any evidence as to the original height of the bund the conviction is bad in law.”

It appears that petitioner 23, Pulin Behari Dutt is one of the owners of an embankment called the Taladiha zamindari embankment which is situated in an area in respect of which a notification has been made under S. 6, Bengal Embankment Act, 1882. The date of this notification is 11th March 1901. In 1926 there were floods of exceptional gravity in the District of Midnapur; as a result of these floods the embankment was breached at several places. Petitioner 23 and also some of his tenants applied to the Collector for permission to repair the bund up to the old level. The Collector on 5th April 1928, gave permission to repair the breaches up to the level of 19'. A further application was made on 4th January 1929 to the Collector asking him to give permission to raise the bund to the original level which was alleged to be more than 19'. On 23rd April, the Collector gave permission for the bund to be repaired to a level of 19' for the 1st mile, 20' for the 2nd mile, and 21' for the 3rd mile and 22' for the 4th mile. There is evidence to the effect that all the petitioners with the exception of petitioner 23 were seen working on the bund with the result that it was raised to levels in excess of those prescribed by the Collector's order. There is also evidence that persons working on the bund refused to obey the Irrigation Department Officer who called upon them to desist.

Further there is the evidence of a P.W. D. Surveyor that various sections of the bund have been raised to heights exceeding those for which the Collector has granted permission. On these materials the petitioners were served with notices alleging that they had raised the embankment above the original level. The notices further informed them that unless they levelled down the embankment by a certain date they would be prosecuted. Nothing was done by the petitioners and in due course they were prosecuted and convicted by the learned Magistrate of an offence punishable under S. 76 (b), Bengal Embankment Act, namely, of having without previous permission of the Collector added to an existing embankment and petitioner 23 was ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 30 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month and the other petitioners were ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 15 each or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a fortnight. The Magistrate further made an order under S. 79 directing the petitioners to remove the addition made to the zamindari embankment 'beyond the permissive level sanctioned by the Collector within one month from the date of the order. The petitioners then moved the High Court and it appeared that the proceedings before the Magistrate had been vitiated by certain irregularities of procedure. The High Court accordingly set aside the convictions and ordered the petitioners to be retried, the retrial to begin from the stage immediately preceding the examination of the accused persons under S. 342, Criminal P. C. The petitioners were retried and were again convicted. The learned Magistrate sentenced petitioner 23 to pay a fine of Rs. 40 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month and the other petitioners to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one week. It is against these convictions and sentences that this Rule has been obtained.

Now Mr. Basu maintains that there is no evidence to prove what the original level of the bund was. There certainly is evidence to show what the level of the bund was in 1926 and the trying Court has arrived at a finding on the matter, namely, that it was below 19'5" for the 1st mile and below 22' for the 2nd, 3rd and 4th miles. These levels have been exceeded in consequence of the work which is said to have been done by the petitioners. Mr. Basu argues that this is not enough and he says that "existing embankment" must be taken to mean an embankment as it existed at the date of the notification, that is to say in 1901. There is admittedly no evidence on the record as to the state of things in that year. I find myself unable to agree with this construction of the section. Authority is against Mr. Basu. In the case of Ram Nath Pandit

v. Emperor (1), Holmwood and Sharfuddin, JJ., held that "existing embankment" in Cl. (b), S. 76 bears the same interpretation as "existing embankment" in Cl. (a), that is an embankment existing at the time the addition is made. Following that case Richardson and Shamsul Huda, JJ., in the case of Emperor v. Lakshi Kanta Hazra (2), expressly laid down that "existing embankment" means the embankment existing when the addition is made and not the embankment as it existed at the date of the notification under S. 6. As against these authorities Mr. Basu has relied on the judgment of M. N. Mukerji, J., in dealing with two unreported cases: References Nos. 48 and 49 of 1929. In those cases Mukerji, J., sitting singly accepted the references made by the learned Sessions Judge of Midnapur and set aside the convictions under S. 76 (b).

No reasons however are given for the decision and the letter of reference raises several points any one of which, if accepted would justify the Court in setting aside the conviction. The only relevant paragraph in the letter of reference is para. (c) where the learned Judge submits that unless there be evidence as to what the height was before the additions and the height after the additions there can be no conviction under S. 76 (b), Act 2. That does not imply that the learned Sessions Judge is putting forward a submission that the state of things to be considered is the state of things at the date of the notification. Nor does the judgment of the Court imply that it accepted the view for which Mr. Basu has been arguing. On this point it is really sufficient if I say I cannot accede to the petitioners argument, namely, that the petitioners were entitled to raise the bund to the height to which it was in 1901 and there being no evidence of its height in that year there is nothing to show that that height has been exceeded. I think I should add that although the view put forward by Mr. Bhattacharji for the Crown may lead to certain difficulties, it appears to me to be the right one, namely, by "existing embankment" is meant the embankment as it existed at the date when the additions were made, that is to say, that permission of the Collector is necessary even for repairs if these repairs involve additions to the embankment in the state that it is in when these repairs begin: whether the department would ever commence proceedings against persons who have merely restored the bund to the state it was in before it was damaged is a question on which I do not feel called to express an opinion. But having regard to the language of S. 76 (b) and the authorities I feel constrained to hold that Mr. Bhattacharji's construction is the correct one.

I do not think that there is any substance in any other of the grounds raised by the petitioners. I think there is ample material on the record from which the Court could infer that petitioner 23 was a party to the illegal raising of the level of the bund even though none of the witnesses called could swear to having seen him working on the site. Similarly I see no reason why the order made under S. 79 of the Act should be set aside. In these circumstances the Rule must be discharged and the convictions and sentences affirmed.

Criminal Appeal No. 55 of 1932, Decided on 20th July 1932.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 126—Muktear in possession of draft of incomplete statement but not meant to be filed can claim privilege.

Where it is not shown that a certain petition in the possession of a muktear which was sought to be produced was the document meant to be filed in Court but it was only a draft of some statements made by the complainant and the petition had not been completed the muktear is entitled to privilege under S. 126: 5 Bom L R 122, Dist. [P 6 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1893), S. 297—Non-direction—Evidence against all accused not same—Evidence against each should be dealt with separately.

In a case before the jury there were three accused. The evidence against accused 3 was not the same as the evidence against the other two but was less.

Held: that the charge which did not deal with the evidence against accused 3, separately was bad for non-direction vitiating the conviction of accused 3. [P 6 C 1, 2]

Mallik, J.—The three appellants Miajan Biswas, Afser alias Afseruddin Molla and Samsil alias Samseluddin Molla with two other men Mokshoa Shaikh and Ismail Shaikh were put on their trial under Ss. 366, 458, 147 and 148, I. P. C. The trial was held by a jury. The jury unanimously found Mokshoa Shaikh and Ismail Shaikh not guilty but Afser and Miajan guilty under Ss. 147, 148, 366 and 458, I. P. C., and Samsil guilty under Ss. 147, 366 and 458, I. P. C. The learned Judge accepted this verdict of the jury and sentenced Miajan and Afser to rigorous imprisonment for five years each under Ss. 366 and 458, I. P. C., no separate sentence being passed under Ss. 147 and 148 and the direction being that the sentences under Ss. 366 and 458 were to run concurrently. The learned Judge sentenced Samsil to five years' rigorous imprisonment under each of the Ss. 366 and 458 (the sentences to run concurrently) no separate sentence being passed under S. 147, I. P. C. The facts of the case for the prosecution were very briefly these:

The accused Afser and Miajan one day came to the house of Bhim Mandal, the husband of Shama Dasi during Bhim Mandal's absence and made immoral proposals to Shama Dasi which Shama Dasi rejected. Afser and Miajan went away threatening her. When Bhim returned home, Shama Dasi told him what had happened whereupon Bhim took her to the house of one Jagnessar and kept her there for safety. On the night of 29th April 1931, the accused men with four or five other persons came to Jagessar's house, broke open the walls of the ghar in which Shama Dasi was sleeping and forcibly dragged her away. Shama Dasi thereafter was taken from one place to another until she was recovered on 17th May 1931 from the akra of one Ramananda Goswami by her husband Bhim Mandal. The appellants with two others were thereupon put on their trial with the result that has been stated before.

On behalf of the appellants it was first contended that the learned Judge in his charge to the jury had not given full direction as to the effect of non-examination of material witnesses in the case. (After overruling this contention the judgment proceeded). It appears that the defence wanted a muktear to produce in Court a petition of complaint which, according to the accused, the complainant wanted to file in Court. The muktear refused to produce this document seeking privilege under S. 126, Evidence Act, and this claim of privilege was allowed by the learned Judge. It was said that here the learned Judge was wrong in law and it was contended that on that account the trial was vitiated. In support of this contention our attention was drawn to the decision in the case of Emperor v. Mariane G. Rodrigues (1), the argument being that the petition was meant to be filed in Court and there could not therefore be anything confidential in it. The argument, so far as it goes, seems to be all right. But facts were not established in the case which would make the decision in the case, Emperor v. Mariane G. Rodrigues (1), applicable to the case before us. It could not be elicited from the muktear that the document which was sought to be produced was the document meant to be filed in Court. The evidence shows that it was only a draft of some statements made by the complainant and that the petition had not been completed. It might very well be that there were some statements in that draft which were not to be incorporated in the petition of complaint when it would be finally prepared for presentation to the Court. If in these circumstances the learned Judge uphold the claim of privilege I do not think he did anything that was wrong in law.

There was another ground on which the learned Judge's charge was assailed before us. The ground was that the learned Judge in his charge did not deal with the evidence in the case as it stood against the accused persons separately. This contention, in my opinion, is not without foundation. There can be no doubt that the evidence against appellant 3, Samsil, was not the same as the evidence against the other two appellants Miajan and Afser. To mention only one or two such instances, Samsil had not been identified by Shama Dasi in the lower Court whereas she had experienced no such difficulty in the case of Miajan and Afser. P. W. 7, Tarak Pramanik, could say something against Miajan and Afser but not against appellant 3 Samsil. To the same effect is the deposition of P.W. 14 Ramananda Das, Bairagi. There is no doubt therefore that the evidence as it stood against Samsil was different from that as it stood against the other two appellants, Miajan and Afser which alone the learned Judge discussed and put before the jury without telling them that the evidence against Samsil was less than that against the other two men Miajan and Afser. In these circumstances the omission on the part of the learned Judge to deal with and discuss the case against Samsil individually and separately from that of the other two men was, in my opinion, a serious non-direction so far as Samsil was concerned, making his conviction untenable.

As regards the other two appellants the severity of sentence passed on them was another point urged before us. Having regard to the facts of the case and remembering that the accused broke open the house of Jajnessar, forcibly entered that house and from there dragged the woman away after having assaulted Jajnessar the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment does not seem to me to be unduly severe.

The result is that the appeal of Miajan and Afser is dismissed and that of Samsil allowed. The conviction and sentence of Samsil are set aside. Samsil will be set at liberty immediately.

Mallik, J.—The two appellants Kashemali and Maidan Parmanik with seven other men were put on their trial on a charge of dacoity under S. 395 and also under S. 412, I. P. C. The trial was held with the aid of a jury. The jury found two of the accused men not guilty and the remaining seven persons were found by them to be guilty. Kashemali and Maidan the two appellants before us were among those seven. As regards Maidan the verdict of the jury was unanimous. As regards Kashemali however it was divided—three jurors being of opinion that the man was guilty while the remaining two being of opinion that he was not guilty. The learned Judge accepted this verdict of the jury and sentenced Kashemali under Ss. 395 and 412, I. P. C., to five years' rigorous imprisonment and he sentenced the other appellant Maidan also to five years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 395, I. P. C.

On the night of 15th January 1931 there was a dacoity in the house of one Yusuf, doctor. A pretty large number of men broke into his house, assaulted Yusuf, his wife and son, broke open the chest and an almirah and took away a considerable amount of money about Rs. 7,000 altogether from inside the chests. The occurrence took place at about 3 in the morning of 15th January and an information was lodged at the thana by one Serajul Huq, a nephew of Yusuf, doctor, on the same day at 9-30 a. m., the thana being six miles from the place of occurrence. In the first information report the name of one of the dacoits Sekandar was mentioned. An investigation followed and a number of arrests were made and as many as nine men were put on their trial with the result I have stated before. The evidence against the appellant Maidan consisted of the retracted confession of one of the dacoits Naimuddin by name and the test identification at which Maidan was identified. The evidence against the other appellant Kashemali consisted of the retracted confession of Naimuddin and the evidence of two men Ramproshad and Makbulali.

On behalf of the appellants the Judge's charge to the jury has been assailed before us on more than one ground. So far as the appellant Maidan is concerned the charge was attacked on three grounds. It was said that although according to the evidence of Serajul Huq (the man who lodged the first information report at the thana) Serajul Huq knew Maidan as a man of Dukhibari, in the first information report he did not say that any man of Dukhibari had been among the dacoits. But this fact was, as the learned Judge's charge to the jury would show, actually put before the jury. It was said that although according to the first information report, P. W. 3, Yusuf's wife, would be able to identify the man who had inflicted injuries on her, Yusuf's wife in her evidence in Court identified not only the man who had inflicted injuries on her but another man and the contention before us was that this fact was not put before the jury. Here again the charge would show that the learned Judge did tell the jury what evidence Yusuf's wife had given in Court, and he did tell the jury also that in the first information report Serajul Huq had stated that Yusuf's wife would be able to identify the person who had inflicted injuries on her.

As regards Maidan the third contention before us was that the learned Judge did not tell the jury that although one Aziz knew Maidan and although Aziz had seen the chowkidar who had accompanied Serajul Huq to the thana before Serajul Huq went there, Maidan's name found no mention in the first information report. This argument would have some force in it if there had been any evidence to show that there had been some conversation between Aziz and Serajul Huq in connexion with Maidan. But the learned advocate for the appellants had to admit that there was no such evidence on the record of the case. All the three points taken on behalf of the appellant Maidan must therefore fail.

The case of the other appellant Kashemali stands however on a different footing. The evidence against this man, as I have stated before, consisted of the retracted confession of Naimuddin and the evidence of the two persons Ramproshad and Makbulali by name. Ramproshad was the person who by an appointment had met the dacoits before the dacoity took place at a place called Raipur and when on arrival there he found out what the object of the men was, he came away. According to him, Kashemali on the next day told him that on the previous night he (Kashemali) had committed a dacoity. Makbul was the man to whom Naimuddin admitted having with others committed dacoity in Yusuf's house and complained that his companions had given him no share of the booty whereupon Makbul took down the names of the persons who according to Naimuddin had committed the dacoity on a slip of paper and this slip of paper contained the name of Kashemali as one of the dacoits. The slip of paper was seized from Makbul after his arrest during the police investigation. Ramproshad in his statement recorded under S. 104, Criminal P. C., had not mentioned Kashemali as the person who had come to him and admitted having committed a dacoity on the previous night. According to that statement it was one Kumar who had come and made that statement to him.

This fact the learned Judge did not put to the jury, a fact which in our opinion, was a very important one, in considering whether Ramproshad was a truthful witness or not. The learned Judge told the jury in a way that both Ramproshad and Makbul were no better than accomplices. But the learned Judge although when telling the jury that before there could be a conviction on a retracted confession of a co-accused there must be corroboration on material particulars, he pointed out to the jury that the retracted confession of Naimuddin had been corroborated by the evidence of Ramproshad and Makbul omitted to tell them, that this corroboration must come from independent witnesses and that it would not do if that corroboration would come from evidence which in itself was tainted as the evidence by an accomplice undoubtedly is. The evidence against Kashemali as I have stated more than once before consisted of the retracted confession of Naimuddin and the statements of the accomplices Ramproshad and Makbul and that being so, the omission of the learned Judge to give a full and sufficient warning to the jury as to the circumstances under which a conviction can be based on a retracted confession of a co-accused amounted, in my opinion, so far as Kashemali is concerned, to a serious nondirection. We would therefore dismiss the appeal of the appellant Maidan Pramanik and allow the appeal of Kashemali. Kashemali's conviction and sentence are set aside. He is acquitted and directed to be set at liberty at once.

(a) Calcutta Police Act (1866), S. 50-A—“Mere” does not mean pure — Sufficiently expert person having complete control over result—No external circumstances intervening—Game is of mere skill—Whether skill or chance predominates is not material.

The word “mere” in S. 50-A does not mean pure. A game of mere skill should be taken to mean one in which a person playing it, as far as possible in any human affairs, has complete control over the result which he sets out to attain, provided he is sufficiently expert in performance. The real test is: Is there any external thing or fortuitous circumstance which may interpose between the action of the player and the result to be attained and are the media or instruments of the operation all ascertained the moment the game begins. The criterion of whether skill or chance is the predominant or governing element cannot be applied: A I R 1929 Cal 769, Disc.

Judgment.—In this case three accused persons Saligram Khetry, N. H. Balakani and R. N. Swinton were charged under S. 44, Calcutta Police Act (Bengal Act 4 of 1866). Khetry was the proprietor of a show known as The Grand Variety Show and Balakani and Swinton were his assistants who helped him in running that show. On 14th January 1932 an application was made to the police authorities by the manager of that show for permission to carry it on at 124, Bow Bazar Street, for a period of three months and to conduct various side shows and games of skill including a game known as the "dart game." The permission asked for was granted by the police on 19th January 1932. But on 16th February 1932 an order was issued by the police authorities countermanning the sanction as regards the particular game known as the dart game on the ground that it did not belong to the classes of game which are predominantly games of skill. This order was duly communicated by a police officer on the following day to the accused Saligram Khetry at about three o'clock in the afternoon. Another police officer was sent out at 5 p. m. to ascertain whether the game was still being carried on and upon his reporting that it was still in operation, another police officer who was the first witness for the prosecution in the Court below, went to the show ground and found that the game was in progress in one of the stalls and he took possession of the apparatus and arrested all the persons found in the stall. As the outcome of that the three persons, whose names I have given, were charged under S. 44 as already stated. That section provides as follows:

"Whoever, being the owner, occupier or having the use of any house, room or place, opens, keeps or uses the same as a common gaming house; and whoever, being the owner or occupier of any house or room, knowingly and wilfully permits the same to be opened, kept or used by any other person as a common gaming-house; and whoever has the care or management of or in any manner assists in conducting the business of any house, room or place so opened, kept or used; and whoever advances or furnishes money for the purpose of gaming with persons frequenting such house, room or place, shall be liable, on summary conviction before a Magistrate to a fine not exceeding Rs. 500 or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three months."

The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate found all the accused persons guilty under S. 44. In making the order he said:

"It is not disputed that Saligram is the manager and the other two accused persons are his assistants. The accused Saligram is fined Rs. 50 in default two weeks rigorous imprisonment. The accused Balakani and Swinton are fined Rs. 5 each, in default five days rigorous imprisonment each. The instruments of gaming and the money that have been seized are confiscated under S. 48 of the said Act."

The only question before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate was whether or not the accused could avail themselves of the exception provided in S. 50-A, Calcutta Police Act. That section was inserted into the Calcutta Police Act by the Bengal Public Gambling (Amending) Act No. 4 of 1913. S. 50-A reads as follows: "Nothing in S. 44 to S. 50 shall apply to any game of mere skill, wherever played." The learned Magistrate in his judgment said:

"The only point for determination is whether this dart game constituted gaming or not. It is not in dispute that the game was being played."

The learned Magistrate rightly took the view that the other conditions named in S. 44 were undoubtedly present. The ground on which this matter came before this Court in revision, is stated in the petition in these words:

"For that in view of the reasons given by the learned Magistrate himself, the dart game ought to have been held to be a game of mere skill and not one of chance."

As described by the learned Magistrate the game was played in the following manner: "A square wooden board which has about a hundred squares, coloured red, blue, white and green, is fixed up above seven feet from the ground; the player stands twelve feet from this target; between him and the target is a table on which are placed card-board squares bearing coloured discs; the player chooses his colour and puts a rupee on it; he is given four darts; if the player places all four darts on squares of the pre-selected colour on the target he is paid four rupees; apparently he gets a rupee for every successful throw; total failure means loss of the stake." The learned Magistrate then proceeded as follows:

"The defence has called a witness who demonstrated in Court that he is an expert at this game; he was successful with two throws out of three; on a second attempt both throws were successful. It is urged that this is a game in which skill preponderates over chance and therefore it is not gaming. It is also urged that the game was allowed by the police and therefore no offence was committed."

The finding of the learned Magistrate was in these terms:

"On a careful consideration of the nature of the game and the manner of play I am satisfied that it is a form of gaming."

Then he says :

"The manner in which the game is played shows definitely that the element of chance preponderates. The ordinary person who has had no previous practice can only hit the mark, (that is, one of the numerous coloured squares according to the colour chosen) by sheer fluke or accident. The large number of squares of each colour, the small size of each of the squares, the distance at which the player stands from the target, are all factors which render a successful throw extremely unlikely and a matter of pure chance. The fact that some people can acquire or have acquired unusual skill does not alter the nature of the game so far as the general public is concerned."

The learned Magistrate then said :

"It has been laid down in Emperor v. Arjun Singh (1), that it is not necessary to consider whether the element of skill preponderates over the element of chance. All that is necessary to determine is whether the game is one of pure skill. It cannot for a moment be imagined that the dart game is one of pure skill. It is therefore a form of gaming. If it were a game of pure skill it would not be necessary to have so many squares of the same colour, in different parts of the target. If this were a game in which the player selected the very square on which he was going to throw his dart, it would be a game of pure skill."

For those reasons the learned Magistrate came to the finding that this dart game was not a game of "mere skill", the words used in S. 50-A, Calcutta Police Act, and therefore constituted an illegal game so as to bring the persons running it within the purview of S. 44. The only point I have to decide is whether or not I am in agreement with the view taken by the learned Magistrate. As I have indicated the learned Magistrate seems to have placed a considerable or at any rate some reliance upon the decision in Emperor v. Arjun Singh (1). That decision was given by Mukerji, J., in the case of Emperor v. Arjun Singh (1). In the course of his judgment at p. 523 of the report the learned Judge said :

"The question as to whether a game is one of pure chance or one in which the element of skill preponderates considerations which were thought important under the Act as it stood before are no longer pertinent. We have to see whether the game is covered by what is meant by gaming; if it is, it is hit by the Act, unless it is a game of mere skill."

Broadly speaking, with that proposition I agree. But I am bound to say that it seems a little difficult to think of any game which is absolutely devoid of all possibilities of some fortuitous element entering into the playing of it. The element of chance may be small or even infinitesimal, but in practically in all pastimes which can rightly be described as games even though they are, undoubtedly, games of skill, some element of chance might creep in. I make these observations for the purpose of saying that in my opinion, it is very difficult to read the word "mere" as if it were synonymous with the word "pure" in the strict and scientific sense of the latter word. I am therefore of opinion that one must give a reasonable interpretation to the expression "mere skill" and should come to the conclusion that a game of "mere skill" should be taken to mean one in which a person playing it, as far as possible in any human affairs, has complete control over the result which he sets out to attain, provided he is sufficiently expert in performance. I agree with Mukerji, J., that having regard to the terms of S. 50-A the question is no longer one as to whether the element of skill or chance predominates. The real question as I have said, is whether the result sought to be obtained can be achieved by the person seeking to attain it if he has sufficient expertness to bring it about. It is obvious that in a large number of games there is definitely an element of chance. Games which are dependent upon the throw of dice or the turn of wheel or the fall of cards, necessarily have a decided element in the playing of them which is altogether outside the control of the person playing.

In the present case it is argued on behalf of the Crown that the likelihood of the player affixing the dart on a square of the particular colour nominated by him was so remote that it became a matter of pure luck, whether the dart struck a particular colour or not. It is argued because there are a number of squares of the same colour, the player might by chance hit any individual square of the colour selected by him, although he had in fact aimed at another square of the same colour; and it is therefore said that the difficulty of hitting the precise target selected is so great that success must necessarily be dependent on what is ordinarily called a fluke. In this connexion I may observe that no one would dispute that the game, of billiards is a game of the highest possible skill and yet even in this game if a player sets out to put a ball into a particular pocket and he may by a fluke put that ball into some other pocket but he nevertheless scores his point. It seems to me therefore that any argument which is based upon the proposition, the greater the difficulty the greater the element of chance, is wholly unsound, one may equally well say, the greater the difficulty the higher the skill.

In this particular case there can be no doubt, I think, that the likelihood of success is well within the control of any particular player, provided he possesses the necessary skill. No doubt success would demand a high degree of skill or at any rate what is generally described as knack which is only another way of saying that the person playing must have an aptitude and must have a certain amount of experience and expertness in the play of the particular game. Here it is clearly possible for a person with sufficient expertness to hit any particular square or at any rate a line of squares. I say line of squares because the colours were arranged in lines drawn diagonally on the board which constituted the target. There is nothing in the playing of the game which could not be foreseen and anticipated. The players in the game so far as any outside circumstance or fortuitous factors are concerned, are masters of the situation. If one seeks a criterion upon the question whether the game is one of mere skill or not, I think one can only say that the real test is: Is there any external thing or fortuitous circumstance which may interpose between the action of the player and the result to be attained, and are the media, or instruments of the operation all ascertained the moment the game begins. As I have already said it is undoubtedly the case that in this particular game there was a possibility and indeed probability that a player might be unwillingly successful by hitting a line of the colour selected other than the particular line which he intended or was supposed to aim at. But on the other hand as I have already said it was undoubtedly possible for the person with the requisite skill to hit the actual point on the target selected by him beforehand. Accordingly giving the words "mere skill", a reasonable construction and not interpreting the qualifying adjective, the word "mere" as if it meant pure in the sense in which that word might be used in a scientific experiment. I come to the conclusion that this case falls within the proviso of S. 50-A.

The English authorities are not of very much assistance in this country because undoubtedly the legislature here by the use of the word "mere" have sought to go even further than the English legislation relevant to a matter of this kind. As stated by Mukerji, J., (ubi supra) I am of opinion, that so far as this country is concerned, one can no longer apply the criterion of whether skill or chance is the predominant or governing element. In order to escape conviction under S. 44, it must be shown by the defence that to all intents and purposes on a broad and reasonable view of the matter the game was one of skill and nothing else. The question of whether or not the game is one of mere skill for the purpose of invoking the protection of S. 50-A is a question of fact. This Rule is made absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the fine if paid will be refunded.

* Civil P. C. (1908), S. 135—Wide construction must be given to sub-S. (2)—Arrest after one hour of closing of Court at place not on way to person's residence—No explanation how hour was spent—Persons arresting cannot be convicted under Penal Code (1860), S. 342.

A reasonably wide construction must be given to S. 135, sub-S. (2), and it is not the intention of the legislature that a person holding a warrant of arrest on a civil Court process should be able to pounce upon a person against whom the warrant has been issued the moment the Court that the person had been attending rises for the day and a slight deviation for purpose of business or refreshment will not rob a party to a litigation of the protection under S. 135 (2). But where a person was arrested after one hour of the rising of the Court at a place, close to the Court, but which was not shown to be in his way to his residence and there was no explanation of how the intermediate hour was spent it cannot be held that he was attending the Court within the meaning of S. 135 and the persons arresting cannot be convicted under S. 342, Penal Code.

Hemendra Kumar Dass — for Petitioners.

Judgment.—The question in this case is whether the complainant at the time he is said to have been wrongfully confined by the petitioners was protected from arrest by reason of S. 135, sub-S. 2, Civil P. C. It appears that the first petitioner had a civil Court decree outstanding against the complainant. On his application the Munsiff issued a warrant for the complainant's arrest and made over the warrant for execution to petitioner 2 who is a Court peon. It is a common ground that the petitioner was arrested on his way from the Munsif's Court at Tejpur to the Tejpur Local Board Office at 4 p. m. on 27th June 1931. It appears that on that day two civil suits to which the complainant was a party were on the list for hearing in the Munsiff's Court at Tejpur. The complainant had accordingly gone to the Court in connexion with the suits and had a consultation with his pleader. The 27th June was a Saturday and the latest hour at which it is suggested the Court was actually sitting was 3 p. m. It has been found as a fact that the complainant when he was arrested explained to the petitioners that he was going to the Court in connexion with two suits and that he could not be arrested on a civil Court process. Therefore no question can arise of the petitioners' having no notice of the business which had taken the complainant to Court on that date.

Although I consider that a reasonably wide construction must be given to S. 135, sub-S. 2, Civil P. C., and that it is not the intention of the legislature that a person holding a warrant of arrest on a civil Court process should be able to pounce upon a person against whom the warrant has been issued the moment the Court, that the person has been attending, rises for the day. I do not think, however, that it clearly appears that the complainant in this case is covered by the subsection. He certainly was not going to the tribunal when he was arrested; nor can it be that he was at the time attending such a tribunal for the purpose of a matter pending before it. To my mind when he was on his way from the tribunal to the Local Board Office at least an hour after the Munsif had concluded the business of the day he could not be said attending the tribunal at all. No explanation is furnished how he occupied himself in the interval and simply from the facts that the Local Board Office is in the same compound as the Munsif's Court and he was on his way from the Munsif's Court an hour after the Munsif had risen I cannot draw the conclusion that he could at the time he described as attending the Court.

It is not said that he was returning from the tribunal and there is no evidence that the Local Board Office is on the way from the Court to his residence. As I have said I should be sorry to read S. 135 in a narrow fashion and to hold that the slightest deviation for the purpose of business or refreshment robs a party to a litigation of the protection which sub-S. 2 gives him. The facts here seem to me to be too meagre to admit of my holding that there is evidence on which it can be safely said that the complainant when he was arrested was attending the Munsif's Court for the purpose of a litigation to which he was a party.

In the circumstances the Rule is made absolute and the convictions and sentences are set aside, and the petitioners are acquitted. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Matrimonial Suit No. 14 of 1931, Decided on 28th August 1931.

(a) Divorce Act (1869), S. 10—Unnatural offence—Charge of—Some corroboration is necessary.

In an application for dissolution of marriage by the wife where a charge of an attempt to have unnatural sexual intercourse is alleged the Court ought generally speaking, to require some corroboration of the petitioner's story because if she in any degree assents to what happened she becomes an accomplice to her husband in the matter. [P 13 C 2]

(b) Divorce Act (1869), S. 10—Discretion of Court—When should be exercised—Principle stated—Discretion was exercised against dissolution.

It is essential as a matter of practice, in matrimonial cases, that if a petitioner wishes the Court to exercise its discretion in his or her favour he or she should make a frank disclosure of all the circumstances of the case. In every exercise of discretion the interest of the community at large in maintaining the sanction of honest matrimony is a governing consideration; a strong affirmative case is necessary before a Judge is justified under the statutes in negativ-

ing their conditional prohibition; it is manifestly contrary to law that a judicial discretion in favour of a litigant guilty of misconduct in the matters in question should be exercised where that course will probably encourage immorality; if it is not unlikely to do so that is an argument against leniency. [P 14 C 1, 2]

Where there is no allegation by the wife against the husband that he at any time was unfaithful to her in the sense of having sexual relations with other women until after she herself, be the reason good or bad, had finally left him and on the contrary it is proved that she committed adultery at a time when she was actually residing with her husband and living with him as his wife, and that the adultery actually took place under the husband's roof, the interests of public morality and the interests of the children by the marriage require that the Court should refuse to give a decree to the wife for dissolution of marriage: *Stuart v. R. C. Bonnerjee and Sikhar Basu—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—In this case the petitioner Olive Kathleen Smith prays for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of the cruelty and adultery of her husband, Henry Percival Smith. The parties were married on 15th May 1918, at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Calcutta, and at that time the petitioner was a girl of about 18 years of age and the respondent was 23 years or thereabouts. The parties are of British Indian domicile and they both profess the Christian religion and accordingly this suit is brought under the Divorce Act of 1869. The petitioner makes a general allegation of cruelty against her husband, but in particular relies upon three specific instances which are set forth in para. 10 of the petition. In that paragraph the petitioner states that some time in August 1920, at No. 21, Sooterkins Lane, the respondent struck her at a time when she was pregnant and threw her on the bed thereby causing injuries to her mouth. Secondly, towards the end of the year 1926, the respondent struck the petitioner at No. 5, Alimuddin Street of Calcutta. Lastly, there is an allegation that the respondent, at No. 11, Turner Street, between 15th and 28th March 1928, frequently attempted to have unnatural sexual intercourse with the petitioner. With regard to this latter charge, I do not think I need say any more than that it has recently been laid down that where a charge of that nature is alleged the Court ought, generally speaking, to require some corroboration of the petitioner's story because if she in any degree assents to what happened she becomes an accomplice to her husband in the matter. I accordingly disregard that charge altogether. I am however satisfied on the evidence of the petitioner and the witnesses who were called that the other two charges are established. I am also satisfied that the respondent did, in general, treat his wife in the way he should not have done, and that on various occasions he did use physical violence towards her.

With regard to the charge of adultery the petitioner's case is that after she had left her husband in March 1928, he brought to No. 11, Turner Street, where he was then living, a woman whom he had caused to be procured for him for the purpose of living with him as a substitute for his lawful wife, who at that time had left him. I have no doubt whatever that the evidence given by Mrs. Kiernan and her son John Kiernan is wholly accurate. I can see no reason whatever why John Kiernan should have done other than tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth in this matter. It is clear from his evidence that the respondent did have a woman, whose name was said to be Mary McCarthy, living with him at No. 11, Turner Street, for two or three months in the year 1928. I hold therefore as a fact that the respondent has been guilty of cruelty in the legal sense towards his wife and that he has committed adultery. It follows that had the matter rested there the petitioner would have been entitled to the relief which she seeks in this suit. But the petitioner has herself committed adultery and she has set forth in her petition some account of the circumstances in which the adultery was committed. She frankly admits in her petition that she has committed adultery with two persons: firstly with a man by the name of Pearson, and secondly, with Ambrose Lawrence Andree, with whom she has been living for the last two or three years and with whom she is still living.

The petitioner however asks the Court to exercise its discretion and to grant her a decree in spite of the fact that she herself has committed a matrimonial offence. The respondent by his answer denied the cruelty and adultery alleged against him, and further set up, as a plea in bar, the facts which I have just mentioned and contended that the petitioner is not entitled in any event to succeed in the suit by reason of her own adultery. Having regard to the findings of fact to which I have arrived it is necessary that I should decide whether or not this is a case in which the Court ought to exercise the discretion, which it undoubtedly possesses, and grant a decree to the petitioner in spite of her own adultery. At the outset it may be said in the petitioner's favour that she has made a very full and frank avowal to the Court. It is essential, as a matter of practice, in matrimonial cases that if a petitioner wishes the Court to exercise its discretion in his or her favour he or she should make a frank disclosure of all the circumstances of the case. In a recent case, in England, Stuart v. Stuart and Holden (1), Hill, J., said:

"It is the condition upon which the Court can properly exercise its discretionary power that there should be complete frankness on the part of those who are asking for its discretion."

In that case as there had not been a complete and frank disclosure the decree was refused. Here however as I have said, the petitioner has made a frank disclosure of the whole of the circumstances as regards her own conduct. I have to ask myself whether this is a case where in spite of the facts and circumstances which the petitioner has revealed I ought to give her the relief which she seeks. The principles upon which this kind of discretion ought to be exercised are discussed by Lord Merivale, President of the Divorce Court in England, in a case tried before him last year, Apted v. Apted and Bliss (2). In that case the learned President considered all the leading cases bearing upon this point and summarised the effect of those cases in the passage in his judgment which appears on p. 259 of the report where he says:

"Reviewing the cases in question as a whole these principles appear: in every exercise of discretion the interest of the community at large in maintaining the sanction of honest matrimony is a governing consideration; a strong affirmative case is necessary before a Judge is justified under the statutes in negating their conditional prohibition; it is manifestly contrary to law that a judicial discretion in favour of a litigant guilty of misconduct in the matters in question should be exercised where that course will probably encourage immorality; if it is not unlikely to do so that is an argument against leniency."

There is no doubt the more strict and early view of the principles on which discretion should be exercised has to some extent been departed from. Nowadays it is the duty of the Court to consider the whole of the circumstances bearing in mind the considerations referred to by the learned President. The Court has to take into consideration the position and interest of the parties themselves and of the children of the marriage, and possibly the conditions as regards the future of the children as well as the future of the guilty party. In the present case there were four children of the marriage, two sons and two daughters, all of them born between the years 1919 and 1923. The petitioner's case comes to this: that throughout her married life her husband did not treat her with proper consideration and kindness and that matters finally came to a head at the beginning of the year 1928, and that in consequence of her husband's attitude towards her she left him on the 3rd January of that year. She stayed away for something like three months, and then owing to her feelings towards her children and at the request of her husband she returned to him about the middle of March 1928. Thereupon the parties lived together for some two or three months. The petitioner says that prior to her leaving her husband at the beginning of January 1928 the position had become intolerable by reason of the fact that he was constantly nagging at her and abusing her because he had then recently discovered from certain letters of his wife which he extracted from an attache case belonging to Pearson—who was living in the house at the time—that she had had illicit relations with Pearson.

The petitioner's original story with regard to that was that she had not committed adultery with Pearson at that time. But it is quite clear, in my opinion, from the letters she herself had written to Pearson that she had had intercourse with him prior to the discovery of the letters by her husband, and in the witness box she ultimately admitted that such was, in fact, the case and that on divers occasions during the temporary absence of her husband from the house she had misconducted herself with Pearson. In order to make the position clear it is necessary to refer to the fact that during the year 1920 the parties were in poor circumstances financially. It appears that the husband after he left his employment with the Eastern Bengal Railway in the year 1919 had never at any time earned more than a very small salary. The petitioner had supplemented the family resources from time to time by getting employment as a shorthand-typist. Towards the end of 1927 the petitioner apparently by accident came into contact with this man Pearson who she has said had been her "sweetheart" when she was a girl of some 14 years of age. It seems that more or less upon her suggestion, though no doubt the respondent was perfectly willing to have the advantage of the extra income which it would entail, in or about the month of October 1927, Pearson took up his abode with the respondent and the petitioner. At that time they were living at No. 5, Alimuddin Street. The accommodation they had available was extremely limited. They had a small bed-room, some kind of a living room and a very small verandah. The petitioner has sworn there was only one bed available and that that bed was occupied by herself and her husband and this man Pearson as well as the one child of the petitioner and the respondent. The petitioner has said that there were occasions when, the husband being out late, she and Pearson retired to this communal bedroom, so to describe it, to share this bed and that they there committed adultery in the absence of the husband.

The respondent has denied that all these three persons occupied the same bed, but I accept the evidence of the petitioner upon this point. It seems to me that the story is so deplorable and the situation so revolting to anyone with any sense of the common decencies of life that one can only come to the conclusion that it is true, for I do not believe the petitioner is of such an utter depravity of mind that she would have invented a story of this kind. It is not surprising therefore that living in such conditions, which were apparently acquiesced in by the respondent, the petitioner committed adultery with this man Pearson. As I have said, the letters written by the petitioner to Pearson during his temporary absences from Calcutta disclose beyond all shadow of doubt that there was adulterous intercourse taking place between them. The petitioner further makes it plain in those letters that to all intents and purposes she was actually having sexual relations with her husband during the very period in which she was giving herself to Pearson. The position in fact was, not to mince matters, that the petitioner was carrying on adulterous intercourse actually in the marital bed. The whole of that part of the story reveals a state of things which, to say the least of it, is of a shocking description. I have no doubt at all but that the petitioner did leave the respondent on the 3rd January because he had abused her and possibly assaulted her, as a result of his discovery of her relations with Pearson.

Further, I have no doubt that the respondent made the petitioner write the note which was produced in the case, which seems to indicate that the petitioner left her husband's house of her own accord. No doubt the respondent more or less extorted it from his wife in order to protect himself from any proceedings on her part or proceedings on the part of possible creditors in respect of debts incurred by the wife. There is this to be said on behalf of the respondent that he did in fact shortly after his wife left him, take proceedings in the police Court charging the man Pearson with adultery with Mrs. Smith. Those proceedings were abandoned. The respondent's explanation of that is that his wife had expressed her willingness to return to him upon condition that he abandoned his proceedings against her lover. Whether that is so or not the proceedings were in fact abandoned, and as I have already mentioned, about the middle of March, Mrs. Smith returned to her husband and they resided together as husband and wife, at No. 11, Turner Street, until the end of that month. Now, it seems clear from the evidence not only of the petitioner herself but from that of Mrs. Kiernan and her son that during the time the parties were living at No. 11, Turner

Street, there were incessant quarrels between them and the respondent frequently assaulted the petitioner. She seems to have complained to Mrs. Kieran that the strain was intolerable and she told her that she proposed leaving her husband for that reason and she did, in fact, leave at the end of March. She then, according to the evidence of Mrs. Ogg, went back to reside in the house of that lady for some time, she having already lived in the same house during the time she was away or part of the time she was away from her husband in the months of January and February, previously. After a short interval Pearson came on the scene again; he had returned to Calcutta and thereupon the petitioner set up a joint menage with him and lived with him as his wife until he died on 8th August 1928. So after leaving her husband the petitioner resumed her previous relations with Pearson and continued them as long as he was alive.

So far as the events of the latter part of 1928 are concerned no doubt they were condoned by the respondent resuming conjugal relations with his wife in the subsequent March. Had the matter rested there, it would have been open to the petitioner to say that any matrimonial offences that she had committed had been obliterated by the fact that she had lived with the respondent as his wife at No. 11, Turner Street, but, as I have said, the petitioner apparently, as soon as she could, resumed her intercourse with Pearson. That action on her part was, of course, sufficient to remove the effect of the condonation and to revive the effect of the antecedent adultery, with Pearson.

After the death of Pearson the petitioner seems to have supported herself for a time until in the early part of 1929 or thereabouts she met, apparently at a dance, Ambrose Lawrence Andree. To his credit it may be said that he seems to have treated the petitioner with considerable kindness and during some months to have given his financial assistance without in terms asking for anything in return. But in the light of after-events one cannot help suspecting that all along Mr. Andree had it in mind to seduce the petitioner. At any rate, about the middle of 1929, the petitioner did consent to go and live with Mr.

Andree after the death of a sister of his who had been keeping house for him till that time, and from that time down to the present the petitioner and Andree have been living together as man and wife apparently quite openly.

The children of the marriage are, it appears, all of them being educated in good schools. It is said that the respondent is paying for the education of two boys, and the petitioner by means of money allowed to her by Andree is paying the necessary charges in respect of the two girls.

That is in brief an outline of the main facts and circumstances which I have to consider in deciding whether I ought to exercise a discretion in favour of the petitioner. There is however one other matter which has some importance in the case. The petitioner has said that she has delayed taking proceedings against her husband for two reasons: the first is that she herself had not the necessary means for the purpose, and secondly, she was anticipating and indeed hoping throughout that her husband would take proceedings against her. I am bound to say that in my opinion there seems to be no real reason why if the petitioner in fact felt herself to be the more aggrieved party she should not have instituted proceedings against her husband sooner than in fact she did.

As regards the position of the respondent it must be observed that there is no allegation against him on the part of his wife that he at any time was unfaithful to her in the sense of having sexual relations with other women until after she herself, be the reason good or bad, had in fact finally left him. On the other hand, I am faced with the fact that the wife undoubtedly committed adultery at a time when she was actually residing with her husband and living with him as his wife, and that the adultery actually took place under the husband's roof. It seems to me that if the wife as early as October or November 1927, had come to the conclusion that life with her husband was intolerable owing to his treatment of her, she should have left him at that time. It is obvious that she did not in fact leave him until after the discovery by the husband of her intrigue with Pearson. No doubt as a result of that discovery the respondent did make himself extremely unpleasant to his wife. This is not one of that class of case where a wife has been driven from her husband's house by reason of his conduct and then finds herself in a destitute or desperate position. So far as I can see, but for the Pearson episode, there would have been no reason or at any rate no sufficient reason, for the petitioner to have left respondent at the time when she did. It therefore comes to this: that if, as she says, the wife was driven from the house by the husband's conduct that was brought about by reason of her own conduct as regards Pearson. That view of the matter seems to be emphasised by the fact that she did join Pearson and cast in her lot with his at the earliest possible opportunity.

In my view the petitioner's position would have been materially different if she had left her husband's house as an innocent woman to whom conditions of life had become intolerable or who had been actually driven out by her husband's ill-treatment. If that had been the case and afterwards she had found herself in difficulties and had become desperate and then given herself to another man who was prepared to be kind to her and look after her and support her, there would have been much to be said in extenuation and excuse of her conduct. Reluctant as I am as a matter of general principle to refuse to dissolve a union that has become impossible, in all the circumstances of this case I think I should be going far beyond any of the authorities and I should be ignoring altogether the paramount consideration applicable to these cases, namely, the interests of public morality, were I to follow that general principle. Giving careful consideration to the position of the parties and after taking into account the interests of the children of the marriage I can only come to the conclusion that in this case it is my duty to refuse a decree to the petitioner. In my opinion she has by her conduct disentitled herself to claim relief at the hands of the Court.

This petition must accordingly be dismissed. The respondent has been ordered to pay a certain sum toward his wife's costs and that sum he must pay.

Civil Rule No. 168 of 1932, Decided on 13th May 1932, against order of Dist. Judge, Birbhum, (Suri), D/- 27th January 1932.

(a) Succession Act (1925), S. 192—Title of opposite party and right of claimant to possession must be determined.

It is well settled that in order to meet the requirements of S. 192 it is necessary for the Court to consider whether the objector to the grant of the application has any title, and whether the claimant is really entitled to the property: 6 I C 630 and 84 Cal 999, Ref.; 11 M I A 487, Expl. [P 18 C 1]

(b) Succession Act (1925), S. 192—Order made without jurisdiction or with jurisdiction illegally exercised should only be interfered with in revision—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115.

An order made by the District Judge under S. 192, Succession Act, cannot and should not be interfered with by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction, unless it could be made out that there was no jurisdiction in the Court or that such jurisdiction was illegally exercised. [P 18 C 2]

(c) Succession Act (1925), S. 194—S. 194 is not controlled by Civil P. C., O. 32, R. 6.

The substantive provisions of the law as contained in S. 194, Succession Act, cannot in any way be controlled by O. 32, R. 6, Civil P. C., relating to the receipt of property by a guardian under a decree or order in favour of a minor. The application of the provisions in the Code might in cases defeat the object of the statutory provisions as contained in S. 194, Succession Act. [P 19 C 1]

Judgment.—This Rule is directed against an order passed by the learned District Judge of Birbhum, on an application made by the petitioner Bhabatarini Debi under S. 192, Succession Act, 1925, in regard to certain moveable properties left by her mother Kiran Sasi Debi and claiming a right by succession to the same, as the heir. The petitioner's case was that she was the only heir of her mother and as such, was entitled to the possession of the properties left by her. The application under S. 192 was opposed by opposite party Profulla Kumar Mukerjee, who claimed the properties as belonging to his two deceased wives, the sisters of the petitioner, who had predeceased their mother Kiran Sasi Debi, as also to his children by the two wives. The facts of the case giving rise to the application to this Court on which this rule was issued, have been set out in very great detail in the elaborate judgment recorded by the learned District Judge, and have been placed before us with great lucidity and clearness by Mr. A.N. Chaudhuri, the learned counsel for the petitioner. On the facts of the case, it has to be determined whether there has been any illegal exercise of jurisdiction by the Court, as it is sought to be made out, in the matter of the order passed by the Court. It is well settled that in order to meet the requirements of S. 192 it was necessary for the Court to consider whether the objector to the grant of the application had any title and whether the claimant was really entitled to the property: see Phul Chand Lal v. Kismish Koer (1) and Sato Koer v. Gopal Sahu (2). The statutory provisions themselves bearing upon the subject, speak of a person "claiming a right by succession" (S. 192) of the party in possession having "no lawful title," and of a person "really entitled" (S. 193), of the summary determination of "the right to possession" (S. 194), and of "the death of the proprietor whose property is claimed by right of succession" S. 205.

In view of the position as indicated above there can be no doubt that the learned Judge in the Court below directed himself rightly in stating in his judgment that he was "to decide the right of possession" of the properties which were the subject-matter of the claim made by the petitioner before him and that the Court was required to decide as to who amongst the rival claimants had a preferential claim. The learned Judge has given a decision upon the materials before him, keeping in view the scope of the inquiry, which was of a summary nature, and has held that the claim made by Profulla Kumar Mukerji in respect of some items of the moveables in dispute, was a preferential one: that he had a preferential right to claim them, and has given direction that those items of moveables should go to the possession of Profulla Kumar Mukerji. The order as made by the District Judge is one which cannot, and should not be interfered with by this Court in its revisional jurisdiction, unless it could be made out that there was no jurisdiction in the Court or that such jurisdiction was illegally exercised. In the view we have expressed above there was jurisdiction in the Court and that jurisdiction has been rightly and properly exercised. The remedy still open to the petitioner is the one expressly provided by S. 208, Succession Act; and nothing contained in the judgment of the learned District Judge in the case before us, shall be an impediment to the petitioner to the establishment of her title, if any, under the law to the properties, the possession of which has been ordered to be delivered to Profulla Kumar Mukerji, by a regular suit.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the petitioner on the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Bhugwandeen Dohay v. Myna Bacc (3) that a Judge had, in a case of the present nature, no jurisdiction to determine questions of title, and could only deal with the right to possession. It is only necessary to state that the obvious meaning of the observation so made was that there could be no final decision so far as the question of title was concerned in a summary proceeding by the Judge, in which the scope of inquiry was restricted to the right of possession subject to a regular suit in which the question of title as between rival claimants was to be finally decided. The observations mentioned above can therefore lend no support to the case of the petitioner before us, as the learned District Judge has strictly complied with the provisions of the law and has decided nothing beyond right to possession, as between the claimants, to the moveable properties, in respect of which the application was made by the petitioner under S. 192, Succession Act. A point has been made before us that in view of the provisions contained in O. 32, R. 6, Civil P. C., the order for delivery of possession of moveables to Profulla Kumar Mukerji, without demanding any security from him was illegal. The special provisions of the Succession sion Act, 1925, under which the District Judge exercised jurisdiction in the case before us, contains no provision for demanding security from the person to whom property is ordered to be delivered under S. 194, and no question of demanding any security appears to have been raised before the District Judge, when the proceedings were pending before him. We are not prepared to hold that the substantive provisions of the law as contained in S. 194, Succession Act, could in any way be controlled by O. 32, R. 6, Civil P. C., relating to the receipt of property by a guardian under a decree or order in favour of a minor. In our opinion the application of the provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, might, in cases, defeat the object of the statutory provision as contained in S. 194, Succession Act.

Some minor matters of detail such as the delivery of keys, etc., were brought to our notice, during the course of argument of the case before us on behalf of the petitioner. It is not possible for us to deal with such matters; it will be open to the parties concerned to apply to the District Judge for necessary directions if any further direction is really necessary in the matter of delivery of possession of properties, in pursuance of his order. In the result, the order of the learned District Judge passed on 27th January 1932, is affirmed, and this rule is discharged with costs. The hearing fee in the rule is assessed at 3 gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down as early as possible.

Application in Original Civil Suit No. 2401 of 1930, Decided on 21st March 1932.

Calcutta High Court (Original Side) Rules, Ch. 36, R. 20—Cost on interlocutory applications should be taxed after final disposal of suit.

No doubt a person to whom costs of an interlocutory application or hearing have been awarded has a choice between proceeding with taxation and execution at once and leaving both taxation and execution until after the final determination of the suit. But ordinarily such costs are not to be taxed or executed before the final determination of the suit unless a special direction is given to that effect. Except in special cases, there ought to be only one taxation in a suit: A I R 1930 Cal 465 and Phillips v. Phillips, (1879) 5 Q B D 60, Rel on. [P 1902; P 2001]

*S. C. Ghose—*for Plaintiff.

S. B. Sinha for N. C. Chatterji—for Defendant.

Order.—This is an application on behalf of the plaintiff for an order that the execution of certain orders, dated 16th July and 10th September 1931, for costs be stayed until the disposal of the suit. These were interlocutory orders. Mistakes in procedure had been made by the plaintiff, and he was ordered to pay the costs of the applications necessitated by his mistakes.

I have no doubt that according to the English practice in the King's Bench Division, as inherited from the Common law Divisions, the practice has always prevailed of having no taxation of costs till the termination of the action. This practice did not apply in the Court of appeal. I have already dealt with the point in the case of Kedarnath Bhutra v. Johormull Bhutra (1). To the decisions cited in that judgment I would add the case of Phillips v. Phillips (2). In this case it was asserted by counsel that such was the practice in the Common Law Divisions, and this was not dissented from either by the other side or by the Court. In Ch. 36, Cl. 20 of our Rules it is provided that within three months from the date of the signing of the decree or order awarding costs, the party claiming shall leave in the Taxing Office an office copy of the decree or order and lodge a bill with the vouchers and signatures of counsel.

There is a proviso to the clause stating that where the costs of an interlocutory application or hearing have been awarded and have not been previously taxed or paid they may be included in the bill for the whole case. It is clear therefore that according to our practice a person to whom such costs have been awarded has a choice between proceeding with taxation and execution at once and leaving both taxation and execution until after the final determination of the suit. In my view, it is convenient that some settled rule of practice should be laid down, and I propose to adhere to the rule laid down by me in the case to which I have referred. Costs in a suit ought to be set off between the parties and in my opinion, it is wrong that either a plaintiff or a defendant, who may be a man of straw, should be paid costs upon interlocutory applications and should execute orders for costs forthwith made upon interlocutory applications, when it may be that the party will lose the suit in the end, and it will be found that he has nothing with which to meet the final order for costs which may be made against him.

(1) A I R 1930 Cal 465=126 I O 404=57 Cal 469.

(2) [1879] 5 Q B D 60.

I wish therefore to ask the office of this Court to note that when any interlocutory orders in suits are made by me they are not to be taxed or executed before the final determination of the suit unless a special direction is given to that effect. In my opinion, except in special cases, there ought to be only one taxation in a suit. This matter comes before me upon an application for an injunction, which is a matter of discretion and therefore apart from the question as to what is the correct rule, I have power to make the order and upon the facts of this case, I think it ought to be made.

Costs will be costs in the cause.

R.K. Order accordingly.

Civil Rule No. 140 of 1932, Decided on 10th May 1932, against order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hooghly, D/- 13th January 1931.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 148—Successor in office of Judge making decree can enlarge time for payment of costs to defendant if ends of justice are met.

Plaintiff's suit for partition and accounts was dismissed on the ground that it was not maintainable. On appeal the plaintiff in the suit was allowed to be amended on payment of ad valorem court-fees on the amended plaint within a time fixed by the appellate Court and the decree that was prepared ran thus: "It is ordered that the amendment be allowed as per order of judgment, on condition of paying the necessary court-fee, and on paying the defendant his costs of the original appellate Court, up to this stage, within two months after arrival of the record in the Court below. If the costs be not so paid or deposited, the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout." Plaintiffs failed to carry out the direction within the time and applied to the successor of the Judge who made the decree to extend time to carry out the direction. Extension of time was granted on two occasions without notice to defendants. It was contended that the order granting extension of time was without jurisdiction.

Held: that the direction contained in the decree as to the dismissal of the suit related only to non-payment or non-deposit of costs, within the time specified, and not to the payment of court-fees consequent upon the amendment of plaint, allowed by the appellate Court. The successor-in-office of the Judge who made the decree had therefore the jurisdiction to enlarge the time for payment of sufficient court-fees, and his orders were made in this behalf could not be challenged on the ground that they were without jurisdiction. The direction in the decree as to payment or deposit of costs, although inseparably connected with the other directions in the decree stood on a different footing, inasmuch as failure to comply with the direction within the time specified was to result in the dismissal of the suit. The order granting extension of time for payment or deposit of costs could not be said to be strictly in accordance with law, regard being had to the terms of the decree: A I R 1923 Cal 612, Dist.

Rupendra Coomar Mitter—for Petitioner.

Bijan K. Mukherjee—for Opposite Parties.

Guha, J.—The facts of the case giving rise to the application on which this Rule was granted may be briefly mentioned: The opposite party were the plaintiffs in a suit for partition and accounts, Suit No. 18 of 1928, brought in the first Court of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, against the petitioner as defendant. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court on 5th August 1930, on the ground that the plaintiffs were out of possession, and the suit as laid was not maintainable. On appeal by the plaintiffs Mr. R. R. Mukherjee, Additional District Judge, Howrah, allowed the plaintiff in the plaintiffs' suit to be amended, and directed payment of ad valorem court-fees on the amended plaint, within a period of time fixed by the learned Judge. The decree bearing date 28th August 1931, that was prepared and which was signed on 23rd September 1931, was in the following terms:

"It is ordered that the amendment be allowed as per order of judgment, on condition of paying the necessary court-fee, and on paying the defendants his costs of the original appellate Court, up to this stage, within two months after arrival of the record in the Court below. If the costs be not so paid or deposited, the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout."

The plaintiffs failed to carry out the direction of the appellate Court within the time mentioned in the decree, and applied to Mr. R. C. Sen, Additional District Judge, Howrah, the successor-in-office of Mr. Mukherjee, for extension of time, for enabling them to carry out the directions. Extension of time was granted by Mr. Sen on two occasions: once on 13th November and again on 21st November 1931. The orders granting extension of time to the plaintiff were made without notice to the defendant in the suit, the petitioner in this Rule, who applied to Mr. Sen to reconsider his orders, on the ground that Mr. Sen had no jurisdiction to vary the decree passed by Mr. Mukherjee, and extend time; and prayed for vacating the same. The learned Additional District Judge, Mr. Sen, on 13th January 1932, rejected the application, but observed that if he gave a wrong decision, he could not rectify the error; and if he was so inclined the petitioner could move this Court and get its decision on the point. The defendant has applied to this Court for setting aside the orders passed by Mr. Sen, Additional District Judge, on 13th and 21st November 1931, and 13th January 1932.

On behalf of the petitioner it has been argued that the decree passed by Mr. Mukherjee in appeal was a final decree, and no extension of time could be allowed for carrying out the directions contained in the same, unless it was by way of an order on an application for review of judgment made by Mr. Mukherjee. It has been contended before us that S. 148, Civil P. C., could not have any application where time was fixed by a decree, and reference was made to some decisions by the different High Courts in this country. The decision of this Court in the case of Khajeh Habibullah v. Asmotar Khatun (1) has been very strongly relied upon, in support of the arguments on behalf of the petitioner. That decision however does not touch the facts and circumstances of the case before us, regard being specially had to the terms of the decree which have been set out above. The direction contained in the decree as to the dismissal of the suit related only to nonpayment or non-deposit of costs, within the time specified, and not to the payment of court-fees consequent upon the amendment of plaint, allowed by the appellate Court. Mr. Sen, the successor-in-office of Mr.

Mukherjee had therefore the jurisdiction to enlarge the time for payment of sufficient court-fees, and his orders made in this behalf could not be challenged on the ground that they were without jurisdiction. The direction in the decree as to payment or deposit of costs, although inseparably connected with the other directions in the decree, stands on a different footing, inasmuch as failure to comply with the direction within the time specified, was to result in the dismissal of the suit.

The order granting extension of time for payment or deposit of costs could not be said to be strictly in accordance with law, regard being had to the terms of the decree; but we have no hesitation in holding that the order was one which met the ends of justice in the case, after the learned Judge considered it fit and proper to enlarge the time for payment of court-fees. If no discretion whatsoever was to be exercised in cases coming up to this Court in revision, we would have to interfere with the order enlarging time for payment or deposit of costs, although no case has been made out for our interference with the order extending the time for payment of court-fees. As it stands the order of the Judge is erroneous under the law, as it was not passed by the Judge who made the decree, but it is not one which should be interfered with in the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. The interference with the order would lead to the final dismissal of the suit, causing perhaps irreparable loss to the opposite party and as such amounting to a denial of justice to them. In the result the Rule is discharged; but in view of the conduct of the plaintiffs-opposite party in obtaining ex parte orders from Mr. Sen, without notice to the petitioner, the opposite party are to pay to the petitioner his costs in this Rule; the hearing-fee in the Rule is fixed at five gold mohurs.

Raja Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo — Respondent.

Appeal No. 129 of 1929, Decided on 20th May 1932.

(a) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 18—
Person making reference must adduce evidence showing his interest.

It is the duty of persons making a reference under S. 18 to the District Judge, to adduce proper evidence showing what their interest was on the date of the notification. [P 28 C 1]

(b) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 18—
Person claiming permanent interest as tenure holder under zamindar contending that zamindar is only entitled to compensation to extent of amount he agrees to grant abatement of rent—Burden of proof is on tenure holder.

Where, persons claiming a permanent interest as intermediate tenure holder under a zamindar in respect of certain land which has been compulsorily acquired under the Land Acquisition Act contend that the zamindar is only entitled to get compensation to the extent of the amount he has agreed to grant abatement in rent, it is for them to show that their interest is permanent, that the landlord has lost his prima facie right to enhance rent, and that the rent is mukarrari. [P 28 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 13 and 43—
Decrees, not inter partes, are not evidence save under Ss. 13 and 43.

Decrees not shown to be inter partes are not evidence in respect of proof of title in a proceeding under Land Acquisition Act, save under S. 18 and S. 43. They are mere evidence of transaction: A I R 1931 P C 89, Rel on.

(d) Landlord and Tenant—Tenure holder claiming particular interest—Burden of proof is on tenant. [P 28 C 2]

Prima facie the zamindar has the whole of the interest. It is for the tenure holders to show that what part of the interest the zamindar has diverted himself of in their favour.

Bankim Chandra Mukherjee, Jogeswar Mazumdar and Nirmal Chandra Das Gupta—for Appellants. [P 24 C 1]

Karunamoy Ghose—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal brought by certain persons who claim a permanent interest under the name of jagirdars under the respondent Raja Jyoti Prosad Singh Deo—the zamindar in respect of certain land which has been compulsorily acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. The purpose of the acquisition was for providing land for the offices of the Engineering and Telephone Staff of the East India Railway at Asansol and the date of the declaration is 4th August 1923. The amount of land that has been acquired appears to be 1861 acres. The land under acquisition has been divided into some eleven plots and in addition to the zamindar there are a number of persons claiming to be intermediate tenure holders of jagirdars as well as a number of persons who are tenants in occupation of the land. The present appeal is brought by some of these intermediate tenure holders. They originally asked for a reference both against the amount of the Collector's valuation of the land as well as against the principle adopted by the Collector in the apportionment of the compensation money as between the intermediate tenure holders and the zamindar. It appears that the Collector by his award so far as regards the amount awarded as compensation for the land divided that half and half between the proprietor and the intermediate tenants and this is the portion of the Collector's award which in the end was attacked.

The reference to the District Court was brought in 1924 and the case was not heard until January 1929. When it was heard, the only evidence adduced on behalf of the present appellants was first of all, the evidence of one witness a man whose name is Atal Roy. This witness says: "I am one of the mukarrari mourashi jagirdars under the Raja." He says that the whole of the mouza is included in the jagir, that the rent of the entire jagir is Rs. 376-4-0, that his tenants are all mukarrari tenants and so forth. Having said these various things, upon what basis and upon what knowledge it does not appear, he goes on to say that he has documents to prove all these facts but that he has left them at home. He does not know whether there is any sanad of the jagir. He says that there are 100 or 150 jagirdars. It further appears that certain documents, although they were not put in at first were afterwards put in, in support of the appellants' case. There is a decree dated 1886 in a previous acquisition case, a proceeding between the zamindar and some 51 persons all described as jagirdars of Mouza Asansol. That appears to have been in respect of the acquisition of 176 bighas under a notification of 1869 the fact being that the original reference had proceeded on appeal to the High Court and there had been a remand in 1883. The decision of the learned District Judge then was that as between the Raja and those jagirdars, the Raja was only entitled to get compensation to the extent of the amount the Raja had agreed to grant abatement in the rent; and in that judgment it appears that there is included an account in which it is said that there are 5,841 highas in the Mouza of Asansol and that the rent payable for the same is Rs. 406 at an average rate of such and such per bigha. In addition to that, there is a further proceeding of 1899 which raises no question of apportionment and which does not appear to throw any light upon the present question. There is also a judgment of the District Judge delivered in 1909 against the zamindar and certain persons not fully set out, calling themselves jagirdars; and in the course of that judgment the learned District Judge said that in a previous case he had decided that the zamindar was entitled only to such compensation as had been awarded by the Deputy Collector and that only if he agreed to a corresponding abatement of the rent.

The learned District Judge who heard this reference was of opinion that before him there was no proof at all of the interest of the persons coming before him to object to the apportionment. The duty of the present appellants in the District Court was to adduce proper evidence before the learned Judge showing what their interest was on the date of the notification. Having seen what their interest was both vis a vis their landlord and vis a vis their tenants, the learned District Judge would be in a position to say whether the apportionment which had been made by the award was a proper apportionment or not. The first thing that happened was that the only person who gave evidence at all as sorted by his evidence that his own tenants were tenants upon mukarrari terms. He stated the terms from which it appears that, so far from his having any ground of complaint against the amount that had been awarded to him, he had on any view of the valuation of this land been very much overpaid. His case was that for his share he got Rs. 400 from his tenants but paid Rs. 10 to the zamindar and that the area in his share was 80 highas. The learned District Judge points out that if that is so then, so far as he is concerned, his interest would appear to be much overvalued. The only answer that could be made to that was:

"if that be so, then my tenants have been compensated by much too small a sum and for that reason I will help myself out of the landlord's share to a sum of money which does not belong to him but which should have gone to my mukarrari tenants."

That was the first difficulty that the learned Judge was faced with and a very formidable difficulty it was. The question is not only as to this particular man but as to these appellants as a whole. The case with which the appellants came to Court was that they undertook to show that the zamindar had lost all his interest in this land except his right to the rent plus certain conceivable contingencies such as that the permanent tenancy might come to an end or that the zamindar might get some casual or occasional profit hardly capable of being put at a money value. Consequently, they said all that the zamindar has lost is his right to a certain amount of rent and everything else belongs to the tenure-holders. Upon that, it is very necessary for the appellants to show what their interest was. The mere fact that they call themselves jagirdars so far from showing that they have a permanent interest tends the other way. They had to show that their interest was permanent. They had to show that the landlord had parted with his prima facie right to enhance the rent, a right which on the valuation arrived at in this case was a right which would be of a substantial value. They had to show whether the rent was mukarrari. The only proof, apart from the remarks of the gentleman who left his documents at home, comes to nothing. There are the two decrees of 1909 and 1886 which are put in evidence. It may be that the 1886 decree can be seen to proceed on the assumption that the whole of the land of this mouza was covered by a single jagir and that that was on mukarrari terms. That was no proof whatever in my judgment, of the title of the appellants before the District Judge but was evidence of transaction just as in the case of Gobinda Narain Singha v. Sham Lal Singh (1), the Court regarded proceedings in a suit for partition as evidence of transaction. Just as in that case it was rejected as evidence to show that the estate was partible, so in the present case it appears to me that these decrees not being shown to be inter partes were not evidence save under

Ss. 13 and 43, Evidence Act.

It does not follow that because in the case of certain land the landlord suffered a judgment to the effect that his interest in the mouza was very small, he has for ever and for all purposes and as against other people to put up with all consequences of that judgment. These decrees are not, in my judgment, evidence that the jagirdars have permanent interest, still less that the rent is not enhancible; and, if they are evidence at all, they are not such evidence as the learned District Judge was obliged in the absence of other evidence to be satisfied with. In that position, we have to consider the circumstance which Mr. Ghose has brought very fairly to our notice and which might have some effect in the present case. These lands have been valued at a fairly high figure as being either bastu lands or waste land fit for bastu. There is nothing said in the Collector's award and there is nothing in the evidence whether or not there is any value in the underground rights. Nevertheless, it does seem to me on principle that the correct position in the case of tenure holders under the zamindar is this : prima facie the zamindar has the whole of the interest ; it is for the tenure holders to show what part of the interest the zamindar has diverted himself of in their favour. It does not seem to me that any of the appellants laid any proper evidence before the learned District Judge in support of his claim. In these circumstances, I am at a loss to know what the learned District Judge could have done save to dismiss the appeal. I think that this appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs : hearing fee five gold mohurs.

But it will not debar any subsequent suit by the tenant to establish that the tenure is a permanent tenure or rent-free tenure; and if he establishes that fact in a subsequent suit, he will be entitled to recover the balance of the landlord's transfer fee which has been paid under S. 26-J of the Act. Asita Ranjan Ghose—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This Rule has been issued upon the opposite party to show cause why the decision of the District Judge of Faridpur dismissing an appeal against the decision of an application under S. 26-J of the amended Bengal Tenancy Act directing payment of a certain amount under Cl. (2) of that section as the balance of landlord's transfer-fee should not be set aside on the ground that S. 26-J of the Act having not contemplated any application, the order of the learned Munsif was without jurisdiction and as such illegal. The learned advocate for the petitioner explains that this means that before coming under S. 26-J of the Act, the applicant must first of all establish by a regular suit the fact that his holding is an occupancy holding. The result of the adoption of this view would be that wherever a tenant wrongly describes his holding as a permanent tenure or a rent-free tenure in a deed of transfer, the landlord is forced to bring a suit in order to recover the transfer-fee which is justly due to him under the Bengal Tenancy Act. This view is, I think, quite untenable. For the purposes of S. 26-J, the landlord has only got to show in a summary proceeding that the holding is a raiyati holding in order to be able to recover the balance of the transfer-fee to which he is entitled under S. 26-C or S. 26-E. This of course will not debar any subsequent suit by the tenant to establish that the tenure is a permanent tenure or rent-free tenure; and if he establishes that fact in a subsequent suit, he will be entitled to recover the balance of the landlord's transfer-fee which has been paid under S. 26-J of the Act. The rule is accordingly discharged with costs, one gold mohur.

Secy. of State—Respondent.

Appeals Nos. 424 and 441 of 1928, Decided on 26th August 1931, against original decrees of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bakarganj, D/- 25th June 1928.

(a) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 23—Belting system—System depends on variety of facts—It cannot be applied where land is sold by bighas or acres.

So far as the system of belting is concerned it is a system which is widely used, but its value as a system depends much upon a variety of facts. If data are available showing the proportion at which the value of land diminished, accordingly as it is situated at a particular distance from a main road or thoroughfare, the system would be perfectly scientific. In the absence of any such data also, it may be assumed that in big cities where land sells by cottas or yards or feet there is such a proportion, as common experience shows. But in places and localities where lands are sold by bighas or acres, and there is no real evidence of such proportionate diminution in value, the system is based on no sound principle and must be regarded as a method not quite satisfactory. Of course there is almost always a distinction in value between front lands and back lands everywhere but that distinction would not obviously justify recourse to the belting system in each and every case. It is a highly artificial system and cannot be resorted to as a hard and fast rule. Nor again can there be any hard and fast rule that back land must be always of less value than front land or that the proportion should be as one to a half or that there must be a certain proportion at a certain distance from the road : Case law referred.

(b) Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 23—Income-tax return cannot be relied on in determining rental value of buildings.

Income-tax returns cannot be implicitly relied upon in determining the rental value of buildings acquired under the Land Acquisition Act when it appears that the claimant, before submitting his return, had become aware of the contemplated acquisition.

Judgment.—These two appeals have arisen out of an award made by the Land Acquisition Judge of Bakarganj. The land was acquired for a project known as "Additional land for the new Reserve Police line at Barisal." The lands are situate by the side of a road known as the Bagura Alekanda Road and lie within the municipal limits of the town of Barisal. The declaration was dated 18th November 1926. The claimants are the appellants. In the decree of the Court below will be found the different plots, their character, the award made in respect of them by the Land Acquisition Collector and the variation, if any, made by the Judge. There were four groups of claimants in respect of the land acquired, of whom only two are the appellants in two appeals. Group No. 1 are the appellants in Appeal No. 441 and Group No. 2 in Appeal No. 424. It will be convenient to deal with the appeals separately.

F. A. No. 424 of 1928

As regards L. A. Plots Nos. 13 and 16, which consist of a building and a tank, the Land Acquisition Collector proceeded on the basis of rental. He assessed the rent at Rs. 35 a month and deducted 10 per cent on account of collection charges, probable vacancies and costs of repairs. He proceeded on the same basis as regards L. A. Plot No. 5, which consists of a building and a half of a tank, took Rs. 80 as its rental and made a similar deduction. The Judge has upheld the Collector's award so far as these plots are concerned. The rest of the area, so far as the lands of these appellants are concerned, was divided into three belts according to their distances from the Bagura Alekanda Road. He valued the belts at the following rates per bigha : 1st belt Rs. 5,000, Rs. 4,800 and Rupees 4,700 ; 2nd belt Rs. 4,300 and Rs. 4,000 ; and 3rd belt Rs. 3,000. The different rates for lands in one and the same belt were assessed as the lands were of different qualities ; but we are only concerned with the rate of Rs. 5,000 for the 1st belt and Rs. 4,000 for the 2nd belt, which were awarded for the appellants' lands. He valued tanks, ditches and drains at $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the said rates. The Judge has upheld the system of belting but enhanced the rates as follows : 1st belt Rs. 6,000, 2nd belt Rs. 4,700, 3rd belt Rs. 3,500. He ordered that deep ditches and tanks should be valued at $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the said rates, but that superficial ditches should be valued at the full value of adjoining lands. (After considering the evidence, his Lordship proceeded). As regards the plots which have been valued on the basis of rental, we think nothing can be said on behalf of the appellants. Their values as determined by the Land Acquisition Collector and the Judge must remain as they are.

As regards the rest of the area, the main argument of the appellants is that it should be valued at an all round rate of Rs. 6,000 which the Judge has awarded for the first class lands of the first belt and that tanks should be valued at full rates for lands. Now so far as the system of belting is concerned it is a system which is widely used, but its value as a system depends much upon a variety of facts. If data are available showing the proportion at which the value of land diminished, accordingly as it is situated at a particular distance from a main road or thoroughfare, the system would be perfectly scientific. In the absence of any such data also, it may be assumed that in big cities where land sells by cottas or yards or feet there is such a proportion, as common experience shows. For instance, in land acquisition or improvement schemes in and near about Calcutta land is generally divided into blocks facing some particular street or road or lane and each block is divided into three belts, the first to a depth of 60 feet or so on the road frontage, the second to a depth of about 150 feet thereafter and the third consisting of all land behind, and the relative values of the three belts are fixed in the proportion of 100, 66·6 and 50. But in places and localities where lands are sold by bighas or acres, and there is no real evidence of such proportionate diminution in value, the system is based on no sound principle and must be regarded as a method not quite satisfactory. Of course there is almost always a distinction in value between front lands and back lands everywhere but that distinction would not obviously justify a recourse to the belting system in each and every case. It is a highly artificial system and cannot be resorted to as a hard and fast rule: see Secy. of State v. India General Steam Navigation and Railway Co. Ltd. (1), Roghunath Das v. Collector of Dacca (2), The Collector v. Ramchandra Harischandra, A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 44. Nor again can there be any hard and fast rule that back land must be always of less value than front land or that the proportion should be as one to a half or that there must be a certain proportion at a certain distance from the road: see Collector of Poona v. Kashinath Khasgiwala (3), In the matter of Government of Bombay (4), Ataul Huq v. Secy. of State (5) and Guru Das Kundu Chowdhury v. Secy. of State (6). In the case before us, no data are available except such as are contained in Ex. C; and if we rely on that document we think the proper conclusion to arrive at so far as the present lands are concerned is to leave the value of the lands of the first belt (i. e., L. A. Plots Nos. 14, 15 and 17) intact, and to value the lands of the second and third belts (i. e., L. A. Plots Nos. 9, 12, 6, 7 and 8) at an all round rate of Rs. 4,500 per bigha. As regards tanks we hold upon the evidence that they are very valuable in the locality and their utility is in no sense less than the lands, having regard to their position and size. L. A. Plots Nos. 10-B and 19-A should be valued at the rate of Rs. 4,500 per bigha and L. A. Plot No. 18 at Rs. 6,000 per bigha. It may be noted that the Commissioner in Ex. C did not value the tank at any different figure from the lands. The result is that the Judge's award should be enhanced as indicated above, and statutory allowance being added, the total amount of enhancement will carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date on which the Collector took possession, that is to say, from 30th January 1927. The appellants will be entitled to their costs on the amount of success in this appeal. Hearing-fee, five gold mohurs.

F. A. No. 441 of 1928.

In this case the lands concerned lie at the corner, being L. A. Plots Nos. 1, 2 and 3, on which there are buildings and a big tank with a pucca ghat. The Collector valued the premises on rental basis, taking the rental to be Rs. 75 a month and making the usual deduction of 10 per cent. The Judge has assessed the rental at Rs. 80. The buildings consist of a main building with 14 rooms: two of which are in the upper storey, an one-roomed structure standing apart and an out-house with two rooms. The claimant used to occupy the buildings and they were never on rent. In 1922, the claimant submitted an income-tax return stating the letting value as Rs. 1,000. In the return for 1926-27, he gave the letting value at Rs. 1,300. There is some indication that he had become aware of the contemplated acquisition and for that reason this return may not fit to be implicitly relied on. But comparing the adjoining premises for which the award has been on the basis of a rental of Rs. 35 and Rs. 80, as already stated above, it is difficult to resist the conclusion that the rental assessed is inadequate. The accommodation which these buildings provide and their site, compared with those of the other two premises for which those rentals have been assessed, would call certainly for a figure somewhere about Rs. 100. The learned Judge has observed :

"The house is however nicely situated and has a large number of rooms and out-houses. The rent of houses at Barisal has always been high and it is difficult to rent any good house in the town."

We think we shall be justified, on the materials before us, in assessing the rental at Rs. 100 per month. The award should be made on the basis of this enhanced rental with the usual deduction of 10 per cent, and with the addition of statutory allowance and interest as in the other appeal. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this appeal on the amount of his success. Hearing-fee, three gold mohurs.

Decided on 14th August 1931.

(a) Practice — Pleadings—Ordinarily, defendant is not allowed to set up counter-claim in answer to plaintiff's claim—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 128.

In the ordinary way, except in cases of one or two items in table of costs which may be allowed on taxation under the rules of the High Court, a defendant is not able to set up a counter claim in answer to the claim of the plaintiff.

(c) Mahomedan Law — Divorce—Talak by written instrument is valid, notwithstanding that it is not brought to notice of wife.

It is not necessary for the wife to be present when the talak is pronounced. A talak made by a written instrument, is valid notwithstanding that it is not brought to the notice of the wife; the only question which arises in such a case is with regard to the wife's maintenance during such period as may elapse until the fact of the execution of the talaknama comes actually to the knowledge of the wife: 36 Cal 184; 30 Bom 587 and A I R 1920 Bom 101, Foll.

(d) Mahomedan Law—Divorce—Marriage is purely civil contract—Terms of Kabinnama must be construed in same way as provisions in any other kind of contract.

Under Mahomedan law marriage is purely a civil contract and nothing more. The terms of a kabinnama must be looked at and construed in the same way as the provisions in any other kind of contract.

Although it is competent for the relation of a Mahomedan girl at the time of her marriage or for the Mahomedan woman herself to take measures for her protection in the event of ill-treatment or even divorce on the part of the husband, yet when the conditions mentioned in a kabinnama amount to very little more than a declaration on the part of the husband of such obligations as would naturally fall on him in any event as the result of the marriage, the conditions so mentioned are not sufficient to bring the matter within the scope of the rule and do not entitle the wife to maintenance after she is divorced: A I R 1921 All 152, Rel. on.

S. Ghose and Arun Sen—for Plaintiff.

J. N. Mazumdar and Sudhish Ray—for Defendant.

Judgment.—In this suit the plaintiff, Ahmad Kasim Molla, seeks a declaration that he has validly divorced his wife, Khatun Bibi. He also asks for an injunction restraining her from taking out the sum of Rs. 232-14-0 deposited by him in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta.

The plaintiff's case is that he married the defendant on 25th August 1929, at No. 63/1, Sovaram Basuk Street, Calcutta, according to the provisions of the Sunni School of Mahomedan law. He then says that on 20th September 1929 he divorced his wife at No. 17, Zakaria Street, in accordance with Mahomedan law and that he duly intimated to the defendant that such divorce had been pronounced by him.

The defendant, on 20th March 1930, obtained from the Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, an order for payment to her of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 50 per month. It was as a result of execution proceedings under that order that the sum of Rs. 232-14, which I have already mentioned, was paid by the plaintiff into the Court of the Presidency Magistrate. That sum represented maintenance for the defendant up to the month of May 1930.

The answer made by the defendant, as contained in her written statement, is to the effect that she admits the marriage, as averred by the plaintiff, but denies that the plaintiff validly divorced her; alternatively she says that if she was divorced she had no knowledge of it. The defendant further sets up the defence that it was not competent to the plaintiff to divorce her in the manner in which he purported to divorce her. The defendant then goes on to set up what she alleges to be the effect of certain conditions contained in the marriage contract, namely, the kabinnama and says that, under those conditions, in any event, she is entitled to be maintained by the plaintiff for the duration of her life. She relies mainly upon a clause which seems to show that, if the plaintiff made any breach of the conditions contained in the marriage contract, the defendant would be justified in living separately from the plaintiff and that, thereupon, the plaintiff would be under the obligation of making suitable provision for her residence and maintenance and also for the maintenance of her grandmother. The defendant then alleges that the plaintiff, without any lawful excuse, assaulted her and wrongfully drove her and her grandmother from the premises No. 63/1, Sovaram Basak Street about a month and eight days after the marriage, and she sets up that she has obtained an order for maintenance from the Presidency Magistrate, that is to say, the order to which I have already referred. The last paragraph of her written statement contains what is, to all intents and purposes, a counter-claim, in which she submits that should the Court hold that she was validly divorced then the plaintiff should be directed to make suitable provision for the maintenance and residence of herself and her grandmother.

It was objected by Mr. Ghose on behalf of the plaintiff that, in any event, it was not competent to the defendant to ask for any order in her favour owing to the fact that the Civil Procedure Code contains no provision for the making of a counter-claim. Mr. Ghose however had to admit, after I had drawn his attention to S. 128, Civil P. C., that that contention on his part was not correct. The real position with regard to counter-claims is that, so far, this Court has not thought fit to exercise the powers conferred upon it and other High Courts of India, under S. 128 of making proper rules for the setting up of counter-claims in suits, though there are one or two items in the table of costs which may be allowed on taxation under the rules of this Court, which seems to indicate that, at some time or other, the making of such rules was contemplated. However the position undoubtedly is that, in the ordinary way, a defendant is not able to set up a counter-claim in answer to the claim of the plaintiff. The one or two items in the table of costs, to which I have referred, provide that an additional court-fee shall be paid in respect of written statements which do in fact contain counter-claims. Mr. Ghose, on behalf of the plaintiff, drew my attention to the fact that in this particular case the additional fee specified in the table had not been paid by the defendant. Mr. Ghose argued further that that difficulty could not be overcome by the payment on the part of the defendant of the necessary additional fee at a late stage of the proceedings. Mr. Ghose however has overlooked S. 149, Civil P. C. which provides:

"Where the whole of or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to court-fees have not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such court-fee; and, upon such payment, the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance."

Under the powers conferred by that section, I thought it right to allow the defendant to put herself in order as regards the payment of the fee by paying the additional court-fee during the progress of the suit and, so far as that matter is concerned, Mr. Ghose's objection is without substance. The position of the defendant is this. She says that, if the plaintiff had validly divorced her, then she ought to be entitled to rely upon the conditions in the kabinnama and obtain from the Court an order that such sum by way of maintenance, as the Court should think fit, should be paid to her during the rest of her life. Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff is asking for relief of a kind which falls within the equity jurisdiction of this Court, in my opinion, despite the apparent technical difficulties arising on the question whether a counter-claim is strictly admissible or not, in a case of this description, if the terms of the contract between the parties so warranted, it would only be just and equitable that the defendant should receive, at the hands of the Court, proper compensation for the plight into which the action of the plaintiff had put her. I have however to ask myself in the first place whether the defendant was validly divorced and if so whether, under the terms of the marriage contract between the parties, the defendant is entitled to receive anything more than that which a divorced Mahomedan wife is entitled to receive under the general provisions of the Mahomedan law. (His Lordship then briefly stating the circumstances under which the plaintiff married the defendant proceeded as follows): It is necessary, I think, that I should first of all briefly recapitulate the facts of this particular case. I have already said that the first point, which I have to determine, is whether or not the plaintiff validly divorced his wife. Mr. Mazumdar, on behalf of the defendant, argued with his usual ability that there was no valid divorce for two reasons.

In the first place, says Mr. Mazumdar, it is not competent under the Mahomedan law for a talak to be given without just cause assigned. It has never been suggested on behalf of the plaintiff—indeed it was not part of his case—that he had really any proper or reasonable grounds for getting rid of his wife and the matter must be discussed upon the footing that there was in fact no justification for divorce and that what the plaintiff did was done entirely capriciously and arbitrarily. The question therefore is whether, in the circumstances, the talak given in this case is valid. Upon that point, there are a number of authorities and I have carefully considered this point as dealt with in the very early authorities to see whether I am in agreement with the more recent decisions of the Courts. I regret that I have to come to the conclusion that, as the law stands at present, any Mahomedan may divorce his wife at his mere whim and caprice. I find that there are passages in one ancient authority, quoted by Mr. Ameer Ali in his treatise on Mahomedan Law, Vol. 2, 5th Edn., p. 472, which run as follows:

The Prophet pronounced talak to be a most detestable thing before the Almighty God of all permitted things. If talak is given without any reason it is stupidity and ingratitude to God.

On the next page Mr. Ameer Ali puts the matter thus:

The author of the Multeka (Ibrahim Halebi) is more concise. He says "the law gives to the man primarily the power of dissolving the marriage, if the wife, by her indocility or her bad character, renders the married life unhappy; but in the absence of serious reasons, no Musalman can justify a divorce either in the eyes of the religion or the law. If he abandon his wife or put her away from simple caprice, he draws upon himself the divine anger, for 'the curse of God,' said the Prophet, 'rests on him who repudiates his wife capriciously'."

Mr. Macnaughten in his well-known book says that there is no occasion for any particular cause for divorce, and mere whim is sufficient. Then he goes on to point out that

"where conscientious and honourable feelings are insufficient to restrain a man from putting away his wife without cause the temporal impediments are by no means trifling. Dower is demandable upon divorce and with a view to the prevention of such a contingency, it is usual to stipulate for a larger sum than can ever be in the power of the husband to pay."

No doubt, in normal cases of Mahomedan marriages, those who are acting on behalf of the bride are careful to see that she is properly protected against capriciousness on the part of the husband in giving talak by adequate provision for the payment of a large sum by way of dower, that is to say, care is taken to ensure that what Mr. Macnaughten calls "the temporal impediments" shall be a real obstacle in the way of a husband acting arbitrarily or unfairly. In the present instance however so far as the provision for dower is concerned, it cannot be said that it is "by no means trifling;" on the contrary, the amount stipulated for, namely, Rs. 201 was extremely trivial. Upon this question of whether talak can be given without any just cause or without assigning any reason the matter can be summed up in the words, used by Batchelor, J., in the case of Sarabai v. Rabinbai (1), with reference to an analogous question, where he said "it is good in law, though bad in theology." I need only make reference to one or two decisions of the Courts on this point. In Asha Bibi v. Kadir Ibrahim Rowther (2), at p. 25 the Court consisting of Munro and Abdur Rahim, JJ., said:

"The right to domestic authority is conceded to the husband rather than to the wife in consideration as hinted above of the pecuniary burden imposed upon the husband and also because of the presumed superiority of the male sex in judgment and discretion. For the same reasons the husband is recognized as having an absolute right to put an end to the marriage by his private act. No doubt an arbitrary or unreasonable exercise of the right to dissolve the marriage is strongly condemned in the Koran and in the reported sayings of the Prophet (Hadith) and is treated as a spiritual offence. But the impropriety of the husband's conduct would in no way affect the legal validity of a divorce duly effected by the husband."

Then there is a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ma Mi v. Kallander Ammal (3), where Sir John Wallace, in his judgment says:

"According to that law" (that is the Mahomedan law), "a husband can effect a divorce whenever he desires."

It is therefore abundantly clear on all the authorities that as tersely stated in Sir Dinshaw Mulla's well-known book: "any Mahomedan of sane mind who has attained puberty can divorce his wife without assigning any cause."

The reference given by Sir Dinshaw Mulla in support of this proposition are Macnaghten, p. 59, Hedaya p. 75 and Baillie, pp. 208 and 209.

The second point taken by Mr. Mazumdar, on behalf of the defendant, was that, in the present case the talak was not brought to the notice of the defendant. As regards the facts, what happened was: that on 20th September 1929, the plaintiff in the presence of certain relatives had a document written out which was signed by some of those present as witnesses. It appears that the plaintiff pronounced the word "talak" three times in the presence of some five persons, some of whom gave evidence before me. I need not go further into detail, as I am satisfied that he did execute the document he had written out and that it was signed as it purported to be signed. An English translation of the document reads as follows:

"Ahmad Kasim Molla, son of Kasim Ahmad Molla, deceased, resident of Baryao, at present residing at No. 17 Zakaria Street, Calcutta. This day, the 20th September year 1929 (Eng.), I divorce without any anger, Khatun Bibi, daughter of Ismail Saheb, deceased, who has been my wife up till now. Divorce, divorce, divorce."

Then follows the signature of Ahmad Kasim Molla and that of five witnesses. It appears that after the document was executed, it was sent by registered post in an envelope addressed as follows:

"Khatun Bibi, daughter of Ismail Saheb, 63A, Sovaram Basak Lane, Off Sagur Datta Lane, Calcutta."

Then in the right hand bottom corner was put these words:

"From A. C. Molla, 17, Zakaria Street, Calcutta."

Evidence was given on behalf of the plaintiff that the letter came back endorsed by the postal authorities with the word "refused," and "I was asked to infer that the letter had duly reached the defendant or some one acting for her (either her grandmother or her uncle) and that the recipient, suspecting the nature of the contents, had declined to accept the letter and had handed it back to the postman. On the other hand on behalf of the defendant it was suggested that the defendant might never have been found by the postman at all and that the letter never came into her hands. I think I am bound to draw the reasonable inference, from the fact that the envelope is endorsed in the way I have described that the letter did reach the defendant or some one acting on her behalf, who had knowledge of the circumstances. The defendant herself gave evidence that just prior to 20th September, the plaintiff had indicated to her that he proposed to have nothing more to do with her. Therefore I think it not unnatural to surmise that when she saw an envelope "franked" as it were with the name of the plaintiff that she may have suspected that it contained some communication to her disadvantage, if not actually a communication divorcing her. However there is no evidence that in fact the defendant at that time was aware of the nature of the document contained in the envelope sent to her by the plaintiff or by his cousin Golam Hossain Molla on his behalf. If it could be shown that the defendant was aware of the nature of the document which was being sent to her, the matter would fall within the ambit of the decision in the case to which I have already referred in another connexion: Sarabai v. Rabiabai (1).

In that case a Mahomedan belonging to the Hanafi Sunni sect, took with him two witnesses and went to the kazi and there pronounced the divorce of his wife the plaintiff in the suit, in her absence. He had a talaknama written out by the kazi, which was signed by him and attested by the witnesses. He then took steps to communicate the fact of the divorce and to make payment of iddat money to the plaintiff, but she evaded both. In answer to the contention that the divorce was not final, as it was never communicated to the plaintiff, it was held that a haintalak, such as the one in that case, which was reduced to manifest and customary writing, took effect immediately on the mere writing. The divorce being absolute, it was effective as soon as the words were written, even without the wife receiving the writing. There is also the decision of this Court in Ful Chand v. Nazab Ali Chowdhry (4), where it was held that under the Mahomedan law, absence of the wife does not make the pronouncement of talak void and inefficacious. The judgment of the Court was given by Stephen, J. He said:

"The first question, which we have to decide is whether the absence of the wife makes the pronouncement of the talak void and inefficacious. In our opinion it does not. The point is dealt with in the book of Mr. Ameer Ali in S. 3, Ch. 12, where he says: 'It is not necessary for the husband himself to pronounce talak in the presence of the wife, but it is necessary that it should come to her knowledge.' The matter is also dealt with in Wilson's Digest at p. 164, but not so decisively. It also seems to be the opinion expressed in Nawab Abdur Rahman's Institutes of Mussalman Law. The matter has twice, as far as we are aware, been dealt with by the Courts; in the first place, in the case of Kursum Hossein v. Janu Bibi (5) and, secondly in the case of Sarabai v. Rabiabai (1). In the second of these cases a distinct opinion is expressed that it is not necessary for the wife to be present, when the talak is pronounced although this is an obiter inasmuch as that case dealt with a written instrument of divorce. In the previous Calcutta case, the matter is also dealt with and the point itself is not directly noticed, but talak was there pronounced in the absence of the wife, and it is significant that the case is not decided on that point, which it would have been, if it had been fatal to the effect of the divorce. We therefore hold that it is not necessary for the wife to be present when the talak is pronounced. It is necessary certainly for the purpose of dower that the fact of the pronouncement of talak should come to her notice."

With these observations I entirely agree. Finally, there is a case on this point decided by the Bombay High Court: In re Rajasaheb Rasulsahab (6). In that case, the facts were that a Mahomedan executed a talaknama in the presence of witnesses and caused it to be duly registered under the Indian Registration Act, 1908. Neither the kazi nor the wife was at present at the time the deed was executed. The making of the deed was not immediately communicated to the wife, but it came to her knowledge within a reasonable time. It was held that the talaknama was valid. Now, in this present case, whether or not the defendant by declining to take in the registered letter, as is suggested on behalf of the plaintiff, sought to evade notice that a talaknama had been executed by the plaintiff, really makes no difference, because it is part of the case of the defendant herself that she took proceedings before the Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, as a result of which she obtained an order for maintenance on 31st March 1930. It seems to be clear that, in the course of those proceedings, the present plaintiff raised, by way of defence, the fact that he had already given a talaknama; so that, at any rate, by 31st March 1930, the defendant was fully aware of the fact that her husband had executed a talaknama on 20th September 1929. The facts of the case to which I have just referred, In re Rajasaheb Rasulsahab (6), were in some respects analogous to the facts of the present case because there also the wife, Khatijabai, had obtained an order from the Magistrate directing her husband to pay her a sum of Rs. 10 per month as maintenance for herself and her child under the provision of S. 488, Criminal P. C. Three weeks after the making of the order, the husband executed a talaknama divorcing Khatijabai.

As I have already said, the deed was duly executed in the presence of witnesses

(4) [1909] 30 Cal 184 = 1 I C 740,

and registered under the Registration Act, but at the time of the execution neither the kazi nor the wife was present and it was not brought to the knowledge of the wife immediately. A few months after the wife had obtained the maintenance order the husband applied to the Magistrate for cancellation of the order for maintenance on the ground that he had already divorced his wife and that he was no longer bound to maintain her. It was held that not only was the talaknama valid, but that it put an end to any right on the part of the wife to receive maintenance in respect of herself although, on the facts of that particular case, the order of the Magistrate was not disturbed, because the Court was of opinion that the amount ordered to be paid was no more than sufficient for the maintenance of the child of the marriage. It seems to be clear therefore that not only can a Mahomedan divorce his wife without assigning any reasons, but also that a talak is valid, where it is made by a written instrument, notwithstanding that it is not brought to the knowledge of the wife; and the only question which can arise is with regard to the wife's maintenance during such period as may elapse until the fact of the execution of the talaknama actually comes to the knowledge of the wife. The matter is dealt with in the case of Asha Bibi v. Kadi Ibrahim Rowther (2) where it is held that it is not necessary that the talak or words of repudiation should be addressed directly to the wife to constitute a valid divorce, but

"the words should refer to the wife though if they be not communicated to her at the time a question may possibly arise as to whether she is not entitled until she comes to know of the divorce to bind her husband by certain acts such as pledging his credit for obtaining the means of subsistence."

With regard to maintenance proceedings, such as there were in the present case, the husband can, at any time during such proceedings, defeat any attempt on the part of the wife to obtain an order for maintenance by the giving of a talak and further, if any such maintenance order has in fact been made, it ceases to be effective as soon as a talak is validly given. In that connexion, I would refer only to one authority Sha Abu Ilyas v. Ulfat Bibi (7), in which it was held that

"where in answer to an application for enforcement of an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., for the maintenance of a wife, the party against whom such order is pending pleads that he has lawfully divorced his wife and therefore the order can no longer be enforced, it is the duty of the Court hearing the application to entertain and consider such plea, and, if it find the plea established, to decline to enforce the order for any period subsequent to the date when the marriage ceased to subsist between the parties. In such cases, where the parties are Mahomedans, the marriage will be deemed to subsist until the expiration of the iddat."

In view of that authority, I am not at all sure that it was not the duty of the learned Presidency Magistrate to have considered the question whether a talak had been given as soon as it was brought to his attention before the order of 21st March 1930, already referred to was made. I am bound to say that, in my opinion, it does seem harsh that, at any time, a Mahomedan husband can, of his own power, put an end to any proceedings his wife may take under S. 488, Criminal P. C., and it may be that some day this matter will have to be seriously considered by the members of the Mahomedan community and the legislature with a view to determining whether such arbitrary power in the hands of the husband is not now an anachronism inconsistent with present day ideas and incompatible with modern conditions. I have however only to concern myself with the existing law and for the reasons which I have given, I hold that in the present instance there was a valid divorce by means of the talaknama executed by the plaintiff on 20th September 1929. As it has not been established by the plaintiff that the existence of the talaknama came to the knowledge of the defendant prior to the proceedings before the Presidency Magistrate, it cannot be disputed that she is entitled to maintenance up to that time. In regard to that however no question arises, because I understand that maintenance was in fact paid for that period.

I now come to what is the more serious and indeed more difficult aspect of this particular case, namely, whether, in the peculiar circumstances of the marriage between these parties, the wife is entitled to receive anything more than she would ordinarily be entitled to upon divorce. The law is that normally upon a husband giving talak the wife becomes entitled to payment of such dower as has been provided for in the marriage contract. If the "prompt" dower has already been paid, she is entitled forthwith to receive the "deferred" dower. If, on the other hand, no part of the dower has already been paid she becomes entitled to payment of the whole of the dower stipulated for in the kabinnama. The wife is also entitled to maintenance during the period of iddat. There again in this case no question arises as to maintenance during iddat, because, as I have already said, maintenance has already been paid up till 21st July 1930. As regards the dower, the amount provided in the kabinnama was a sum of Rs. 201. That, as I have already said, was such a trifling sum, that it provided no impediment, nor did it act as a deterrent in any way to the husband, who having got all he wanted from his wife after a month's cohabitation, cast her aside.

I have no doubt however that the persons, who were acting on behalf of this little girl, the defendant, did intend, as far as they could, to ensure that the plaintiff should treat her kindly and properly and should maintain not only her but the grandmother, under whose care she had been before the marriage, and, accordingly, for the purpose of putting a check upon the "bridegroom," as he is described in the kabinnama, certain special conditions were inserted in that document, which constitutes the marriage contract between the parties. In discussing this matter, it must be borne in mind that, under Mahomedan law, marriage is purely a civil contract and nothing more. Therefore the terms of the kabinnama must be looked at and construed in the same way as the provisions in any other kind of contract.

I thought it right that I should have before me the naib kazi, that is to say, the assistant marriage registrar before whom the marriage contract was entered into. In answer to a question by me, he said that he was a moulti as well as being an assistant marriage registrar. In both those capacities, he may be taken to be an expert witness as regards the necessary ceremonial to be observed on the occasion of a Mahomedan marriage. In the course of his evidence, he gave a very full and complete account of exactly how this particular marriage was effected and the manner in which the special conditions were inserted in the kabinnama. The defendant's maternal uncle, the man to whom I have already referred, acted as what is technically called the "vakil" of the intended bride; that is to say, he was acting as the bride's agent for the purpose of the wedding ceremony, and the making of the contract between the parties. It appears from the evidence of the naib kazi, Hafiz Nur Mahomed, that he satisfied himself that, first of all, the uncle, as the vakil of the bride, had duly ascertained that she was consenting to the conditions which were being put into the contract, and the naib kazi himself was satisfied that the bride's party, that is to say, the defendant's uncle as her vakil, and the two other witnesses acting on her behalf were fully aware of the exact terms which were being embodied by the naib kazi in the kabinnama. Hafiz Nur Muhomed said quite definitely that, in fact the language in which the special conditions were couched was written down by him in the document at the dictation of the parties. I cannot therefore but come to the conclusion that the defendant's agents were fully cognizant of the precise terms of the special conditions. I will repeat that, in my opinion, there is no doubt whatever that the girl's relatives did intend to protect her as far as they were able against any illtreatment or unkindness or even desertion on the part of the husband.

The girl's grandmother was fully aware of all the circumstances, and, as I have said earlier in this judgment, she knew, or ought to have known that the plaintiff had two wives already, and she must have realized that all the plaintiff wanted was an opportunity of having sexual relations with her granddaughter under the cloak of marriage. The fact that, under Moslem law, marriage is regarded merely as a civil contract and not a religious sacrament may perhaps make some difference to the moral aspect of the plaintiff's conduct, but one cannot be oblivious of the fact that the plaintiff was to all intents and purposes seducing the defendant under the pretext of entering into what would normally be a life-long union, and no words of reprobation are too strong in condemnation of the conduct of the plaintiff. It appears therefore that the girl's relatives had ample justification for supposing that the plaintiff was the kind of man against whom it was desirable and indeed necessary to protect the girl whom he was about to marry. Unfortunately however the real question is not what the girl's relatives had in mind, but what the terms of the contract actually are. It was argued very forcibly by Mr. Mazumdar that not only the intention in the minds of the girl's people but the language of the document itself must be taken to mean that the plaintiff was under a legal obligation to support the defendant and her grandmother for the duration of their natural lives. No doubt it is competent for the relations of a Mahomedan girl at the time of her marriage or for a Mahomedan woman herself to take measures for her protection in the event of illtreatment or even divorce on the part of the husband. That was made clear in an Allahabad case Muhammad Muinuddin v. Jamal Fatima (8). The headnote of that case runs as follows:

"An ante-nuptial agreement entered into between the prospective wife on the one side and the prospective husband and his father on the other (the parties being Mahomedans) with the object of securing the wife against illtreatment and of ensuring her a suitable amount of maintenance in case such treatment was meted out to her, was not void as being against public policy."

There the husband, a man named Mehdi Hasan, had married twice before, and on each occasion seems to have ill-treated his wife. The father of the prospective bride, in consequence, thought it right that something should be done to protect his daughter and to secure for her a maintenance allowance in case she and Hasan did not continue to live together. To that end an agreement was entered into between the parties which provided that, in case of disunion or dissension, the prospective husband and his father should be bound to pay to his divorced wife for the rest of her life an allowance of Rs. 15 a month in addition to the dower due to the wife and certain properties were hypothecated to ensure payment of that allowance. The husband did eventually divorce his wife and thereupon the question arose as to whether the husband was bound to pay the allowance of Rs. 15 a month.

Mr. Mazumdar has argued that the present case is covered by the facts and the decision in that case and that the special conditions contained in the kabinnama entered into on 25th August 1929, are wide enough to make it obligatory on the present plaintiff to pay to the defendant whom he has divorced a reasonable amount for the maintenance for herself and grandmother for the rest of their lives. I should mention that the defendant's maternal uncle, when he was in the witness-box seemed to be of opinion that he also, for some reason or other ought to share in the allowance paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. I cannot refrain from remarking that the maternal uncle did not impress me at all favourably. It seemed to me that he was much more concerned with his own comfort and convenience than for the well being and happiness of his unfortunate niece. I have no doubt however that at the time of the marriage, he thought that he was doing his best in the interests of the defendant but it equally appears to be the fact that no one on behalf of the defendant ever had in mind or contemplated the possibility of the plaintiff divorcing the defendant and so bringing about a situation such as now exists. That such an obvious method of cutting adrift from all his obligations (other than the payment of dower) might be resorted to by the husband should not have occurred to the minds of the uncle and grandmother is perhaps a little remarkable, but on the evidence, it must be taken that they never envisaged the position which would arise if the plaintiff took it into his head capriciously and without warning to exercise his right to divorce the girl whom he was then about to marry. I have to decide therefore whether the special conditions are wide enough to cover the circumstances which have now arisen. Mr. Ghose, on behalf of the plaintiff, very frankly and properly admitted that the plaintiff is bound by those conditions whatever they may mean and therefore the only question I have to determine in this connexion is what is the true meaning and extent of those conditions. The special conditions are contained in Col. 14 of the kabinnama. That document consists of the entries made by the assistant marriage registrar in the register of marriages which is maintained under Sec. 12, 15 and 22, Bengal Council Act 1 of 1876. The special conditions read as follows:

"I, the bridegroom, promise (or declare) that I shall not do the bride any hard-ship regarding maintenance and I shall not beat her or abuse her and I shall not do any acts which shall disgrace her or break her heart (cause her grief). I shall not be competent to take the aforesaid bride to any other place by force. I, the bridegroom, shall never separate the grandmother of the said bride who is the daughter of Syed Abdul Rahim, deceased, who has been responsible for (in charge of) the support and food and clothing of the said bride and who being the guardian of the said bride has now given her in marriage to me. I, the bridegroom, shall be responsible and in charge of her maintenance; also if I, the bridegroom, act against the defendant above-mentioned or if I commit any kind of mischief (wickedness) or show any carelessness (unconcern), then the aforesaid bride (putting up) wherever she pleases shall be competent to realize from me month by month according to my means her subsistence money and the rent of the house she dwells in and I, the bridegroom, shall not be competent to raise any objection."

Now the main difficulty in trying to arrive at a conclusion as to what precisely is the meaning and effect of these conditions is that, with small exceptions the stipulations amount to very little more than a declaration of the acceptance on the part of the husband of such obligations as would naturally fall upon him in any event as the result of marriage. The condition about not ill-treating the wife, disgracing her or causing her grief and later the provision with regard to her being at liberty to live separate from her husband should he ill-treat her and thereupon receiving maintenance from him, really amount to no more than a declaration of the normal rights of a wife as against her husband. The only extraordinary provision in these conditions is that which seeks to ensure that not only the wife, but also her grandmother should receive subsistence allowance and proper accommodation at the expense of the husband.

This it is that makes it fairly plain that this unfortunate little girl's relatives, who were in charge of her, were as much concerned with their own comfort as that of the girl. I cannot help thinking that these conditions were largely designed to ensure that the grandmother should obtain for herself what can only be described as a "consideration" (in the legal sense) for the "sale" by her of her granddaughter to this middle-aged and apparently lustful bridegroom. I regret that I feel bound to come to the conclusion, on the language employed in this contract, that the terms of the special conditions are not sufficiently explicit to bring the matter within the scope of the decision in Muhammad Muinuddin v. Jamal Fatima (8). If the conditions had expressly stated that the bridegroom should according to his means pay to his wife subsistence money and the rent of a house to dwell in for her life, or had contained any expression indicating the period for which this maintenance was to be paid, the case would have been different.

In my opinion, it would have been quite competent for those acting on behalf of the wife to have stipulated that, if there were a divorce, the husband should be under an obligation to continue to pay to the wife an adequate subsistence allowance, or if no sum had been mentioned, then a reasonable sum would have been payable during the lifetime of the wife or for any other specified period. But in this case, no period is specified. Nothing whatever is said about divorce. On the contrary, the parties are referred to as the "bride" and "bridegroom" in other words "husband" and "wife" and accordingly, I feel bound to hold that upon a strict construction of the conditions as they stand they can only be made to apply during the existence of the marriage. I come to that conclusion with the greatest possible reluctance and with a sense that this is one of those hard cases which are said to make bad law. I can however only administer the law as I find it and I must interpret this contract as I should have had to interpret any other contract between the parties irrespective of the effect which it may have upon either of them. This Court is not a Court of morals and I cannot concern myself with the religious or ethical aspect of the matter. I have to regard the matter from a strictly legal point of view.

Looking at these conditions and considering them solely as the terms of a civil contract entered into between the parties, I feel bound to hold that they are not sufficiently definite to put upon the plaintiff any obligation to pay maintenance to the defendant now that the marriage between the parties has been dissolved. I can only express the hope that irrespective of the legal aspect of the matter, the plaintiff will be brought to some sense of his moral responsibility and that he will realize that whatever the law may say he ought, in the circumstances, to provide for this little girl at any rate until such time as she may marry again. It follows from what I have said that here must be judgment for the plaintiff. The plaintiff will have the declaration which he seeks, but having regard to all the circumstances without costs.

COSTELLO, J.

Jagadish Narain Tewary—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 10 of 1932, Decided on 2nd March 1932.

(a) Calcutta Police Act (1866), S. 62-A (1)—Police Officer issuing order under S. 62-A (1) need not be armed with previous sanction of Commissioner of Police.

A police officer issuing order under S. 62-A (1) need not be armed with a previous sanction of the Commissioner of Police. What the words "subject to the orders of the Commissioner of Police" used in the section mean is that if the Commissioner of Police so chooses he may by his direction supersede or alter the order issued by the police officer. [P 37 C 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 109—Illegal omission has reference to intention of "aiding the doing of a thing."

The words "illegal omission" in connexion with the definition of abetment have reference to an intention of "aiding the doing of a thing." [P 38 C 1]

* * (c) Penal Code (1860), S. 109—Accused president of public meeting—"Volunteer" at meeting sounding bugle in spite of order not to do so given by police officer—Accused taking no steps to prevent him from sounding bugle though police order given within his hearing—He refusing to disclose name and address of bugler hence was charged with abetting—Accused elected president just before meeting having no previous knowledge that bugle was to be blown—Charge of abetting held not established.

The accused was the president of a public meeting held at Haliday Park. Amongst the audience there were certain "volunteers" one of whom from time to time sounded a bugle. A police officer requested the bugler not to sound the bugle, but he did not listen. The accused took no steps to stop the sounding of the bugle, though the direction was given by the police officer within his hearing. The accused refused to give the name and the address of the bugler and was therefore charged with abetting a man to commit an offence under S. 62-A (1) (e). The accused however was elected president just before the proceedings of the meeting began; and had no knowledge that in the course of the meeting a bugle was going to be blown in that way:

Held: that in such cases to prove abetment something more should be established than the mere fact that the chairman of the meeting took no steps to prevent an objectionable or unlawful action on the part of some person at the meeting. As no guilty knowledge or conspiracy was proved against the accused the charge of abetting was not substantiated: A I R 1932 Cal 549, Rel on. [P 38 C 1, 2]

* (d) Criminal Trial—In dealing with trials of criminal cases extraneous considerations are to be excluded.

In dealing with the trial of criminal cases the evidence given before the Magistrate must alone be considered and any further facts which might have been within the knowledge of the police and all other extraneous considerations must be excluded. [P 39 C 1]

Judgment.—In this case Jagadish Narain Tewary was convicted by one of the Honorary, Presidency Magistrates, Calcutta, on 2nd December 1931, under S. 109, I. P. C., read with S. 62-A, sub-S. (1), Cl. (e), Calcutta Police Act, 1866, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 75 or in default, to undergo seven days' simple imprisonment. S. 109, I. P. C., provides for punishment of abetment where an offence is committed in consequence of the act of abetment and no express provision is made by the Code for the punishment of such abetment. S. 62-A (1), Calcutta Police Act, 1866, reads as follows:

"The Commissioner of Police and, subject to the orders of the Commissioner of Police, every police officer of a rank not inferior to that of Sub-Inspector, may, with a view to securing the public safety or convenience, but not so as to contravene any rule made under the last foregoing section or the provisions of any license granted under any such rule, give all such directions, either orally or in writing, as he may consider necessary to . . ."

Then follows a catalogue of matters and then S. 62-A (1) (e) runs thus:

"Regulate and control music, the beating of drums, tomtoms and other instruments and the blowing or sounding of horns or other noisy instruments, in any street or any public place other than public buildings and the precincts thereof."

Jagadish Narain Tewary was in fact charged with abetting a man whose name is unknown to commit an offence under S. 62-A (1) (e) by the blowing of a bugle at a public meeting which was held at Haliday Park. It may be assumed for the purposes of the case that Haliday Park is a public place within the meaning of the section. It appears that on the 12th October last year there was a meeting at Haliday Park held at about half-past five in the evening and amongst the audience there were a number of persons described as "volunteers" one of whom from time to time sounded a bugle. Jagadish Narain Tewary was the President (or Chairman) of the meeting. It appears from the evidence that he was elected to that office just before the meeting began. There is no evidence to show that he had any knowledge beforehand that a bugle would be blown by anyone in the course of the meeting. A Police Inspector S. N. Mukherji requested the man sounding the bugle not to do so and in making that request he was apparently acting under the powers conferred on police officers under S. 62-A (1). It was proved in the course of the hearing before the learned Presidency Magistrate that both Inspector S. N. Mukherji and another Sub-Inspector made attempts to ascertain the name of the man who was blowing the bugle, but he refused to give his name or disclose his address. No doubt the police officers therefore might have taken the man into custody under the powers conferred on police officers under S. 57, Criminal P. C., but that they did not do so, apparently for the reason that the name and the identity of the President were known to them and they thought it better to proceed against him in the matter. Jagadish Narain Tewary was accordingly charged, as I have said, with abetment of the offence committed by the blower of the bugle.

The point urged before the learned Presidency Magistrate on his behalf was that merely because he was President of the meeting he could not rightly be held liable for acts done by a person forming part of the audience. The learned Presidency Magistrate in the course of the judgment which he gave says:

"In the present case, I am inclined to hold the view that since the bugle was sounded at intervals, and Inspector S. N. Mukherjee while acting under S. 62-A, sub-S. (1) of the Act, directed the volunteer, within the accused's hearing, not to sound the bugle, it was the clear duty of the President to stop further sounding of the bugle. As the President, he had the control over the proceedings, and the intermittent sounding of the bugle formed a part of the proceedings. By failing to discharge this duty, the President has clearly been guilty of an illegal omission as contemplated in S. 109, I. & C."

Upon that view of the matter the learned Presidency Magistrate came to the conclusion that the offence with which Jagadish Narayan Tewary was charged, had been properly substantiated. The rule was issued on a number of grounds and it has been cogently argued before me by Mr. Santosh Kumar Basu on behalf of the petitioner that, first of all, as the charge only had reference to an offence under S. 62-A (1), the prosecution had not succeeded in showing that the man who sounded the bugle had committed any offence whatever. It was contended that no evidence had been given to show that Inspector Mukherjee at the time when he orally asked the bugler to desist was properly armed with authority given by the Commissioner of Police—either under any general or particular order to deal with the matters mentioned in S. 62-A. So far as that point is concerned, I think there is no substance in it and the view expressed by the learned Honorary Presidency Magistrate in the explanation which he has given is correct. He says:

"The position is that for the purpose of S. 62-A (1), it is not necessary to act under any orders or to prove that the officer concerned was acting under any orders. The section says: The Commissioner of Police, and subject to the orders of the Commissioner of Police, every police officer of a rank, etc., may with a view to securing public safety or convenience, etc. What this section contemplates is that the Commissioner of Police may himself, if personally present, give certain directions; if he is not personally present, any of his subordinates not being one below the rank of a Sub-Inspector may give such directions. In the latter case, the section makes the order of such officer subject to the orders of the Commissioner of Police and not with the previous sanction—of the Commissioner of Police. The effect is that any subordinate police officer down to a Sub-Inspector may give the direction contemplated in this section and for this purpose he need not be previously authorized. If the Commissioner of Police so chooses he may by his direction supersede or alter the directions so given. If it was the intention of the Legislature to contemplate previous authority by the Commissioner of Police the words used would have been with the previous sanction of the Commissioner of Police, or words to the same effect."

In my view, that is the correct interpretation of the section. I have no doubt whatever that it was well within the powers and duties of Inspector Mukherjee to request that there should be a cessation of the blowing of the bugle.

The real point for determination in this case is whether or not it can be rightly said that the prosecution fully established that Jagadish Narain Tewary was "abetting" the person who was sounding the bugle. The learned Presidency Magistrate based his decision upon the fact that the accused, as the President of the meeting, did not take any steps to prevent the blowing of the bugle although he must have heard and undoubtedly did hear the order given by the Sub-Inspector with regard to it. The learned Presidency Magistrate seems to think that that was an "illegal omission" but one must bear in mind that the words "illegal omission" in connexion with the definition of abetment have reference to an intention of "aiding the doing of a thing" and it is a little difficult to understand how it can reasonably be said that failure to request the blower of the bugle to desist could amount to an intentional aiding of the blowing of the bugle after it had been prohibited by the Inspector. Further, I have very great doubt whether the mere fact that the Chairman of the meeting failed to request the person sounding the bugle, to desist could amount to an "illegal" omission at all. I think, to establish that position, it is necessary to show that there was a legal duty on the Chairman of the meeting to take action in the circumstances. S. 107, I. P. C., lays down three main ways in which persons can be said to abet the doing of a thing. They are as follows:

"A person abets the doing of a thing who (1) instigates any person to do that thing, or (2) engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing, or (3) intentionally aids by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing."

It is necessary to see whether in the present instance it can properly be said that the accused as the President of the meeting either instigated the sounding of the bugle or conspired with the person who blew it, to have it sounded. The learned Presidency Magistrate seems to have assumed that the accused as Chairman of the meeting must have known that a bugle was going to be blown at regular intervals. It was suggested that the accused as Chairman of the meeting must have known that the bugle would be sounded at regular intervals during the proceedings. But in the circumstances of this case it seems to me more than a little doubtful if that was so. At any rate it seems clear that the prosecution did not succeed in establishing that that was, in fact the case. As I have said the evidence goes to show that Jagadish Narain Tewary was only nominated as President of the meeting or invited to take the chair just as the meeting was about to begin. There was no evidence, in my opinion, that he had arranged that the bugle should be blown or that he, in fact, knew that a bugle would be blown at regular intervals. It may well be that some persons other than the gentleman who took the chair, arranged the details of the meeting, and that the Chairman himself knew no more of the programme of the proceedings than the names of the persons who would address the meeting. Having regard to the evidence in this case, I am of opinion that the learned Honorary Presidency Magistrate was not justified in drawing the inference which he did. Inspector Mukherji gave his evidence with scrupulous fairness and in no wise attempted to overstate the case. His evidence and that of the other police officer do not seem to me quite sufficient to establish that there was such guilty knowledge on the part of the Chairman so as to justify the suggestion that he had "conspired" in the legal sense with the person who blew the bugle.

I associate myself with the observations made by Panckridge, J., on a similar point in the case of Emperor v. Bepin Behari Ganguli (1). It is necessary that in a case of this description something more should be established than the mere fact that the Chairman of the meeting took no steps to prevent an objectionable and unlawful action on the part of some person or persons at the meeting. It is quite true that the present case is somewhat stronger against the accused than is the case tried before Panckridge J., because here there was evidence that the person blowing the bugle was a "volunteer" and, therefore presumably, some kind of official connected with the meeting and there was the further fact that the bugle was blown at regular intervals and apparently between each of the speeches for some definite purpose. But nevertheless, in the circumstances in which Jagadish Narain Towary came to be the Chairman of the meeting he may not have known that the blowing of a bugle was a part of the proceedings either because it did not appear on any agenda before him or because he had not been given directions about it at the time when he took the chair. I think the case for the prosecution, therefore falls short of the full proof of the offence with which Jagadish Narain Towary was charged.

In dealing with the matter, the evidence as given before the learned Honorary Presidency Magistrate must alone be considered and any further facts which might have been within the knowledge of the police and all other extraneous considerations excluded. Dealing with the matter solely upon the evidence I think that the accused was entitled to the benefit of the doubt and, therefore the conviction must be set aside. The Rule is made absolute and the fine if paid should be refunded.

Nurjahan Khatun and others—Decree-holders—Respondents.

Appeal No. 420 of 1931, Decided on 14th April 1932, against original order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Backergunj, D/- 10th October 1931.

* (a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 53 and 89—Judgment-debtor depositing money in Court to set aside mortgage sale—Attaching creditors of decree-holder purchaser by order of Court withdrawing part of deposited amount—Decree-holder not consenting—Decree-holder can challenge validity of deposit—Deposit is not decree and R. 53 does not apply—Sale should not be confirmed unless mortgagee decree-holder refunded amount withdrawn—Election—Evidence Act, S. 115.

Where a man has an election between several inconsistent courses of action, he will be confined to that which he first adopts; the election, if made with the knowledge of facts, is in itself binding. The election must be however a voluntary act, not forced upon him by circumstances over which he had no control and notwithstanding his protest. The receiving of an indirect benefit from a transaction, if without the party's own procurement, cannot have the effect of precluding him from denying the validity of the transaction : 37 I C 804, Dist.

Judgment-debtors deposited the decretal amount together with costs and applied for setting aside the sale held in execution of a mortgage decree and purchased by the mortgagee decree-holders. Portion of the deposited amount was attached by a creditor of the mortgagee decree-holder in execution of a rent decree. The Court ordered payment of the attached amount in full satisfaction of the decree against the mortgagee in spite of his protests. The trial Court set aside the sale; on appeal by the mortgagee decree-holder the deposit was held to be not good; the order was reversed and the case was remanded to consider what effect the fact that the decree of the attaching creditor was satisfied out of the amount deposited had on the position and rights of the parties. On remand the trial Court rejected the application of the judgment-debtor:

Held : that in resisting the application of the mortgagor judgment-debtor under O. 21, R. 89 the mortgagee decree-holder was not precluded by O. 21, R. 53 from challenging the validity of the deposit as what was attached was not a decree and as R. 53 applied only to attachment of decrees.

Held further : that the fact that the mortgagee decree-holder enjoyed the benefit of the deposit to a certain extent as the rent decree against him was dismissed as fully satisfied did not prevent him from challenging the validity of the deposit as the application of a part of the deposit to the satisfaction of the decree obtained against him was in spite of his protests and therefore involuntary.

Held also : that the sale should not be confirmed until the mortgagee decree-holder brought into Court the amount withdrawn by his creditor in satisfaction of his decree. [P 41 O 1, 2]

No retrospective operation can be given to the Act as it affects substantive rights and as S. 15 (e) expressly states that nothing in the Act will affect rights already acquired. The question of redemption on payment of the mortgage decretal amount before confirmation of sale is not merely a matter of procedure so as to allow the Court to give retrospective operation to the aforesaid Act : 22 Cal 767 (FB), Dist. Sarat Ch. Roy Choudhury and Mahendra Kumar Ghose—for Appellants.

Dwarkanath Chakrabarty and Srish Chandra Dutta—for Respondents.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Backergunj dated 10th October 1931 by which he refused to set aside the sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The questions of law which fall for determination in this appeal depend on facts which have not been seriously disputed before us and which may be briefly stated. It appears that the respondents Nurjahan Khatun and others obtained a mortgage decree against the appellants Asia Khatun and others for a sum of Rs. 10,830-10-6 sometimes in the year 1928 and in execution of the said decree purchased the properties which formed the subject of the mortgage on 19th February 1930. On 19th March 1930 judgment-debtors 2 to 7 made an application to have the sale in execution set aside under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., and they deposited the decretal money with compensation. On 24th March following notices were issued on the mortgagees decree-holders and judgment-debtor 1 to show cause why the sale should not be set aside. In the meantime on 25th March Narendra Nath Gupta and others who had obtained a rent decree against the mortgagees decree-holders, attached the sum of Rs. 3,410-10-0 out of the money deposited under O. 21, R. 89 by the mortgagors defendants 2 to 7, and on 26th May 1930 the Subordinate Judge after hearing the objections of the mortgagees decree-holders set aside the mortgage sale. On the next day the mortgagees decree-holders put in a petition before the Subordinate Judge asking the Court to stay the payment of Rs. 3,410-10-0 to Narendra Nath Gupta as they were intending to prefer an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge setting aside the sale to the High Court. They repeated this prayer for stay of payment in their application of 27th June 1930.

On 28th June 1930 the mortgagees decree-holders put in a further application in which they distinctly alleged that they did not admit that the amount deposited by the judgment-debtors under O. 21, R. 89 belonged to them and they prayed that in the circumstances till it was decided by the High Court that the said money belonged to them, the attaching creditors could in no sense be entitled to the money on the footing that the said money belonged to them and they asked for time to bring an order for stay from the High Court. The Subordinate Judge who was dealing with both the rent execution case and the application under O. 21, R. 89 directed that the sum of Rs. 3,410-10-0 be paid to the attaching creditors on their furnishing security and on 12th July 1930 the security was furnished and payment order was made in favour of the attaching creditors and the rent execution case against the mortgagees decree-holders in the present case was dismissed on full satisfaction. On 21st July 1930 the mortgagees decree-holders preferred an appeal to the High Court against the order of the Subordinate Judge setting aside the mortgage sale. The appeal was heard by the learned Sir George Rankin, C. J. and Pearson, J. Pearson, J., with whom the Chief Justice concurred allowed the appeal and made the following observations :

"In my judgment therefore this was not a good deposit under R. 89 which entitled the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside and prima facie, the order of the learned Judge cannot stand.

It appears however that on 25th March 1930, a few days after the deposit, an attachment in execution was made of the deposit moneys to the extent of Rs. 3,410-10-0 by creditors holding a decree against the decree-holders in the present matter. A certificate for payment of that amount was granted to the attaching creditors on 12th July 1930. In the circumstances this matter must go back to the lower Court for consideration of what effect, if any, this fact may have upon the present position and rights of the parties."

It appears therefore from the observations last quoted that the High Court remanded the case for consideration of the question as to what effect the fact of the attachment of Rs. 3,410-10-0 and of the payment of the same to the attaching creditors of the mortgagees decree-holders may have upon the rights of the parties. When the matter goes back on remand not only this question but also other objections to the sale in execution of the mortgage decree were raised before the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application under O. 21, R. 89, and the other applications made on 17th August 1931 by which the judgment-debtors 2 to 7 prayed that the mortgage decree may be held to be satisfied and that the sale and purchase by the mortgagees decree-holders might be set aside. It is against this order refusing to set aside the sale that the present appeal has been brought. The sale was attacked substantially on four grounds before the learned Subordinate Judge below and the same grounds have been repeated before us by the learned advocate for the appellants.

The first ground taken is that the attaching creditors Narendra Nath Gupta and others were representatives of the mortgagees decree-holders and the withdrawal of money by them precludes the mortgagees decree-holders from contending that the deposit was not a good deposit within the meaning of O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., and reliance is placed on O. 21, R. 53, Civil P. C., in support of this contention. It is obvious however that O. 21, R. 53 has no application to the present case seeing that what was attached in the present case was not a decree and O. 21, R. 53 applies only to attachment of decrees. This ground therefore fails.

It is contended in the second place that as the mortgagees decree-holders had enjoyed the benefit of the deposit made by the judgment-debtors 2 to 7 he is precluded from challenging the validity of the deposit or from challenging the order made by the Subordinate Judge in the first instance setting aside the sale. It is pointed out that before filing the appeal on 21st July 1930 against the order of the Subordinate Judge setting aside the sale the decree-holder enjoyed the benefit of the deposit to a certain extent as the rent decree against the mortgagee decree-holders was dismissed on full satisfaction. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on a decision of this Court in the case of Banku Chandra Bose v. Marium Begum (1). An examination of that case shows that where a suit which was dismissed for non-prosecution was restored on an application on behalf of the plaintiffs and the Court made certain orders in respect of the payment of defendant's costs incidental to the application and the defendants got their costs taxed and obtained an allocatur it was held that they having taken advantage of the order were precluded from appealing against it. The learned Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., said that the defendants acted under the order and enjoyed the benefit of it and they could not adopt the order for one purpose and then claim to have it set aside for another purpose. Other cases were also cited to show that where a person accepts a benefit under the order of a Court he is precluded from challenging the order. This rule is only a special phase of the rule that a party cannot either in course of a litigation or in dealing in pais occupy inconsistent positions; upon that rule election is founded. In other words a man shall not be allowed in the language of the Scotch law to approbate and reprobate. Where a man has an election between several inconsistent courses of action he will be confined to that which he first adopts; the election, if made with the knowledge of facts, is in itself binding. The election must be however a voluntary act not forced upon him by circumstances over which he had no control and notwithstanding his protest. Three petitions of the decree-holders dated 27th May, 27th June and 28th June 1930 respectively make it clear beyond doubt that the mortgagees decree-holders respondents were persistently resisting the application of the deposit money to the satisfaction of the rent decree obtained by Guptas against them. The true rule in cases of this kind is laid down by Dr. Bigelow in his classic work on the Law of Estoppel, Edn. 6 at p. 747. The learned author says this :

"Nor will the receiving an indirect benefit from a transaction, it seems, if without the party's own procurement, have the effect to preclude him from denying the validity of the transaction."

The decree-holders were no free agents in the matter of attachment of Rupees 3,410-10-0 and in those circumstances I can see no reason on principle and I can see nothing in authority to guide me to the conclusion that the respondents are precluded from challenging the validity of the deposit. At the same time I feel that no order for confirmation of sale can be made until the mortgagees decree-holders can bring into Court the sum of Rs. 3,410-10-0 and place it to the credit of the judgment-debtors, defendants 2 to 7. The next ground taken is that under the provisions of O. 34, R. 5, as it stood before its amendment by Act 21 of 1929 the judgment-debtors are entitled to redeem before the confirmation of sale. It is argued that the right of the mortgagors to redeem is not extinguished by the sale, that the security remains alive till the date of confirmation of the sale and reliance has been placed in support of this contention on a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Bibijan Bibi v.

Sachi Bewah (2). An examination of that case will however show what was there laid down is that a mortgagor judgment-debtor is entitled to stop the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of a mortgage decree by payment of the debt before the sale actually takes place and the sale proceeds are distributed. It is argued that the use of the words "and the sale proceeds are distributed" in the said Full Bench judgment goes to show that the mortgage could be redeemed before confirmation of sale. We cannot agree with this contention. In our opinion the right of redemption is extinguished with reference to persons who are concluded by the decree for sale by the sale actually taking place. It is then said that this might have been the position when the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 (S. 89) was in force, where on payment of the mortgage debt the defendants' right to redeem and the security was held to be extinguished. It is said that the words: "and thereupon the defendants' right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished" which occurred at the end of S. 89 having been omitted from O. 34, R. 5, Civil P.C., the effect is that the right of redemption of the mortgagor is not extinguished by the sale. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on the following observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sukhi v. Gholam Safdar (3). Dealing with Hetram v. Shadi Ram (4) Lord Dunedin said this:

"But the second proposition which was absolutely necessary for the judgment was that the mortgage was gone for ever so soon as the decree of sale was obtained; and that was based on the express words of S. 89, T. P. Act, 1882, which ends after providing for the decree 'and thereafter the defendants' right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished.' Now the group of Ss. 85 to 90 inclusive of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 were repealed by the Civil Procedure Code, 1908 and were replaced by the rules under O. 34. In these rules the words above quoted are omitted in the rule which corresponds to S. 89. They do not occur in either the foreclosure section of the Act of 1882 or the corresponding rule of O. 34 which are limited to providing for the extinction of the debt. Now the words being gone their Lordships feel no difficulty in holding that the law remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, namely that an owner of a property who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded to set up the first mortgage as a shield."

This case in our opinion is no authority for the proposition that when a mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale the mortgage as between himself and his mortgagor and all parties to the suit is not extinguished by the sale. As I read the decision of their Lordships it merely lays down that by the decree and the sale the security is not extinguished so far as to prevent the agitation of the rights under it which were not decided by the decree. Their Lordships were not dealing with the question of re-agitating rights already concluded by the decree and the sale. In Sukhi's case (3) the prior mortgagee had obtained a decree for sale without joining a puisne mortgagee and in the suit by the latter the puisne mortgagee contended that the prior mortgagee could not use his mortgage as a shield because the mortgage was merged in the decree for sale and was therefore extinguished. The Judicial Committee held the mortgage was not extinguished and could be held up as a shield. On the other hand their Lordships held that the purchaser of the mortgage sale was in the rights of the first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage and this shows that the right of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property was gone. This view receives support from a decision of Wallace, J., in the case of Y. Ellarayan v. N. Nagaswami Ayyar (5). There is some authority for the view that the security might not be extinguished by the decree for sale for as has been pointed out by Sir Rash Behary Ghose in his Law of Mortgage, p. 503, Edn. 5:

"A judgment being a security of the highest character known to the law, there seems to be an idea, a mistaken idea, I think, that when a judgment is recovered on a debt secured by a mortgage, the security is extinguished. It is said that there cannot be two debts, one leviable by execution and the other continuing to be a charge on the property. The original debt is gone, transit in rem judicatum; and a fresh debt is created with different consequences. This notion however is based on a misapprehension of the observations of Lord Bramwell: In re European Central Railway Co. (6) which can only lend support to it, if they are detached from the context. A careful examination of the judgment will show that the remarks of the learned Judge are applicable only to a personal action of the covenant against the mortgagor and not to an action to realize the security."

but there can in our opinion be no doubt that the security was extinguished by the sale which took place before Act 21 of 1929 came into force. By the omission of the words "the security shall be extinguished" (from O. 34, R. 5) the inference follows that the law under O. 34, R. 5 before amendment remained as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act 1882 as expounded and applied in Sunder Koer v. Shamkrishen (7) where Lord Davey observed as follows:

"After the expiration of the period of grace if the property should not be redeemed, the matter would pass from the domain of the contract to that of judgment and the rights of the mortgagee would thenceforth depend not on the contents of his bond but in the directions in the decree."

Reliance has next been placed on a recent decision of this Court in the case of Kuli Pada Mukerjee v. Basanta Kumar Dutta (8). In that case my learned brother Mukerji, J., made the following remark on which reliance has been placed by the appellant as supporting the contention that the right of redemption existed even up to the date of the confirmation of the sale:

"In any case there is no foundation for the view that under the sale in the present case treating the auction-purchaser Basanta as a stranger the right of redemption remained in the appellant after the sale or in any event after the confirmation thereof."

In making these observations Mukerji, J., was referring in this passage to the facts of the particular case where the payment was made after the confirmation of the sale. On the other hand it seems to me that Mukerji, J., was clearly of opinion that in a sale held under an order absolute under O. 34, R. 5 the purchaser acquires the right of the mortgagee as also of the mortgagor, that is to say the latter's right of redemption; see p. 886, top of the right hand column. The only decision which supports the contention of the appellant that the right of redemption remained in the mortgagor after the sale and for long afterwards is the decision of Das, J., in the case of Muhammad Musa v. Edal Sing (9). For the reasons we have given above we are unable to agree with Das, J. It is argued for the appellant that it is somewhat anomalous that the security will be held not to be extinguished with reference to persons who are not parties to the decree for sale and will be held to be extinguished with reference to persons who are parties to the decree for sale. We do not consider that there is any such anomaly for we cannot overlook the effect of the decree for sale against the mortgagor which merges the debt into the decree for sale and prevents the mortgagor who is concluded by the decree for sale from re-agitating his rights of redemption after the sale actually takes place. We are therefore of opinion that this ground must also fail.

The next and the last ground taken is that Act 21 of 1929 must be held to have retrospective operation and that it is therefore permissible to the judgment-debtors to redeem even before confirmation of sale, for under O. 34, R. 5 as amended payment could be made at any time before the confirmation of a sale made in pursuance of a decree passed under sub-S. 3 of the rule. There is no force in this contention as the Act expressly states in S. 15, Cl. (c) that nothing in the Act will affect rights already acquired. The rights acquired by the mortgagee at the sale in question was a substantive right and even if there was no such saving clause under the ordinary rules of interpretation no retrospective operation could be given to the Act for it affects substantive rights. It is sought to be argued that the question of redemption on payment of the mortgage decretal amount before confirmation of sale is merely a matter of procedure and retrospective operation could be given to the recent enactment and reliance is placed on a decision of the Full Bench in the case of Jagadanandan Sing v. Amritlal Sircar (10). This Full Bench decision is not applicable to the present case as it related to a very different state of facts.

We are therefore of opinion that the order refusing to set aside the sale is right. We think however that the sale should not be confirmed until the mortgagees decree-holders bring into Court the sum of Rs. 3,410-10-0 and put it to the credit of defendants-appellants 2 to 7. This money must be brought into Court within a month from the date of the arrival of the record in the Court below. On the failure of the respondents to bring the money into the Court within the time fixed the sale will be set aside and the appellants will be allowed to redeem on payment of the amount due on the mortgage, with interest and costs. In all the circumstances we think that each party should bear their own costs of these proceedings throughout.

Appeal No. 2430 of 1930, Decided on 24th February 1932, against appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Midnapur, D/- 21st May 1930.

(a) Hindu Law — Religious endowment—Pujari—Property allotted to pujari in lieu of wages is debutter and cannot be alienated by him.

The whole object of the grant was apparently to provide for the proper and necessary worship of the idols and also for the purpose of remunerating the person who would perform the duties of the office of pujari.

Held: that it was a grant for remunerating the pujari for the services rendered by him. The lands were therefore debutter lands of the idols and the pujari was merely a custodian thereof on behalf of the idol and was not entitled at any time to alienate or dispose of the said debutter lands. Any alienations made by the pujari were void as against the idol and the shebait was entitled to such a declaration as against the pujari and his alienees. [P 46 C 1, 2]

(b) Hindu Law — Religious endowment—Pujari—Failure to carry out the duties but willing to work as such—He should be allowed to continue.

Where a pujari to whom debutter lands were granted in lieu of wages had not been properly discharging his duties as such pujari but expressed his willingness to work as pujari and to provide for the expenses of the worship out of the usufruct of the lands allotted to him, he should be allowed a locus penitentiae and to continue in his office as pujari without prejudice to the right of the shebait to ask at any future time, should occasion arise for his removal. C. C. Ghose, J.—The facts involved in this appeal, shortly stated are as follows: The plaintiffs are certain idols established many years ago by the predecessor-in-interest of the present shebait Raja Narasingh Malla Ugal Sanda Deb. He is a ward under the Court of Wards and is represented by the Manager, Khagendra Nath Banerji. On behalf of the idols the case as formulated in the Court of first instance was that defendants 1 to 6 were pujaris of the said idols, and have been so for a long period, that in fact many years ago the ancestor of defendants 1 to 6 was appointed priest or pujari of the said idols, that certain properties were made over to the said ancestor in order that he should meet the daily and occasional expenses of the worship of the idols out of the usufruct of the properties and that there should be no wages or salary attached to his office as pujari but that he should be able to remunerate himself out of the said usufruct and would generally act under the supervision of the idol's shebait. The allegation further was that in 1329 it was ascertained that in respect of certain of the properties so made over to the ancestor of defendants 1 to 6 the said defendants had been guilty of misconduct in that they had granted a permanent lease to a certain person and in respect of certain other properties they had granted an usufructuary mortgage. It was also alleged that there had been neglect by defendants 1 to 6 in the performance of the duties of their office as pujaris and that in the events which had happened it was prayed that it might be declared that the alienations referred to in the plaint were not binding as against the deities and that the Raja as such shebait was entitled to dismiss defendants 1 to 6 from their office as pujaris, they having been guilty of misconduct.

Various defences were taken by the defendants, the principal ones being that the lands which had been granted to the ancestor of the defendants were so granted for the performance of the worship not of the plaintiff idols but of certain other idols in the house of defendants 1 to 6.

It may be stated at the outset that both Courts came to the conclusion that there was no substance whatsoever in the defendants' contention and that the finding of both the Courts was that the lands in question were the debutter properties of the idols referred to in the plaint in this suit and that the lands had not been granted to the ancestor of defendants 1 to 6 for defraying the expenses of the worship of any idols other than those referred to in the plaint.

The question then arises as to what was the character of the lands so held by the defendants; had those lands been granted to the ancestor of the said defendants burdened with certain services or had those lands been granted to the defendants or their predecessor in lieu of their services as pujaris of the said idols? The Court of appeal is apparently of opinion that the lands so granted were burdened with certain services and were not lands which were granted to the ancestor of the defendants in lieu of service as pujari of the said idols; and, in that view of the matter, the Court of appeal below came to the conclusion that the lands so granted were not resumable; and although it incidentally observed that the alienations could not bind the deities, it omitted to make any declaration one way or the other in respect of the alienations in favour of the deities and against defendants 1 to 6 and their transferees.

Now the character of the grant of the lands in question has got to be determined first and reliance has been placed upon the fact that there is no written grant forthcoming to explain how these lands came to be granted to the ancestor of the said defendants or what were the conditions imposed by the grantor at the time of the grant and it is argued by the learned advocate for the respondents that, in the circumstances of this case, the view taken by the Court of appeal below namely, that it was a grant burdened with services should be upheld and further that in accordance with the view taken by the Judicial Committee in several cases it ought to be held that the character of the grant being as described above the plaintiffs should not be held to be entitled to resume the grant in the events which have happened. On the contrary it has been argued by the learned advocate for the appellants that the view taken by the Court of appeal below does not amount to a clear finding of fact but that the question has to be considered from the entire facts which can be gathered from the judgments of the two Courts below and it ought to be held as a matter of law that having regard to the character of the services which the ancestor of the defendants and the said defendants were expected to perform, the grant in question was really a grant for remunerating the pujaris for the services rendered by them as such and for making provision for the expenses of worship from time to time. It is unsatisfactory that no grant was forthcoming in this case and therefore for the purpose of determining the question in issue regard must be had to such surrounding circumstances as might throw light upon the elucidation of the point under discussion.

The defendants are not the shebaita. It is conceded that they were appointed under the shebaita and by the shebaita. They were appointed as pujaris, that is to say, persons who would be charged with the duty of performing the rituals according to the directions which might be given to them from time to time by the persons in authority, namely, the shebaita. It is true that the grant was made a long time ago and it is true that, at any rate, for at least two generations the office of pujari of the idols in question has been in the family of the defendants. That is a circumstance no doubt to be taken into consideration and given its proper weight. At the same time regard must be had to the fact that the whole object of the grant was apparently to provide for the proper and necessary worship of the idols and also for the purpose of remunerating the person who would perform the duties of the office of pujari. The pujari might not inaptly be called a minor ecclesiastical dignitary employed under the shebaita. Those being the circumstances and regard being had to what was the central idea underlying the grant it ought not in my opinion to be held that the nature of the grant could not be anything else but a grant burdened with services. Such matters as may usefully be taken into consideration in determining the question tend in favour of the view that it was a grant for remunerating the pujari for the services rendered by him; or in other words, shortly put, it was a grant in lieu of wages. That in my opinion, is consistent with the facts which are to be found in the judgments of the two Courts below and I am therefore of opinion that it ought to be held that it was a grant in lieu of wages. That being my view of the nature of the grant, I now proceed to determine the question as to whether or not, having regard to the events which have happened, the plaintiffs have made out a sufficient case for an order directing the dismissal of defendants 1 to 6 from their office of pujaris and for the necessary consequential reliefs.

The plaintiffs, own case is that the office of pujaris has been in the family of the said defendants for at least several generations. There is also the fact to be taken into consideration that whatever may have happened in the past, the pujaris are now not unwilling to perform the duties of their office. In fact, we are informed by the learned advocate for the respondents that at the present moment the said defendants have been performing the duties of pujaris. In my opinion, subject to what is about to be stated below as regards the declarations to which the Raja as shebait of the said idols may be held to be entitled to, and without prejudice to the rights of the plaintiffs in the future it ought not to be directed that at the present moment that the defendants 1—6 are liable to dismissal from their office as pujaris. If, as a matter of fact, they are willing to provide for the expenses of the worship out of the usufruct of the lands in question, there is no reason, having regard to the circumstances present in this case, why defendants 1 to 6 should not be allowed a locus penitentiae and to continue in their office as pujaris. In that view of the matter, without prejudice to the right of the shebait to ask at any future date, should the occasion arise, for the removal of defendants 1 to 6 from their office as pujaris I think that, in the present circumstances the plaintiffs have not made out a sufficient case for their removal from the office of pujaris. But this, as I have just indicated, is on the footing that they will perform the duties of the office of pujaris in strict accordance with the directions which may be given to them from time to time by the shebait and that they will undertake to provide out of the usufruct of the lands in question whatever expenses may be required for the proper and necessary worship of the idols. Should it appear that defendants 1 to 6 show by their conduct that they are recalcitrant in the performance of the duties of the pujaris on the footing indicated above, it would be open to the plaintiffs to take the necessary steps for their removal as they may be advised. Liberty to the plaintiffs to apply.

I now come to the question as to what the form of relief should be in this case. If I am right in the view which I have taken of the nature of the grant to the ancestor of defendants 1 to 6 it follows that the lands were debutter lands of the idols referred to in the plaint and that defendants 1 to 6 being custodians of the lands in their capacity as pujaris of the idols were not entitled at any time to alienate or dispose of the debutter lands in the manner in which they have done; and that they were guilty of misconduct; in other words, it ought to be declared that these alienations (within which expression I include all the alienations effected by means of the documents which are Exs. 10, 11 and 12 in this case) are not binding upon the deities and that such declaration should be given not only against the alienees who are parties to this appeal but also against defendants 1 to 6 who were the alienors.

The result therefore is that there ought to be a declaration in manner indicated above. There ought to be a declaration that the nature of the grant of these lands was as stated in an earlier portion of this judgment and that in the circumstances of the present case, subject to what has been stated above, it is not necessary to direct the removal of defendants 1 to 6 from their office as pujaris.

The result is that there will be declarations in manner indicated above and the appeal will be allowed to the extent indicated above. As regards the costs of this suit and of the appeals there will be no costs on either side.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet and Cachar under S. 307, Criminal P. C. in a case in which the accused was charged under Ss. 115/302, I. P. C. or alternatively under Ss. 117/302, I. P. C. The majority of the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty under Ss. 117/302. As regards the charge under Ss. 115/302 all of them brought in a verdict of not guilty unanimously. The learned Judge came to the decided conclusion that the verdict regarding the charge under Ss. 117/302, I. P. C., was perverse and was against the weight of the evidence, and that as such for the ends of justice it was necessary that the whole case should be placed before this Court. The facts of the case shortly are that on 9th July 1931 the accused Dwarikanath Goswami led a procession of young men and girls consisting of about 40 carrying black flags and pictures of Dinesh Gupta and Bhagat Singh in front of the procession to the Sylhet Town Hall. At about 6 o'clock in the evening a meeting was held at the Town Hall of about 200 people in which the accused moved a resolution and delivered a speech. The resolution was that "the people of Sylhet both male and female admire the noble example shown and left by Dinesh Gupta in the service of the mother country and request all to follow that example."

This was followed by a speech exhorting the people in accordance with the terms of the resolution. Then on 26th July the accused supported a similar resolution, namely, that

"Bhagat Singh, Shukdeb, Rajguru, Dinesh Gupta, Harkishen and other hero martyrs of Young India, have set brilliant example of self-sacrifice with a view to overthrowing imperialism and this conference invites the youths of the Surma Valley to be inspired with that ideal of fearless self sacrifice;"

and he supported it with a speech in which he exhorted the youth of the Surma Valley to follow the examples of those persons. Charges were framed in respect of the conduct of the accused on both those occasions, namely, the two alternative charges, one under S. 115 read with S. 302, I. P. C., and the other under S. 117 read with S. 302, I. P. C. It is obvious and it is not disputed that the accused was guilty under S. 117 read with S. 302, I. P. C. But it is argued that the learned Judge was right in holding that S. 115, I. P. C., did not apply in this case. On the other hand on behalf of the Crown it is urged that the whole case is open to us and that S. 117 does in fact apply. S. 115, I. P. C., is as follows:

"Whoever abets the commission of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life, shall, if that offence be not committed in consequence of that abetment, and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years."

It is argued that the words "no express provision is made by his Code for the punishment of such abetment" exclude the application of S. 115, inasmuch as S. 117 is an express provision for cases of abetment of the kind which was committed in this case. The learned Advocate-General urges that the cases referred to by the words "express provision" refer to sections such as 121 and 131, I. P. C., where there is an express provision for abetting an offence punishable with death or transportation for life; and this seems to be the proper interpretation of the section. S. 117 is not an express provision for abetment of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life. It covers all offences and is a general provision for abetment by any number of persons exceeding 10. "Express provisions" seem to refer to sections in which specific cases of abetment of offences punishable with death or transportation for life are dealt with. It is not disputed that the learned Judge is not correct in holding that abetment under S. 115, I. P. C., must be abetment of the commission of an offence by any particular person against any particular persons. It may include abetment of the commission of an offence by unspecified persons against a class or number of other persons described generally and not particularly specified. In this case when the people who gathered together in these meetings were instigated to commit an offence punishable with death in fact, the offence of murder, they clearly come under S. 115 as well as under S. 117, I. P. C.

The only other point urged is that inasmuch as the Judge and the jury agree as regards the finding that the accused is not guilty of the offence charged under S. 115, I. P. C., it is not open to us to find him guilty on that charge. Under S. 307, Criminal P. C., in dealing with the case submitted, this Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal; and subject thereto it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused. From the letter of reference it is quite clear that the whole case is open for consideration and all we are to do is to give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury and then acquit or convict the accused. In support of the argument on the contrary we have been referred to two cases, Em- peror v. Madan Mandal (1) and Emperor v. Profulla Kumar (2). But admittedly neither of these two cases supports entirely a proposition that this Court cannot interfere where the whole case is referred under S. 307, Criminal P. C. In the latter case the Judge has expressly found that it was not necessary to decide that question; and in the former case although there is a statement that the Judge has no power to interfere with the unanimous verdict of the jury with which the Judge agrees, the facts were entirely different and this dictum must not be taken to apply in general. In support of this, reference may be made to the case of Emperor v. Hasrat Mohani (3). But the words of the section are quite clear and that obviously entitle this Court to exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal; and in Cl. (2) it is laid down that

"whenever the Judge submits a case under this section he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which the accused has been tried."

In this case therefore the whole case has been referred and it is open to us to find the accused guilty under Ss. 115/302 or Ss. 117/302, I. P. C. Accordingly we find the accused has committed the offences with which he has been charged. Evidence shows that the offences charged were committed on both the occasions with deliberate intention of instigating a large number of young persons of Sylhet to commit murder and we think we should not be justified in passing a sentence of less than three years rigorous imprisonment on account of each of the two sets of offences under Ss. 115/302, I. P. C. to run concurrently, no separate sentences being passed under Ss. 117/302, I. P. C. The accused should be put in division B. He must surrender to his bail and serve out the sentence.

Appeal No. 3042 of 1929, Decided on 29th April 1932, against appellate decree of Sub-Judge, Second Class, Hooghly, D/- 14th August 1929.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 167 — Annulment of incumbrance—Date of service of notice for annulment is not terminus ad quem but date of application to Collector.

The date of service of notice is not the terminus ad quem, as S. 167 in fact says that an application in writing must be made to the Collector within one year from the date of confirmation of sale or the date on which the purchaser first has notice of the incumbrance, whichever is later. Therefore the proper date to be taken is the date on which the application (on which the notice is founded) is made to the Collector.

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 87 — Abandonment—Usufructuary mortgage does not itself constitute abandonment—Landlord selling holding in execution of rent decree and himself purchasing—Mortgagee proceeding under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C.—Landlord is entitled to resume possession as there is abandonment by tenant.

If in addition to executing a usufructuary mortgage, the tenant fails to pay rent to the landlord and the holding is sold in execution of a rent decree and purchased by the landlord himself, the execution of the usufructuary mortgage plus the sale in execution proceedings are sufficient to constitute a complete abandonment on the part of the tenant, and the landlord has a right to resume possession qua landlord as against the mortgagee.

Costello, J.—This was a suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession of certain lands mentioned in the plaint. I need not for the purpose of our decision specify the lands in detail, but put quite shortly the position was that there was an occupancy raiyati standing in the names of two persons, Golapdi Mallik and Abdul Sattar, at a jama of Rs. 36.3as.17gds. That was a non-transferable occupancy holding. It was mortgaged by way of conditional sale and the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage. It is conceded that the mortgage was of the whole of the property in question. The plaintiff in the suit was the landlord Sarat Kumar Banerjee and he is the appellant before us. The respondent in this appeal, Munshi Abdul Bari, was the principal defendant in the suit and he was the mortgagee. The other defendants in the suit were the tenants who were the mortgagors.

It appears that the present plaintiff brought a suit against the tenants for recovery of rent. In that suit he obtained a decree and proceeded to put the decree to execution in consequence of which there was a sale of the holding and at that sale the landlord, that is to say, the present plaintiff, was the purchaser. The sale was duly confirmed and the plaintiff as the purchaser was put into possession of the property. Thereupon the present defendant as the mortgagee filed an objection under the provisions of O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. There seems to have been an investigation as provided for in R. 100, Cl. 2, as a result of which the Court made an order under the provisions of O. 21, R. 101 and directed that the applicant, that is to say, the present defendant, the mortgagee, was to be put in possession of the property. The present plaintiff thereupon instituted the suit with which we are now concerned, claiming that he had the right to eject the mortgagee and recover possession of the property. The Munsif of the second Court, Arambagh, made a decree in favour of the plaintiff and ordered that he should get khas possession of the lands in question, the defendants being evicted. Thereupon the defendants appealed and the matter came before the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Hooghly, who reversed the decision of the trial Court on the ground that the mortgage in question was an incumbrance within the meaning of S. 161, Ben. Ten. Act, and that the plaintiff as the purchaser at the auction sale had not given proper notice to annul that incumbrance under the provisions conferred under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act, in that the plaintiff knew of the mortgage of 12th November 1923 or at any rate when the sale was confirmed on 24th June 1924, and he had not served the notice under S. 167 until 18th August 1925 which the learned Subordinate Judge erroneously computed to be within two years after the confirmation of the sale or more than two years of the date of the knowledge of the plaintiff.

It is clear that the notice was served after one year, indeed one year two months after the date of the confirmation of the sale. The learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in taking the date of the service of the notice as the terminus ad quem, as S. 167 in fact says that an application in writing must be made to the Collector within one year from the date of the confirmation of the sale or the date on which the purchaser first had notice of the incumbrance, whichever is later. Therefore the proper date to be taken was the date on which the application (on which the notice was founded) was made to the Collector. However if we had to decide the case on this point alone we should probably take the view that as the notice was served on 18th August 1925 the presumption is that the application was made to the Collector within a week or two before the date on which the notice was served. In the ordinary course the Collector in matters of this kind would doubtless take the necessary steps to have a notice served within a week or two of the application made to him. However in the view which we now take of this case it is not necessary that we should further deal with this point.

This appeal has been argued at great length and much force by the learned advocate on behalf of the landlord, the appellant before us, that this is in fact a case where we ought to hold that the usufructuary mortgage which was created by the tenants defendants was not an incumbrance within the meaning of S. 161, Ben. Ten. Act, and therefore no notice of the kind contemplated in S. 167 as a condition precedent to the right of the landlord to resume possession as against the mortgagee was required.

Having regard to the facts and circumstances of this particular case we do not think it necessary to make any attempt to reconcile the many conflicting decisions upon the question whether or not the mortgage of the whole or of a part of a non-transferable occupancy holding constitutes an incumbrance within the meaning of S. 161 or whether the fact that it is a usufructuary mortgage makes any difference or the fact that a purchaser at the auction sale which was held under execution proceedings is himself a landlord. We only say with regard to this aspect of the matter that the time must come when the Court will have to make some attempt to reconcile these conflicting decisions, or at any rate to extract some general principles from them. We think however the matter can be decided upon the footing that the usufructuary mortgage, even though it was a mortgage of the whole of the holding, did not of itself constitute on the part of the tenants an abandonment of the holding so as to give the landlord by that alone, the right to resume possession on the ground that the tenants had made a transfer of a non-transferable holding and had therefore abandoned the holding. It appears that in this particular case the mortgage deed provided that the tenants mortgagors would continue to pay the rent to their landlord. The case of Prionath Bose v. Kusum Kumari Dassi (1) seems to indicate that the mere making of a usufructuary mortgage, even a mortgage covering the whole of the holding, does not itself constitute an abandonment. There must be some further facts found in addition to the mere execution of the mortgage and other circumstances must exist in order to show conclusively that not only by the making of the mortgage but for other reasons the tenant intended to abandon the holding and no longer be responsible for, or at any rate to fulfil his obligation towards his landlord as regard the payment of rent.

In the present instance, as I have already mentioned, there was not only a mortgage, but the tenant defaulted in payment of rent to the landlord and the present plaintiff secured a decree for the rent which was in arrears and brought the holding to sale and himself became the purchaser. We are of opinion that although prior to the sale the tenants still had some interest in the holding in that he had not parted with the equity of redemption after the sale whatever the interest the tenant still had in the holding passed to the landlord by virtue of the purchase which he had made. Thereafter the tenant had no further interest in the holding as against his landlord. That being the position we may take it that the execution of the usufructuary mortgage plus the sale in the execution proceedings are sufficient to constitute a complete abandonment on the part of the tenant particularly when one takes into account also the facts that subsequent to the rent sale there was a proceeding by the mortgagee under O. 21, R. 101 in consequence of which he was put in possession of the land in question.

In those circumstances we feel able to decide this matter on the footing that that there was a complete abandonment by the tenant and therefore the plaintiff in the suit had the right to resume possession qua landlord irrespective of the fact that he himself happened to be the auction-purchaser as by the sale the scintilla of interest which remained in the tenants' was finally extinguished. The plaintiff by virtue of his position as the landlord of a holding which has been totally abandoned by the tenant has a right to resume possession and we think that he is entitled to resume possession as against the mortgagee. We therefore come to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed. The judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside and those of the Court of first instance restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court as well as in the lower appellate Court.

Jack, J.—I agree with the decision of my learned brother and I would only like to say that the possession taken by plaintiff must have been actual possession not symbolical possession; otherwise there would not have been any proceeding under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. The trial Court does not appear to be correct in stating that the plaintiff took symbolical possession.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of a suit for enforcement of a mortgage said to have been executed by defendant 1's husband, one Dharma Das Datta, now dead, in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant 2 who is the brother of Dharma Das has been made a party to the suit, for the mortgage is said to have been executed for the necessities of the joint family which consisted of Dharma Das and his brother. The claim is laid at Rupees 1,339-13-0. Amongst several defences to the suit, the main defence is that the mortgagor Dharma Das was a minor at the time of execution of the mortgage bond and that therefore the mortgage is void as a minor is incompetent to contract. Both the Courts below have given effect to this defence and have agreed in dismissing the suit. The question in this appeal is whether these decisions are right. It has been contended that in arriving at the conclusion that the mortgagor was a minor the Courts below have relied on a horoscope which is not admissible under S. 32, Cl. 6, Evidence Act. It has been found by the lower appellate Court that the horoscope comes from the custody of defendant 2, the brother of the husband of defendant 1, who made it over to the father of defendant 1 for filing it in the record of the suit. It is further found that it was written by an astrologer, now dead, whose handwriting has been proved by a near relation of the said astrologer. It has been further found that the astrologer died in 1926 B. S., before the death of Dharma Das and that the said astrologer used to prepare horoscope for others in the village in which Dharma Das resided. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the horoscope is admissible in evidence under S. 32, Cl. 5, Evidence Act, to prove the date of the birth of Dharma Das.

The time of one's birth relates to the commencement of one's relationship by blood and a statement therefore of one's age made by a deceased person having special means of knowledge relates to the existence of such relationship within the meaning of S. 32, Cl. (5). Illus. (1) S. 32 would go to show that any statement made by a person having special means of knowledge relating to the date of birth of a particular person on a given date is a relevant fact when the issue is what is the date of birth of that particular person. This view receives support from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Ariff v. Yeoh (1). Reliance has been placed by the appellant on the case of Satish Chunder Lal v. Mohendra Lal (2) in support of the contention that the horoscope is not admissible in evidence. It will appear from an examination of that case that there was no evidence that the person who made the horoscope had any special means of knowledge. In this case it has been proved that the astrologer used to prepare horoscopes for others in that village and consequently must be taken to have special means of knowledge of the date of the birth of Dharma Das. This statement was made ante litem motam. The Calcutta case just referred to was doubted in Raja Goundan v. Raja Goundan (3). It would seem also from the case of Krishnamachariar v. Krishnamachariar (4), that the horoscope would be admissible in evidence to prove the age of the person whose horoscope the document purports to be, if the person who made the horoscope is called is alive to testify to his special means of knowledge of the date of the birth of the person in question. We are therefore of opinion that in the circumstance the horoscope has been rightly admitted in evidence and the first ground taken therefore must fail. It appears also that the horoscope was examined and compared by Dharma Das's father-in-law at the time of Dharma Das's marriage with his daughter.

Apparently this horoscope was given by Dharma Das's mother to Dharma Das's father-in-law for comparison with the horoscope of Dharma Das's wife. The astrologer who made the comparison is dead and the mother of Dharma Das is also dead and their evidence was not consequently available at the hearing of the suit. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the horoscope is admissible in evidence under S. 32, Cl. 6, Evidence Act, but we are of opinion that it is not receivable in evidence under Cl. 6 but is receivable in evidence under Cl. 5 which no doubt requires that the party making it must have special means of knowledge. In the circumstances detailed above it appears clear that the astrologer prepared the horoscope on the information of some one who had special means of knowledge, viz., some members of Dharma Das's family and the horoscope was adopted by the family as representing the correct date of Dharma Das's birth as it was used for the purposes of comparison at the time of Dharma Das's marriage. The next ground taken is that defendant 1 should have been made liable as the money borrowed was for the marriage of Dharma Das, a member of the joint family; and the expenses of the marriage is undoubtedly a legal necessity which would make the loan binding on the joint family; and would be recoverable from the joint family properties. The answer to this contention is that the finding of the lower appellate Court is that the creditor did not make any bona fide inquiry about the existence of necessity and that the brothers Dharma Das and defendant 2 were possessed of considerable landed property at the time and there was no justifying necessity for the mortgage. Both grounds taken in the appeal fail and the appeal must be dismissed.

Order removing receiver is appealable—But receiver cannot appeal from such order.

As the authority to call a receiver into being necessarily implies the authority to terminate his functions, the order removing a receiver is, like the order appointing him, an appealable order. But a receiver cannot properly appeal from an order of the Court discharging him from his trust: the right to discharge him rests with the Court at any stage of the controversy: and from the exercise of this right the receiver cannot appeal: A I R 1926 Cal 593, Rel on.

Guha, J.—The plaintiffs-respondents in this appeal instituted a suit in the first Court of the Subordinate Judge at Dacca, Suit No. 263 of 1924, for dissolution of partnership and for accounts, for partition of immovable properties, as also for ancillary and incidental reliefs. There was a prayer for appointment of a receiver in the suit. A preliminary decree was passed in the suit, and two persons were appointed joint receivers, by an order dated 3rd September 1928. The receivers so appointed took possession of the properties in suit, and were in charge of the management of the same. On 15th May 1931, defendants 5 to 21 made an application for the removal of the joint receivers appointed by the Court, and for the appointment of a competent and efficient receiver or manager, on a modest scale of remuneration or on a fixed salary, so as to reduce the cost of management, and effect economy. It appears that the pleaders appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs and defendants, other than defendants 5 to 21 the applicants for removal of the joint receivers, stated before the Court below that their clients had no objection to any curtailment of costs if that could be effected without impairing efficiency in the management of the properties. The parties to the suit represented by their pleaders were heard by the learned Subordinate Judge in the matter of the removal of receivers, and on 14th September 1931, an order was passed directing that Babu Ban Behari Saha, one of the joint receivers, do provisionally work as the sole receiver from October 1931, and that the other receiver Rai Manmohan Neogy Bahadur be removed. The receiver so removed by the order of the learned Subordinate Judge has appealed to this Court.

To this appeal, so preferred by the receiver removed by the order of the Court, a preliminary objection was taken, on behalf of defendants 5 to 21, respondents in the appeal. It was urged that the appeal was not maintainable: the order of removal of the receiver passed by the Subordinate Judge on 14th September 1931, was not an appealable order under the law, regard being had to the provisions contained in S. 104, R. 1, sub-R. (a), O. 43, Civil P. C. It was further contended by the learned advocate for defendants 5 to 21, respondents, that inasmuch as none of the parties to the suit had appealed, the order of removal of one of the joint receivers could not be challenged by the receiver so removed; the receiver himself had no right of appeal under the law, from the order as it stood. It has been strenuously contended on behalf of the appellant, that the preliminary objection directed against the maintainability of the appeal, could not be given effect to; it was urged that none of the grounds upon which the objection was formulated was sustainable in law. The first question that requires consideration is whether the order of removal of a receiver was appealable as such, irrespective of the position whether the receiver has the right to appeal against any order made under R. 1, O. 40, which will presently be examined. The order appointing a receiver of any property under R. 1, O. 40, Civil P. C., is an appealable order; order of removal has not been made appealable by any express provision, contained in the Code. The power of a Court to remove or discharge a receiver whom it has appointed may however be regarded as well established, and that power may be exercised at any stage. The power of removal must of necessity be treated to be an adjunct to the power of appointment a power incident to and following from the power of appointment. The authority to call a receiver into being necessarily implies the authority to terminate his functions. In this view of the matter, it may be held in favour of the appellant before us that the order of removal passed by the Subordinate Judge is an appealable order. This would be in consonance with the decision of this Court in the case of Sripati v. Bibhuti Bhusan (1), in which it was held, by special reference to the provisions of the General Clauses Act, that if the right of appeal was given against appointment, it was given also against the removal of a receiver.

The next question is the one that relates to the receiver's right to appeal against an order of removal passed by the Court appointing him. The receiver has under the law, the right to appeal when any order is made by the Code, under R. 4, O. 40 of the Code. The express provisions so made, conferring the right of appeal so far as a receiver was concerned, limits the general right to appeal in any of the other matters mentioned in R. 1, O. 40, including an order of removal of a receiver, by implication. It is inconceivable that the legislature intended that a receiver should have the right of appeal from any and every order passed by the Court appointing him, seeing that the express provision contained in the Civil Procedure Code limits the right of appeal by a receiver to the only case where there is a direction for the attachment of his property. The parties to the litigation had undoubtedly the right of appeal, if they were aggrieved by any order passed by the Court, under R. 1, O. 40 of the Code.

The view expressed above which follows the plain reading of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, bearing upon the question under consideration, is amply supported by authority of decisions of Courts in England. According to the English practice, a summons or notice of motion for the discharge of a receiver, should be served on all the parties and the receiver; but a receiver is not generally entitled to appear at the hearing of the application: see Kerr on Receivers, Edn. 8, p. 344, and the cases referred to there. So far as decisions by Courts in America are concerned, based upon general principles, the views are very well pronounced, and we have no hesitation in accepting the same. A Receiver, according to decisions by American Courts, should not be heard on motion to vacate his appointment; he is not a party in interest, and has no standing to oppose the motion: He cannot interfere in questions affecting rights of parties and the disposition of the property in his hands; the receiver is not an agent or representative of the parties to the litigation. So far as the right of appeal is concerned, the decisions by American Courts indicate that a receiver cannot properly appeal from an order of the Court discharging him from his trust; the right to discharge him rests with the Court at any stage of the controversy; and from the exercise of this right the receiver cannot appeal. The Court in the exercise of its discretion may make any order discharging or removing a receiver for the proper care and management of the property in the Court's custody; and the receiver, an officer of the Court, should not be allowed by an appeal, to interfere with such an order: see High on Receivers, Edn. 4, pp. 313, 975, 982 and 897). In the case before us it is for the purpose of effecting economy, consonant with efficient administration of the property in suit, that the Court has directed the removal of one of the joint receivers; and it is pre-eminently a case where the rules of general application, to which reference has been made above, in the matter of right of the receiver when a question of his removal or discharge by the Court arises, are applicable. We have therefore come to the conclusion that upon the provisions contained in the Code of Civil Procedure and also upon principles of general application, the appeal by the receiver, as preferred to this Court, cannot lie, from the order by the learned Subordinate Judge. The preliminary objection raised on behalf of defendants 5 to 21, respondents, relating to the maintainability of this appeal should, in our judgment, be allowed to prevail, and the appeal must be dismissed. We direct accordingly.

Rule No. 1246 (M) of 1931 is discharged. The parties are to bear their own costs in the appeal and the Rule.

Appeal No. 446 of 1928, Decided on 20th May 1932.

(a) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819)—Putni tenure, consisting of lands in more touzis than one can be sold under Regulation.

There is nothing in Regulation (8 of 1819) to justify the view that a putni tenure consisting of lands situated in more touzis than one is not a taluk under that Regulation or that it cannot be sold under it: 15 I C 686, Ref. [P 57 C 1]

(b) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819)—Collector can hold sale in spite of Commissioner's decision to contrary.

For the purpose of the Putni Regulation the Commissioner is not appellate authority in his relation to the Collector. The Collector has jurisdiction to hold the sale in spite of the decision of the Commissioner to the contrary. [P 57 C 1]

(c) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819)—Putnidar bound to pay additional revenues—No remedy suggested in kabuliyat for realization of demand as to cesses—Cesses should be regarded as part of putni and sale held under Regulation.

Where by the terms of the putni kabuliyat the putnidar remained bound to pay any additional revenue or any new impost which might be levied by the authorities on the zamindaris, cesses were covered by these words and there being no other means suggested in the kabuliyat for realization of the demand as to cesses than a sale under the Regulation, it is only a fair construction to put on the document to hold that the intention of the contract was that the additional imposts were to be treated as part of the putni rent and realized as such. [P 58 C 1]

(d) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819)—Estoppe—Plaintiff can object to putni sale although previously he prevented sale by paying up revenue.

Where on all previous occasions when proceedings under the Regulation were applied for, the plaintiff deposited the zamindar's dues and prevented the sale, it cannot be contended that there was anything in plaintiff's conduct which precluded him from taking the objection that the Regulation did not apply to the putni and that it could not be sold thereunder. [P 58 C 2]

(e) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819)—Auction sale—Bidders under impression that if money due would arrive, sale would not be effected—Sale cannot be upheld.

Intending bidders present at a putni sale were under the impression that if the money due would arrive during the course of the day, the sale would not be effected.

Held: that an auction sale held under such circumstances is not a sale with free and unrestricted competitive bidding which is its essential characteristic and cannot be upheld. [P 60 C 1]

(f) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819), S. 8—Putni in arrears regarding which zamindar does not wish to proceed need not be mentioned in notice.

Where there are several other tenures in a zamindari in arrears and the zamindar mentions only the particular tenure against which he wishes to proceed in his application and notice, the requirements of S. 8 are complied with. It is not necessary to state in the application or in the notice any putni which may be in arrears but in respect of which the zamindar does not desire to proceed: 4 I R 1925 P C 397; 4 I R 1931 Cal 296 and 4 I R 1930 Cal 249, Ref. [P 60 C 2]

(g) Putni Regulation (8 of 1819), S. 8 (2)—Conspicuous—Meaning of, explained.

The word 'conspicuous' occurring in S. 8 (2) is a relative term. A place inside the Nasrat, where putni notices have always been affixed and the public have free access to the place and everybody interested in matters of this description knows very well that such notices are to be found there, is a conspicuous place within the meaning of S. 8. Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, setting aside a putni sale. The plaintiff held the mehal which formed the subject matter of the suit, eight annas in patni right and the other eight annas in durpatni right, the patnidars in respect of the latter share being the pro forma defendants 5 to 7. The principal defendant, the Raja of Nashipur, is the zamindar. The patni was originally created in 1854. The plaintiff and the pro forma defendants 5 to 7 acquired it in 1902 and executed the usual security bond in respect of it and got their names recorded in the zamindar's sherista on payment of nazar. It comprises lands of three touzis, namely, Nos. 434 and 523 of the District of Murshidabad, and No. 1152 of the District of Birbhum. It goes by the name of Mehal Sail Mail and bears an annual jama of Rs. 12,350. For arrears of rent for the first half year of 1331 B. S. the defendant, the Raja, on 1st Kartick of that year, applied for sale of the patni mehal under Regulation 8 of 1819. The plaintiff objected to the proposed sale on the ground that the Regulation did not apply inasmuch as the mehal was comprised within more touzis than one. The Collector upheld the objection and rejected the application for sale. On appeal by the defendant the Commissioner affirmed the Collector's order on 13th May 1925. In the meantime the rent for the next half year having fallen in arrears the defendant on 1st Baisak 1332 (=15th April 1925) made another application for the sale of the mehal under the said regulation for the entire amount of arrears of rent for 1331 B. S.

The sale was fixed for 1st Jaistha 1332 (=15th May 1925).

The plaintiff put in an objection on the ground already mentioned as also on other grounds, and in support thereof filed certified copies of the order of the Collector and of the Commissioner in connexion with his objection in the previous application for sale, to which reference has already been made. That objection was heard at 2 p. m. on the said 15th May 1925, the date fixed for the sale, by the then Collector Mr. W. S. Adie, who for reasons to which it is not necessary to refer, disagreed with the view taken by his predecessor and did not feel bound by the decision of the Commissioner and verbally rejected the plaintiff's objection. What happened next is a matter of controversy between the parties, and of it two versions have been given. (Versions of both parties were then stated and the judgment proceeded.) The accounts of the events set forth above have been taken from the pleadings of the parties and they represent only the bare outlines of the two stories in the main features which were developed in much fuller details in the evidence adduced, but with variations, here and there, which are not worth mentioning.

On 19th May 1925 the defendant put in the balance of the purchase money, that is to say, Rs. 13,600, and the Collector thereupon confirmed the sale on the 20th. The plaintiff then appealed to the Commissioner, who held that the sale was illegal and invalid and ordered the sale certificate issued by the Collector to be cancelled. The sale certificate was accordingly cancelled on 24th August 1925. The defendant thereupon moved the Board of Revenue who, on 8th February 1926, expressed the view that the sale was illegal, but that neither the Commissioner nor the Board of Revenue had jurisdiction to set it aside, and the plaintiff would have to seek his remedy if he so desired in the civil Court. The plaintiff accordingly instituted the present suit on 13th February 1926. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and set the sale aside. From this decision the defendant has appealed. The validity of the sale was challenged on behalf of the plaintiffs on various grounds on some of which the Subordinate Judge held in plaintiff's favour and on the others in favour of the defendant. Connected with the appeal therefore there has been a cross-objection preferred on behalf of the plaintiff as respondent in the appeal.

Before dealing with the grounds urged in the appeal and the cross-objection it would be convenient to dispose of a preliminary objection taken on behalf of the plaintiff as regards the maintainability of the appeal. The substance of the objection is that under an order made by this Court on 13th May 1929 the plaintiff, who is still in possession, has been paying in the patni rents and the defendant has been withdrawing the same and that therefore the defendant is precluded from questioning any longer the validity of the decision of the Court below by which the sale was set aside and the plaintiff was restored to his rights as the holder of the patni notwithstanding the sale that had taken place. In our opinion, there is no force in this objection because the withdrawal and acceptance of the rents on the part of the defendant have been under the order of this Court, made in pursuance of an arrangement which the parties suggested and which obviously was intended to operate without prejudice to their rights in the appeal. It cannot be suggested that the defendant in withdrawing and accepting the rents as aforesaid has taken a benefit under the decree of the Court below so as to be estopped from questioning the validity of that decree any longer.

It will be convenient to deal with the cross-objection first because the grounds urged in connexion with it may be disposed of quite shortly and none of them, in our opinion, ought to succeed. These are grounds as regards which the Subordinate Judge has held against the plaintiff.

The first ground is that inasmuch as the patni comprises lands of three touzis or estates, two of which are in the District of Murshidabad and one in the District of Birbhum, the provisions of Regulation 8 of 1819 would not apply to it. The substance of the contention is that the patni taluk being an offspring of a touzi or an estate cannot be more extensive than the touzi or the estate itself. This contention is supported by certain decisions of the revenue authorities with regard to the same patni (vide Ex. 7, 7 (a) and 7 (b), and what was said in Note 31 to S. 8 contained at p. 202 of the Board's Manual of the Revenue and the Patni Sale Laws, 1928. It was however held by this Court in the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Annada Mohan Rai (1), that the contention is not well founded and that there is nothing in Regulation 8 of 1819 to justify the view that a patni tenure consisting of lands situated in more than one taluk is not a taluk under that Regulation or that it cannot be sold under it. It is interesting to note that Note 31 referred to above has been abrogated by the Board by a Resolution passed on 10th June 1929. Certain anomalies and difficulties which are supposed to ensue from such a view have been pointed out to us, but whatever the peculiar results might be in any particular case we are not prepared to hold that the view is not correct. It is not suggested that by reason of a part of lands of the patni being situated within the Collectorate, the Collector of Murshidabad had no jurisdiction to sell the patni or that the Collectorate of Murshidabad does not satisfy the requirements, S. 3, Act 6 of 1853 and S. 3, Act 8 of 1865.

The second contention is that the Collector had no jurisdiction to hold the sale in spite of the decision of the Commissioner to the contrary. The Commissioner's decision (Ex. 7) passed on 13th May 1925 appears to have been brought to the notice of the Collector on 15th May 1925 (vide Ex. 5). The Collector was not altogether conventional in refusing to follow the ruling of the Commissioner, a superior revenue authority, and especially as the latter was amply supported by the view of the Board of revenue as it then was. But for the purposes of the Patni Regulation the Commissioner is not an appellate authority in his relation to the Collector. It is not possible therefore to hold that the Collector had no jurisdiction to hold the sale in spite of the view which the Commissioner had expressed: vide also Ex. 7 (b).

The third ground taken is that the postponement of the sale to a future hour and the holding of the sale at that hour was without jurisdiction, or in any event was irregular and occasioned an injury to the plaintiff because most of the bidders had by that time left the Court. The facts are that the property was put up for sale about 2 p. m., and time was granted to the plaintiff at his request for bringing and paying in the money and when about 5 p. m. the money did not arrive, the sale was held. The Subordinate Judge has held that the sale in question was not held in the order provided for in the regulation, but that this irregularity had been waived by the plaintiff because it was at his instance that the sale was adjourned to 4-30 p. m., and as the plaintiff must have foreseen the circumstances under which the sale would be then held, he cannot be permitted to complain. It is quite true that once the sale commences, the notice under S. 8 being taken down, it has to be conducted by calling up the lots successively in the order in which they may be found in that notice (Ss. 9 and 10) and no sale shall be stayed or postponed on any account unless the amount of the demand be lodged: S. 14.

But in this case it is not at all clear that the sale had so commenced or that when the Collector took up the matter at 2 p. m. he intended to proceed with the sale any more than to deal only with the objection of the plaintiff. If at that point of time, on the plaintiff's objection to the sale being verbally rejected, the Collector at the plaintiff's request granted him time to pay in the arrears and adjourned the sale to a future hour, the plaintiff should be the last person to be allowed to say that the Collector acted without jurisdiction. What S. 10 speaks of is the calling up of the lots in the order in which the lots are mentioned in S. 8, which is an entirely different thing from what is complained of by the plaintiffs so far as this ground is concerned. To get over the effect of the consent which had been given on the plaintiff's behalf it was suggested in the plaint and attempted to be proved on behalf of the plaintiff that the order (Ex. A) which bears date 15th May 1925 did not contain a correct recital of facts and was not passed by the Collector at the time. And this position is sought to be supported by the petition, Ex. 1 (a), which the plaintiff made to the Collector on 20th May 1925, and on which the only order passed by the Collector was "File."

We are not prepared to hold that the plaintiff has been successful in establishing the position he contends for. In our opinion it is clear beyond doubt that there was consent on the part of the plaintiff to have the sale held on that day if the dues were not paid by 4-30 p. m. We think the plaintiff having himself obtained the order for adjournment and for a sale at a future hour in case of default, must be taken to have waived all such objections as were the results which that consent produced.

It has then been urged that the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the notice which is necessary to be served at the mofussil, namely, "at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulters" was duly served, is wrong and unjustified on the evidence. We have examined the evidence bearing upon this point and we see no reason to dissent from the view which the Court below has taken. The appellant has applied to tender as a piece of additional evidence a school register in order to contradict D. W. 2, Mohamed Matlab Hossain, who is one of the witnesses to that service; but to receive such evidence at this stage would obviously be very unsatisfactory and we have accordingly rejected this application.

Another objection taken, which however was not taken in the Court below, is that the cesses which formed a part of the arrears for which the sale was held could not be realized by a sale under the regulation. It appears that by the terms of the Patni Kabuliyat of 1854 (Ex. J) the patnidar remained bound "to pay any additional revenue for any new impost which might be levied by the authorities on the zamindaries." That cesses fall within these words cannot be disputed. There being no other means suggested the kabuliyat for realization of the demand as to cesses and a sale under the regulations, it is only a fair construction to put on the document to hold that the intention of the contract was that the additional imposts were to be treated as part of the patni rent and realized as such. We may point out, though not as an authority on the question, that the recovery of interest and cesses under the regulation is a practice sanctioned by the Board of Revenue: vide Board's Manual of Revenue and Patni Sale Laws, 1928, p. 203, Note 32.

The objections which the defendant took in the Court below as regards the maintainability of the suit were decided against him and they have not been repeated before us. To resist the plaintiff's claim a further objection was taken, namely, that the plaintiff was not competent to challenge the validity of the sale for two reasons: firstly because, as it is said, the plaintiff had never before taken any exception to a sale of the Patni under the Regulation; and secondly because the plaintiff had waived all irregularities in connexion with the present sale by asking for an adjournment of it and consenting to it being held at 4-30 p. m. on the day in question. Both the grounds have been overruled by the Subordinate Judge and we are in entire agreement with him so far as this matter is concerned. It appears to be an admitted fact that on all occasions previously when proceedings under the Regulation were applied for the plaintiff deposited the zamindar's dues and prevented the sale, and it was only when the rent for the first half year of 1331 fell due and sale was applied for and the plaintiff was not able to pay the same that he took the objection. In such circumstances it cannot be contended that there was anything in the plaintiff's previous conduct which precluded him from taking the objection: he had never allowed a sale under the Regulation to take place. The application that was made for adjournment of the sale and in consequence of which the sale was adjourned to 4-30 p. m. can, in our opinion, in no view of the case be regarded as a waiver of all antecedent irregularities, if any, but only a waiver of such irregularity as was necessarily due to what was done at his own request, namely, by the adjournment of the sale.

We have now to deal with such of the grounds as have been found in favour of the plaintiff and on which the Court below has set aside the sale and which consequently form the subject-matter of the findings which the appellant assails in his appeal. In this connexion the first and most important question to consider is what exactly took place at the sale that was held. The plaintiff's allegation was that the Collector told the defendant's agents, Babu Purna Chandra Chatterjee, and Babu Anil Kumar Chatterjee, that if the money would be paid by the plaintiff on the next day, i.e. 16th May, he would cancel all papers, etc., relating to the proceedings that were being held and the said two agents consented to the proposal of the Collector and gave an undertaking that they would receive the money and let the proceedings be annulled. The defendant, on the other hand, denied that there was any such proposal made by the Collector, or any such undertaking given by the defendant's agents. The Collector Mr. Adie undoubtedly would have been the best witness to speak on this matter, but he has not been and indeed could not be examined on either side because he was on leave at the time when and for a long time before the trial took place in the Court below. We may say here that we do not agree with the Subordinate Judge in his view that it was the defendant's duty to examine him; in our opinion, that was no more the defendant's duty than it was of the plaintiff, but we cannot blame either party for his non-examination because in point of fact he was not available. (Evidence as regards the version of what occurred was considered and the judgment then proceeded). In our judgment the interest which the Collector took, and in our opinion rightly took, in seeing that the defendant's agents should act up to the undertaking that had been given, and the conduct of Purna Babu in drawing up the draft, when admittedly he had no authority from his principal to allow the sale to be cancelled, lead unmistakably to the conclusion that the sale must have been held on an understanding such as has been spoken to on behalf of the plaintiff. The account given on behalf of the defendants, of the events that followed the sale, would not, in our opinion, sufficiently explain the aforesaid two facts.

To our mind it is plain beyond doubt that Purna Babu, although he had no authority from his principal, had readily agreed to the proposal which the Collector had made and which was a very fair one, and had assured the Collector, as one might naturally do, that he was really concerned with the money and did not care for the property, that out of the best of motives he agreed to accept the money and not proceed to complete the sale, should the money arrive, that he honestly thought that his principal would consent to the course if all future troubles would be saved, and that he quite honestly suggested the conditions that the plaintiff should also agree to in order that objections might not be raised to a sale of the patni in future. But it seems that he had counted without the host, for his principal evidently did not ultimately agree to forego the bargain that he had made, and consequently the negotiation fell through. The result was that the Collector was unable to do anything further in the matter and had to conclude the sale on 20th with the following order :

"The purchaser paid Rs. 2,400 on the date of sale which was kept in a bag in the Treasury (vide T. O. W. receipt dated 15th May 1925) and was credited into the Treasury on 18th May 1925 (vide Chalan No 109 Revenue deposit, dated 18th May 1925). The balance of the purchase money, Rs. 13,600, thirteen thousand and six hundred, was deposited by Chalan No. 113 dated 19th May 1925. The sale is concluded."

These, in our judgment, were the facts. But there is one aspect of them which, in our opinion, requires very serious consideration. There can be no doubt that the sale was held on the clear understanding that should the money come, the sale would not stand. Four bidders bid at the sale. Of them, the bids for the zamindar were the initial bid of Rs. 10,000, an intermediate bid of Rs. 14,000 and the final bid of Rs. 16,000. The three other bidders offered Rupees 12,000, Rs. 13,000 and Rs. 15,000 respectively. The plaintiff's allegation was that "the two agents, on behalf of the zamindar having consented thereto (i. e., to receive the money should it arrive) the Collector did not allow the intending purchasers who were present to offer any further bid."

P. W. 2, Jnanendra Mohan Sircar, says: "People were present in the Court at the time of the sale to the extent of 10 or 15, and some of them bid at the sale, but the Collector told them not to bid as, if the plaintiff's men came with money, it would have to be accepted and the bidder's money returned and after that no one bid for the property at the sale."

P. W. 5, Kristonath Gupta, says: "There were 2 or 3 bids including the last bid of Purna Babu and then the Collector said that when the sale would be cancelled upon payment further bidding was not necessary. No one else bid after that."

P. W. 8, Dharendra Chandra Das Gupta, says:

"In holding the sale the Collector repeated with Purna Babu once or twice that if the money came he would have to accept it and Purna Babu expressed his assent to it * * * when the bidding was going on the Collector said that if they would take the money when it came, there was no use for much bidding, and after that Purna Babu bid and no other bidders did so."

The Nazir, D. W. 1 Gobinda Gopal Mazumdar, whose evidence on this point is on a par with what it is on all other points, says:

"I do not remember whether when bidding was going on the Collector said that it was no use bidding as the money would be paid the day after and the sale cancelled."

On the evidence quoted above, which we see no reason to disbelieve and which fits in very well with the probabilities of the case, we have no hesitation in holding at least this: that everybody present at the sale was under the impression that if the money would arrive the sale would not be effective. That the facts were as we have found clearly appears from a petition which was filed before the Collector on behalf of the plaintiff on the very next day, viz., the 16th: vide Ex. 1 as appears from the Collector's initials with that date underneath the same, in which it was said:

"Both the agents of the zamindar having agreed to that and having given express undertaking to that effect you did not allow the bidders present to bid any further."

The story given in the plaint was the story given on the very next day, and it is inconceivable that it could find a place in this petition unless it was substantially true or that it would not have been challenged if it was not so. An auction sale held under such circumstances is not a sale with free and unrestricted competitive bidding which is its essential characteristic and is not a sale which can be upheld. Added to it is the patent fact that the sale, such as it was, fetched a ridiculously low and utterly inadequate price which cannot but have been its direct result. The patni rent for one year was Rs. 13,000 and odd and the patni itself was knocked down for Rs. 16,000. The plaintiff's case is that its value is Rs. 5 lacs, but in any case it is evident that it is nowhere near what it has fetched.

Two other points have been found in favour of the plaintiff by the Subordinate Judge and as they have formed the subject of the appellant's attack it is as well that we should deal with them quite shortly.

The Subordinate Judge has held that there was no comprehensive application and notice in this case, such as is required by S. 8, Cl. (2) of the Regulation. The application that was made is Ex. E and the notice that was put up is Ex. 12. The Subordinate Judge found on a comparison of these two with the notice Ex. H that was put up on the same day at the zamindar's kutchery, that in Ex. H a very large number of tenures were mentioned as being in arrears, while in Ex. E and Ex. 12 it was this one tenure that was asked to be sold and advertised for sale. The conclusion that he has arrived at on this comparison is that inasmuch as there were other tenures which were in arrears in Ex. H and the zamindar mentioned only this particular tenure in the application Ex. E and in the notice Ex. 12, the requirements of the section were not complied with. We are unable to agree with the view which the Subordinate Judge has taken. It has not been proved that there was any other patni tenure of the zamindar that was sought to be proceeded against under the regulation; and so long as that has not been proved, the mere fact that there were other patni tenures in arrears as shown in the notice put up at the zamindar's kutchery would not mean that the application and the notice were not the comprehensive ones required by S. 8.

It is not wholly easy to construe a Regulation of 1819, which was concerned with a zamindari as the unit in its relation to touzis created long after and several of which may be within one zamindari. But we are not called upon in this case to determine whether a petition in which all the patnis within one particular touzi are mentioned and a notice of similar purport would not be enough or whether the petition and the notice should not contain all the patnis within the entire zamindari. But we are not prepared to hold that it is necessary to state in the application or in the notice any patni which may be in arrears but in respect of which the zamindar does not desire to proceed. It is true that an omission to issue a general notice as required by S. 8 is fatal: Bhupendra Narayan Sinha v. Madar Buksh (2). But from the decision of the High Court in Bhupendra Narain Sinha v. Madar

Buksh (3) which the Judicial Committee affirmed by the decision cited above it would appear that in that case what was contained in the notice was one patni only while from the evidence it appeared that there were about 40 cases under Regn. 8 in which the zamindar was interested. In the case of Bejoy Krishna v. Lakshmi Narain (4) it was pointed out that the lots to be sold are to be mentioned in the notice under S. 8, Cl. (2) and that under S. 10 the sale should take place in the order given in the notice. The plaintiff-respondent, after the hearing of the appeal was over and while the case stood over for judgment, put in an application for letting in some additional evidence to show that there were other patnis in respect of which the defendant is the zamindar and which were also sold under the regulation at the said sale. We have rejected this prayer as having been made too late.

The Subordinate Judge has also been at great pains to hold that the notice that was put up at the Collector's kutchery was not put up at a conspicuous place as required by S. 8, Cl. (2) of the regulation. We have examined the evidence that there is on the record on this point and we think that this conclusion is wholly untenable. There is a large body of evidence which establishes that the place inside the Nazarat where the said notice was put up is the usual place where such notices have always been affixed and that the public have free access to the place and everybody interested in matters of this description knows very well that it is to be found there. The word "conspicuous" must be a relative term; and upon such evidence as there is on the record it is impossible to hold that the place in question is not a conspicuous place. Reference in this connexion may in particular be made to the evidence of the Collectorate Nazir, D.W. 1 Gopal Gobinda Mazumdar, and the plaintiff's own witnesses such as P.W. 2 Jnanendra Mohan Siroar, P.W. 5 Kristo Nuth Gupta, P.W. 6 Shyamapada Gupta and P.W. 7 Dwijendra Nath Lahiri.

The result is that in our opinion the appeal should be dismissed and we order Appeal No. 137 of 1930, Decided on 24th May 1932, against original decree of Sub-Judge, Second Class, Midnapore, D/- 1st March 1930.

* Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. 2, Para. 12 and O. 22, R. 11—Persons whose rights are not affected by award cannot be substituted in place of parties to appeal against award and appeal in absence of proper substitution on death of party abates.

Arbitrators have no authority to adjudicate the rights of a person who was not a party to the suit in which the arbitration proceedings arose and therefore any decision by the arbitrators made behind his back, is certainly not binding on him and cannot in any way affect his legal status or right. Where the adjudication contained in the award as affirmed by the decree under appeal is entirely a personal one so far as the appellant is concerned, it must be deemed to have spent all its force except as regards parties who were the other parties to the suit, and when on the death of the appellant during the pendency of the appeal, his alleged adopted son, who was no party to the suit but whose rights were wrongly adjudicated by the award and with reference to whom the trial Court expressed that the decree based on the award will have no effect so far as he was concerned, should not be allowed to be substituted in place of the appellant as it would be a mere waste of procedure to let him come in only to have the same thing said once again in his presence and the appeal should be dismissed as having abated. Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decree based upon an award of certain arbitrators which was accepted by the Court with a slight modification. As alternative to the appeal there is an application in revision. The suit in which the said award was made was instituted by Dwijendra and Rohindra, the two younger sons of one Rai Radhashyam

Das Adhikari Bahadur deceased, in their personal right and also as shebait of a certain deity, against their eldest brother Barendra who was sued both in his personal right and as the other shebait of the said deity. The sons of the said plaintiff were subsequently added as co-plaintiffs. The plaintiffs asked for declaration of title and confirmation of possession in a two-thirds share in certain properties by right of survivorship. They prayed that if it be found that the properties were subject to a charge for deb-sheba the said charge might be declared. In the alternative, they prayed that if the properties be found to be debutter, their rights as shebait be declared and they be put in joint possession with the defendant and a scheme be framed for the performance of the sheba (worship). On a joint application by all the parties the suit was referred to certain arbitrators who made an award the important terms whereof were the following:

1. That the properties are the absolute debutter properties of the deity.
2. That the defendant had been duly installed by the previous mohunt of the deity and he was the sole mohunt of the endowment, validly appointed.
3. That the next mohunt would have to be nominated by the defendant from amongst the descendants of the late mohunt Rai Radhashyam Das Adhikari Bahadur, and failing such nomination during his lifetime the said descendants shall nominate one from amongst themselves to be such mohunt. That the plaintiffs would get maintenance from the debutter properties and to that end certain properties specified in a schedule were to be given to them, to be enjoyed by them from generation to generation but with no power of transfer or alienation.
5. That the plaintiffs and their descendants will have free access to the temple and right of worship therein.
6. That Jatindra who was said to have been adopted by the defendant would on no account, be appointed mohunt, not even if he was so nominated by the defendant.
7. That provision for the maintenance of Jatindra would have to be made by the defendant out of the secular properties left by the late mohunt, the father of the plaintiffs and the defendant.

The award being submitted, the defendant put in an objection on the ground that some portions of it were beyond the scope of the reference and outside the subject-matter of the suit. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection except as regards one matter, namely as regards the provision relating to the maintenance of Jatindra. Pursuant to his decision, a decree was drawn up incorporating all the clauses of the award referred to above with the exception of Cl. 7. This decree is the subject-matter of the appeal and the application in revision. On 10th June 1930 the appeal was preferred, and the application was filed on the next day, the 11th. On 31st March 1931 Barendra died. On 15th June 1931 Jitendra, who, as already stated, was alleged to have been adopted by Barendra prior to the suit and was no party therein, applied to this Court to be substituted as appellant in the place of Barendra and obtained an order from the Registrar to be so substituted. On 23rd November 1931, Rohindra, one of the plaintiffs, denying the factum as well as the validity of the adoption of Jitendra and also Jitendra's right to the shebaitship under the alleged nomination of Barendra, and claiming to have been elected by the male descendants of the mohunt Rai Radhashyam Das Bahadur as provided for in the award, put in a petition asking that the order obtained by Jitendra for his substitution might be vacated. On 18th December 1931, Jitendra filed an affidavit asserting that his adoption was valid and also that he had been appointed by Barendra as his successor in accordance with the custom governing the endowment and further that there was a custom under which the shebaitship devolved by lineal primogeniture. Now, the first question to be considered is whether on the death of the appellant Barendra, the appeal can proceed at the instance of Jitendra as appellant substituted in his place. The deity was not a party to the suit and so no determination made by the award and affirmed by the decree will affect the rights and interests of the deity so as to make a shebait of the deity bound thereby. Jitendra too was not a party to the suit and the Subordinate Judge has rightly observed in his judgment:

"Jatindra Nath Adhikari is not a party to the suit. The arbitrators therefore had no authority to adjudicate his rights, and any decision made behind his back is certainly not binding on him and cannot in any way affect his legal status or right. From that standpoint any adjudication regarding his rights cannot but be outside the scope of reference and wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the suit."

The parties, it should be stated here, are governed by the Mitakshara law. Whatever rights Jitendra may have either personally as adopted son of Barendra or as mohunt or shebait of the deity, either by nomination or by right of lineal primogeniture, are not rights which have in any way been affected by the decree and in no sense can it be said that Jitendra is a legal representative of Barendra in so far as such rights of his are concerned. The adjudication contained in the award as affirmed by the decree is an adjudication which is entirely a personal one in so far as Barendra was concerned and on Barendra's death has spent all its force except as regards parties who were the other parties to the suit. The Court below has expressly said that the decree will have no effect so far as Jitendra is concerned, and it will be a waste of procedure to let him come in only to have the same things said once again in his presence. There is no application before us by anybody else to come in and prosecute the appeal in the place of Barendra. The result is that in our judgment the order obtained by Jitendra for his substitution should be vacated, and it being held that the appeal has abated, the appeal as well as the application, should be dismissed. There will be no order for costs.

RANKIN, C. J. AND COSTELLO, J.

Karnani Industrial Bank, Ltd.—Appellant.

v.

Ranjan—Respondent.

Appeal No. 489 of 1931, Decided on 26th April 1932, against original order of Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Bengal, D/- 7th October 1931.

Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 12—Liability of principal—Test of liability—Contractor undertaking to do what principal would do—Principal does not escape liability.

Section 12 contemplates that for a person to be liable for compensation it is necessary that the execution of the work in the course of which the workman is injured should be an ordinary part of that person's trade or business. The general notion of S. 12 is that, if it is ordinarily part of the business of a person to execute certain work, then ordinarily he will do that work by his own servants; he is not to escape liability for any accident that takes place merely by interposing a contractor, the contractor undertaking to do what ordinarily the principal would do for himself: A I R 1929 Bom 179, Ref. [P. 64 C 1]

Nripendra Chunder Das—for Appellant.

Phanindra Kumar Sanyal—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal from the order of the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Bengal. The applicant was a workman engaged by one Kamil Sardar to do the work of putting up certain joists in a building in Park Street. Kamil Sardar was employed as a contractor by the Karnani Industrial Bank. It appears that the Karnani Industrial Bank was causing this house to be put up and it was getting the house put up by contracting with different people to do different parts of this work. It had evidently not entered into a contract with one builder to do the whole work, but it entered into contracts with particular persons employed in that behalf that particular parts of the work should be done on behalf of the bank. In these circumstances, the applicant having met with an injury by a joist falling on his leg, the commissioner has fixed the compensation at a lump sum of Rs. 514. Originally, the application was brought against Rai Bahadur Sukhlal Karnani personally but, in view of the written statement, the Karnani Industrial Bank was added as an opposite party and, in the end, the commissioner has made this award against the bank. The matter coming before us, it is pointed out that the liability of the bank depends upon the terms of S. 12, Act 8 of 1923.

That section deals with a case where the principal, as it calls him, in the course of or for the purpose of his trade or business contracts with any other person called the contractor for the execution by or under the contractor of the whole or any part of any work which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal. If these conditions are fulfilled, the principal is made liable for compensation to the contractor's men. The first question therefore to which the commissioner had to address his mind was; Is it ordinarily part of the trade or business of this bank to put up joists as a house building operation? Any ordinary notion one has of banking business would lead one prima facie to give a firm answer in the negative to that suggestion. The only evidence that was before the commissioner to satisfy him that it was ordinarily part of the business of this bank to undertake the erection of joists in a house is the circumstance that in the Memorandum of Association of the Limited Company, there is among the thirty-six objects of the usual redundant character one No. 14 which says :

"To build, erect, construct, lay down, enlarge, alter, equip, improve and maintain any offices, buildings, warehouses, godowns, factories, wharves, mills, jetties, roadways, tramways, railways."

On the basis and on the basis of the fact that this bank was building this house, the commissioner found in favour of the applicant saying this :

"It is clear that the bank constructed the house in the course of its business as such bank and it is clear also from paras, 13 and 14 of the Memorandum of Association of the Karnani Industrial Bank Limited that the bank was competent to do so."

I quite agree with the commissioner that these two propositions are both clear ; but they are not the tests laid down by S. 12. The general notion of S. 12 is that, if it is ordinarily part of the business of a person to execute certain work, then ordinarily he will do that work by his own servants ; he is not to escape liability for any accident that takes place merely by interposing a contractor, the contractor undertaking to do what ordinarily the principal would do for himself. But, if anybody is entitled to say that he is outside that principle if, for example, he went to a builder to build a house for him, I should suppose that body to be a bank which ordinarily would not take house building operations into its own hands at all. Of course, my notion of banking business may not be the same as the notion of the Karnani Industrial Bank. Merely because it is called a bank, I cannot say, as a matter of law, that it has not got this business of a speculative builder or the business of building houses for itself. I cannot say that it is not part of its ordinary business except upon some evidence. It seems rather extraordinary that any person engaged in banking business should go so very far from ordinary banking business, but in the particular circumstances of this case, as neither the parties nor the commissioner appear to have appreciated what the test is in the act, it would only be fair to the applicant to let the matter go back to the commissioner to have this question determined upon evidence if there is any reason to suppose that putting up a house is ordinarily part of business of the bank. I may say here that it is by no means evident to me that Cl. 14 of the Memorandum of Association was intended to entitle the bank to build houses in the sense of building them itself as distinct from getting them built in the ordinary way as one would expect a bank to do. There is Indian authority upon the meaning of S. 12 in the case of Rabia v. The Agent, G. I. P. Ry. (1). In those circumstances, this appeal must be allowed, the order of the commissioner must be set aside and the matter must be remanded to him to deal with this question of fact upon further evidence according to law. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Costello, J.—I agree that this matter should go back for further consideration by the learned commissioner. It is to be observed that the language of S. 12 of Act 8 of 1923 is somewhat more specific than the language used in the corresponding section of the English Act of 1925. That section is S. 6. The words there are:

"Where any person (in this section referred to as the principal) in the course of or for the purposes of his trade or business contracts with any other person (in this section referred to as the contractor) for the execution by or under the contractor of the whole or any part of any work undertaken by the principal, the principal shall be liable to pay any workman employed in the execution of the work any compensation under this Act, etc."

So S. 6 of the English Act applies where the work is "undertaken" by the principal. Even so, the English authorities are all one way in this respect: the work must be of a kind which is part of the business or trade of the principal who carries it out. The words of the Indian Statute, as I have said, are even more specific because the section says that the work must be work "which is ordinarily part of the trade or business." In this connexion I would refer to the case of Skates v. Jones & Co. (2). In that case, the respondents were two shopkeepers. They also kept a billiard saloon. They were minded to join together in running a skating rink. They bought an existing iron structure and made a contract with a person for its removal and re-erection. The applicant, that is to say, the workman while employed on this work by the person with whom the two shopkeepers contracted was injured by accident and in respect of his injuries he claimed compensation from the respondents, that is to say, the two shopkeepers who were the principals. It was held that the work in which the applicant was injured was not undertaken in the course of or for the purposes of the respondents' trade or business and that therefore they were not liable to pay compensation. Also it has been held in English authorities that it is the duty of the arbitrators as is there called, and therefore in India it is the duty of the Commissioner in India, to find as a fact that the work undertaken is so undertaken as part of the ordinary trade or business of the person or persons who are to be put in the position of the principal for purposes of S. 12. Looking at the judgment of the learned Commissioner it does not appear that he has fully directed his mind to the importance of that part of S. 12 because I find that he says at the top of p. 21 of the paper book:

1. A I R 1929 Bom 179=117 I C 431=53 Bom 203.
2. (1910) 2 K B 903=79 L J K B 1169=103 L T 408=26 T L R 643.

"The learned pleader's argument on behalf of the opposite party No. 2 based on the language of S. 12 does not assist the employer for the present proceedings are not indemnity proceedings."

That observation of the learned commissioner seems to indicate that he has not considered the question of whether or not the erection of the building with which this matter is concerned was ordinarily part of the business of the Karnani Industrial Bank. I agree with my Lord therefore that this matter should be remanded. It is desirable and necessary that there should be a definite finding on that question.

Sham Das Kapur—Accused.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 818 of 1931, Decided on 13th July 1932.

1933 C/9 & 10

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 164—(Quære). It is doubtful if S. 164 applies to criminal proceedings (Quære). [P 66 C 1, 2]

* (b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 164—Production of document for inspection is not contemplated—Notice and call for production can be made—Accused not producing document after notice can use it to cross-examine complainant.

Section 164 does not contemplate the production of documents for inspection. What it contemplates is that one party should call upon another, in Court to produce a document of which the first party has given the other notice to produce. It does not give him any right at any stage of the case to call upon his opponent to produce the document and use it or not as he sees fit. [P 66 C 2]

In a prosecution under S. 408, I. P. C., the complainant called upon the accused to produce certain account books for inspection. The accused evaded their production but produced them for cross-examining the complainant.

Held: that the Court could not refuse to permit the accused to cross-examine the complainant on them. [P 66 C 2]

Hiralal Ganguli—for Accused.

Anilendra Nath Roy Chowdhury—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—In this case the accused has been convicted of an offence punishable under S. 408, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six weeks and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 and in default, to undergo further imprisonment for six months. The learned Magistrate further ordered that the whole of the money, if realized should be paid to the complainant as compensation.

The case for the prosecution is that the accused was a servant of the complainant and was left in charge of a business belonging to the complainant in Calcutta known as the Punjab Watch Company. The complainant fell ill and went to Amritsar of which place he is a resident. On his return, he found that the accused had removed all the stock in trade of the shop and converted it to his own use. The defence suggested by the accused was that he was not a servant of the complainant but a partner in this business called the Punjab Watch Company. The complainant gave evidence that the accused was his servant and in this he was corroborated by a man named Kissen Chand, P.W. 8. If Kissen Chand is believed it is very difficult to see how the accused can have any answer to the charge. After the complainant had discovered what had happened, he made inquiries and he eventually got the accused arrested by the police at Moradabad. In the possession of the accused when he was arrested were found two books of account. These books were seized by the police but were afterwards returned to the accused on his giving security for their production. The next step taken by the accused was that he filed a suit in the Amritsar Court for dissolution of partnership in which he made the complainant a defendant and asked for taking the accounts of the Punjab Watch Company. I will assume that this case is defended and that the complainant denies the fact of partnership alleged by the accused. In the course of the proceedings before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate it appears, from the order sheet that the complainant from time to time called for the production of the two books to which we have referred. The accused did not produce the books and he gave excuses for their non-production which appear to me to be extremely flimsy. It may be that his security has been forfeited by his conduct. But that depends on the terms of the security bond and we express no opinion with regard to that. Among other attempts to get the production of the documents on the part of the complainant is a petition filed by him on 24th June 1931, in which he asked that a notice should be given to the accused for the production of the books in Court for inspection. As I have said the accused never did produce these books for inspection.

However his failure to do so, is, it appears to the learned Magistrate, a ground to deprive him of the right to use these documents as material for his defence. The learned Magistrate based this view on the provisions of S. 164, Evidence Act, which provides that when a party refuses to produce a document which he has had notice to produce he cannot afterwards use the document as evidence without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court. Accordingly, when in cross-examination the complainant was shown these books he refused to have anything to do with them or to answer any question with regard to them and in his refusal it is clear that he was supported by the learned Magistrate. In my opinion the learned Magistrate misunderstood the meaning and intention of S. 164. Speaking for myself, I am by no means convinced that S. 164 applies to criminal proceedings. S. 164 does not contemplate the production of documents for inspection. What it contemplates is that one party should call upon another in Court to produce a document of which the first party has given the other notice to produce. It does not give him any right at any stage of the case to call upon his opponent to produce the document and use it or not as he sees fit. I do not myself see any indication in the section that the complainant can call for a document in this sense. We think that the learned Magistrate was wrong in not permitting the pleader for the defence to put these documents to the complainant and cross-examine him on them. The fact that the accused adopted an unreasonable attitude with regard to their production may be material when the time comes to consider as to what weight to be attached to them. We think that the learned Magistrate was wrong in not permitting the documents upon which the accused claims to base the main part of his defence to be put to this particular witness for the prosecution. This seems to us to be a sufficient reason for setting aside the conviction. At the same time we consider that a very strong prima facie case has been made out by the evidence of the complainant and the witness Kisson Chand and we do not think that we should be justified in directing that the accused be acquitted.

We therefore set aside the order of conviction. But the appeal will remain pending for a period of three months. During that time if the accused so desires he can take reasonable steps to have the question decided in the Amritsar Court. The case will be laid before us again after the interval of three months for considering whether we should order retrial or pass some other order.

M. C. Ghose, J.—I agree.

Graham, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the District Judge of Birbhum modifying a decision of the Munsif, Second Court, of Rampurhat and arises out of a suit for rent for the period 1327-1330 B.S. in respect of ten different holdings described in the schedule to the plaint. The defence set up in regard to four of these jamas described as chha, ja, jha and ena was that there was no relation of landlord and tenant, while as regards the remaining six jamas the plea was taken that the rate of rent had been illegally enhanced in contravention of the provisions of S. 29, Ben. Ten. Act, and that the plaintiffs could only recover rent in respect of them at the admitted rates. The trial Court found that the four jamas were included in the plaintiff's estate and that the relation of landlord and tenant existed. As regards the remaining six jamas it found that, with the exception of two, viz., ka and uma, they did not contravene S. 29, Ben. Ten. Act. As to ka the Munsif found that the original rent was Rs. 5-2-6 per annum, while the rent claimed was Rs. 6-2-17½ gandas, and that it therefore contravened S. 29. Similarly as regards uma the finding was that the original rent was Rs. 2-4-0 whereas the rent claimed was Rs. 10-4-6. The Munsif accordingly gave a decree in respect of these two holdings at the admitted rates. On appeal by the defendants the District Judge dismissed the appeal as regards the four jamas chha, ja, jha and ena on the ground that they had not been included in a Road Cess Return filed by the plaintiffs some years previously and that as a consequence no suit would lie under S. 20, Cess Act (Bengal 9 of 1880).

The plaintiffs filed a cross-objection as to jotes ka and uma which was dismissed, the District Judge holding in agreement with the Munsif that a decree passed in a suit in the year 1890 was a nullity. A decree was therefore given in respect of these two jotes at the rates admitted by the defendants. The plaintiffs have now preferred this second appeal and two points have been taken on their behalf. It is contended, firstly, that the Court of appeal below erred in law in holding that the compromise decree 1890 did not operate as res judicata, and in treating it as a nullity. Secondly it has been urged that under S. 20, Cess Act, the plaintiffs were precluded from realising rent in respect of the four jamas chha, ja, jha and ena. With regard to the first contention we are of opinion that it is well-founded and must prevail. We have no hesitation in holding that the compromise decree of 1890 operates as res judicata, and in support of the view which we take may refer to recent decisions of this Court Ishan Chandra v. Moomraj Khan (1) and Nawabzada Md. Hossain v. Khana Kasi (2). The District Judge has referred in his judgment to the former of these cases but preferred, as he himself expresses it, to follow an earlier decision reported in Surjeeg Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (3). As this latter case was referred to in the subsequent decision reported in Ishan Chandra v. Moomraj Khan (1), and as there had in the interval been a Full Bench decision Hriday Nath Roy v. Ram Chandra Barma (4), which had shaken the decision in the Surjeeg Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (3), we think that the District Judge should have followed the later decisions. In the case reported in Mahmed Hossein v. Khana Kasi (2)

1. A I R 1926 Cal 1101=97 I C 770.

2. A I R 1928 Cal 606=118 I C 570.

3. (1913) 18 I C 809.

4. A I R 1921 Cal 84=58 I C 806=48 Cal 188 (F B).

the Full Bench decision was expressly referred to and was mentioned as a reason for not following the previous decision reported in Surjee Saran Lal v. Dukhit Mahto (3). With regard to the second contention the terms of S. 20, Cess Act seem to be explicit. The four jotes chha, ja, jha and ena were not entered in the plaintiff's return under the Cess Act (Ex. A), and, that being so, the plaintiffs were debarred under that section from suing for rent in respect of them. The words in the section are "suing for, or recovering." It seems clear therefore that the inclusion of the holdings in question was a condition precedent not only to the recovery of rent but to the institution of a suit for rent so far as they were concerned. What then are the facts? The relevant facts are that a Road Cess Return had been filed by the plaintiffs as far back as 1905 at the time of the last Revaluation and that Return did not include the jamas in question. The plaintiffs were precluded therefore from suing for the rent of these jamas.

On behalf of the appellants two contentions have been put forward in this connexion. Firstly, it is argued that, as the point was not taken in the written statement, it ought not to have been entertained, and secondly, it has been urged that in any case the defect, if any, was rectified by the filing of the supplementary return in which these four jamas were included. As regards the first contention it appears to be correct that the point was not raised in the pleadings, but it is clear from a passage in the judgment of the Munsif at p. 3 of the Paper-Book that the point was taken, and it is a point which goes to the root of the matter and affects jurisdiction. The second contention is, it is plain, based upon an erroneous view of the facts. The supplementary cess return was filed before the Collector on 17th March 1926 during the trial of the suit, and the copy of that Return was filed on 20th August 1926 in the lower appellate Court. That copy was never filed in the trial Court, and the Munsif had therefore no knowledge of any such return. A supplementary Return filed not only not before the institution of the suit but after the suit had been disposed of and after an appeal had been filed could not have the effect of getting rid of the disability imposed by S. 20 of the Act. There is no substance therefore in either of these contentions.

It was further strenuously argued that it could never have been intended by the legislature to deprive the owner of his right to recover rent by suit, and that even assuming that there was any disability by reason of failure to include the jamas in the return, that disability was removed by the subsequent filing of the supplementary Return. In support of this view an analogy was taken from S. 78, Registration Act, and in conjunction therewith reference was made to the case of Abdul Khan v. Mcher Ali (5). But the two cases are not on the same footing, and there is danger in applying an analogy borrowed from another Act. In the case of the Registration Act the defect is of a formal character, whereas in the case of the Cess Act it is something more than that purpose underlying S. 20 of the latter Act being apparently to impose a disability upon those who evade cess by not making a true return. Moreover, as already stated, the omission was in this instance not made good during the pendency of the suit but in the appellate stage. The result therefore is that the appeal succeeds upon the first contention as regards the effect of the compromise decree, and fails upon the other point. The judgments and decrees of the Courts below are accordingly set aside and in lieu thereof we direct that the plaintiff's claim stand dismissed in respect of the four jotes chha, ja, jha and ena, and be decreed in respect of the remaining six jotes at the rate claimed by the plaintiffs. The appellants will get three-fifths of the costs throughout, and the respondents the remaining two-fifths.

Mitter, J.—I agree with my learned brother in the conclusion he has arrived at on both the points urged before us by the appellants. With regard to the first point taken, namely, that the Courts below erred in law in regarding the compromise decree which was passed in Rent Suit No. 1298 of 1890 as a decree made without jurisdiction and in granting to the plaintiffs a decree not at the rate arrived at by the compromise but at the rate admitted by the defendants, the contention of the appellants seem to be well founded and must prevail. The compromise decree, it is said, contravened the provisions of S. 29, Ben. Ten. Act inasmuch as the rent which was agreed to was in excess of more than 2 annas in the rupee and this was in respect of the holding which was an occupancy-holding carrying a money-rent. In a previous case, namely, in the case of Mohammed Hossein Chowdhury v. Khana Kazi (2) it was held by me (Mullick, J. concurring) that a compromise decree passed in contravention of the provisions of S. 29, Ben. Ten. Act cannot be treated in a subsequent suit between the same parties as without jurisdiction and a nullity but is operative and binding until vacated by appropriate proceedings. It was argued on behalf of the respondents that a compromise decree cannot be placed upon a higher footing than a mere agreement of the parties and that same infirmity which attaches to an agreement would attach also to an agreement which has merged in a decree of a Court. That may be conceded. But the question still remains that a compromise decree is to be vacated by appropriate proceedings within the time prescribed under the Limitation Act. The compromise decree is as much binding between the parties as a decree on contest. That was laid down so far back as in the year 1895 in the case of South American and Mexican Co. (6). It operates as an estoppel by judgment in the same way as a decree on contest. So long as this compromise decree is not vacated it is binding as estoppel between the parties. That being so, the Courts below were wrong in not decreeing rent in respect of theka and una jotes at the rate claimed by the plaintiffs on the basis of the compromise decree in the suit of 1890.

With regard to the second point taken I agree that the contention of the appellants must fail. S. 20, Cess Act (Act 9 of 1880) operates as a bar to the plaintiffs realising rent in respect of the four jotes chhna, ja, jha and ona. It is argued on behalf of the appellants that S. 20 cannot take away a right which exists independently of any provision of the Cess Act. It is said that admittedly the plaintiffs are proprietors of the estate under which the tenancies are situated and that it is his right as a proprietor that entitles them to get rent and S. 20 merely imposes a bar which may be removed at any stage of a proceeding whether in the course of a suit or in the course of an appeal arising from the suit. I am unable to accept this contention for the language of S. 20 suggest that every holder of an estate or tenure in respect of which a return has been made as required by the Cess Act shall be precluded from suing for or recovering any rent whatsoever unless it be proved that the holding or tenure for the rent of which the rent is claimed was created subsequently to the lodging of such return . . . in cases where the holdings have not been mentioned in the return filed. In this case Road Cess Return which was before the Court was filed in the year 1905 and it is conceded that that return which was filed long prior to the institution of the suit did not contain any mention of the four jamas in question. This point was raised before the Court of first instance which overruled the contention of the defendants on the ground that the omission might have been due to inadvertence. Whatever the reason for the omission might be the strict provisions of S. 20 render it impossible for the plaintiffs to sue for recovery of rent unless it is established that in the return filed before the institution of the suit these holdings were mentioned. It will not certainly bar the plaintiff's right to recover rent for all time to come if the plaintiffs can place before the Court in any subsequent proceeding Road Cess Return which would include these holdings. But in the present case before the Court of first instance no return other than the return of 1905 was exhibited. Therefore the Court had not before it any document in the nature of Cess Return which contains a mention of these holdings. For these reasons as I have already said, I agree with my learned brother in making the order which he has made.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 3 (5)—Suit for price of wood contracted to be supplied by tenant to landlord over and above rent is suit for rent.

Where by a compromise, a tenant binds himself to supply to his landlord certain quantity of wood over and above the rent of his land, a suit for the price of the wood so deliverable is a suit for rent, as the wood is something deliverable in kind by the tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. [P 71 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11—Rent suit—Compromise in former suit superseded by another compromise—Decision based on former compromise does not operate as res judicata in subsequent suit.

A decision given in a rent suit based on a compromise does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent rent suit where the compromise on which the prior suit was based has in the meanwhile been superseded by another compromise between the parties. [P 71 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11—Waiver.

Judgment.—This litigation has come to this Court under the following circumstances. There is a tenure held by certain Kalamuris, who gave an ijara to one Surabala and subsequently to the plaintiff. Under this tenure, there is an under-tenure held by the Mahato defendants. The suit lands are in mouza Barasole, which is included within the under-tenure. In 1907 the Record of Rights was finally published and therein the defendants were recorded as under-tenure holders in respect of the lands of mouza Barasole, at a rental of Rupees 118-14-0. As Surabala, the then ijaradar, brought a rent suit in 1909 and obtained decree at the rate of Rs. 118-14-0. In 1910, the present defendants brought title suit—T. S. No. 200 of 1910—in order to have the rent decree set aside. In that suit, there was a compromise by which the parties agreed that the rent for the under-tenure would be Rupees 118-14-0., and that, on account of the jungle land, the defendants would supply 15 cart loads of sal and other kinds of wood for fuel annually. Thereafter the plaintiff brought Rent Suit No. 2274 of 1922, consolidating the claim for rent in respect of the aforesaid cash amount and of the wood.

The Court held that the two claims could not be so consolidated and that in respect of the claim for wood, the plaintiff was to seek for remedy in a regular civil suit. Then the plaintiff brought Money Suit No. 383 of 1925, claiming supply of wood for the jungle lands for 1330 and 1331 B. S. In that suit, there was again a compromise, by which it was settled that, instead of wood being supplied as fixed by the compromise decree in Title Suit No. 200 of 1910, the defendants would supply 8 cart loads of sal and 7 cart loads of other kind of wood. The suit was accordingly decreed in terms of this compromise. Then the plaintiff brought the present suit No. 521 of 1926, claiming wood for the years 1332 and 1333 B. S. The defence denied the finding of the solenama as aforesaid and also alleged undue influence. But the denial was not seriously pressed and undue influence was also not proved. The further defence was that the contract to supply wood as aforesaid was illegal and wholly void. The Munsif took this view and held that, by this contract, there was an enhancement of rent contrary to S. 113, Ben. Ten. Act, and it was in the nature of an abwab. In that view, the Munsif dismissed the suit. An appeal was taken to the District Judge. But he held that the suit was based on a contract and as the learned Munsif had Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 250, the appeal was incompetent. Against that judgment, the plaintiff has filed this second appeal and also an application under S. 115, Civil P. C. Both these matters are before me.

The first question is whether the learned Judge in the Court of appeal below is right in holding that the suit is not a suit for rent. If the suit was for rent then the decision of the learned Judge was wrong and the appeal should have been heard by him on its merits. Now, the present claim is based on the compromise decrees made in the aforesaid suits in 1910 and 1925 respectively. The terms of the first compromise (Ex. 2) show that the tenants bound themselves to supply to their landlords so much sal and other wood annually from the jungle lands of the mouza. It cannot be gainsaid that this is rent even in the restricted sense of Cl. (5), S. 3, Ben. Ten. Act of 1885. Obviously it was something deliverable in kind by the tenants to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. As against this, there are some observations in the judgment (Ex. 4) of the rent appeal arising out of Rent suit No. 2274 of 1922. There it is remarked as follows:

"As to 15 cart loads of fuel, I fully agree with the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court. It is clearly not rent, not being amalgamated with rent and payable in kists. If the plaintiff can at all recover it, he must seek his remedy in a regular civil Court and not in a rent Court."

It may be that this only decides that the claim on account of the supply of wood is not rent in respect of the same holding, of which the cash rent of Rs. 118-14-0 is payable. But even assuming that there was a clear decision that the claim was not one of rent, it can have no effect as res judicata against the plaintiff because the parties later on came to another compromise (vide Ex. 1) dated 14th September 1925, and this was embodied in the decree of 21st October 1925. By this compromise the tenant bound himself to supply 8 cart loads of sal and 7 cart loads of other kinds of wood annually. It has been held that if a party does not put forward a plea of res judicata, he must be taken to have waived it and to have intentionally invited the Court to decide the case on the merits: see the case of Rajani Kumar Mitra v. Ajamaddin Bhuiya (1).

The question that next arises is whether this claim for the supply of wood is lawfully payable or deliverable. The trial Court held that it was not. The learned advocate for the appellant has contended that this position is not tenable in view of the fact that the compromise has merged in the decree. I consider that this argument must prevail, because I feel that I ought to follow the decision in the case of Ishan Chandra v. Moomraj Khan (2) which dissepated from the case of Sarjugsharan

Lal v. Dukhit Mahato (3). The former case has been followed in the case of Krishnalal Sadhu v. Pramila Bala Dasi (4) and in a still later case namely that of Girischandra Singha v. Mahammad Rausan Mian (5). In this last case, it was held that although an enhancement of rent might be in contravention of the provisions of S. 29, Ben. Ten. Act, still, since the compromise by which the enhancement was effected was embodied in a decree, it operated as an estoppel by judgment. But even apart from this question, it seems to me that it cannot be said that the stipulation as to supply of wood which was effected by the compromise was illegal in view of S. 113, Ben. Ten. Act, and was in the nature of an abwab. The rent was enhanced by the Record of Rights in 1907 and the compromise took place in the suit of 1910. But the terms of the compromise show that the status of the tenancy was being raised. The tenancy was a temporary one, but by the compromise, it was stated that the rent would not be enhanced nor would the tenant be liable to pay additional rent for any increase of area. The learned Munsif observed that there was really no occasion for enhancement of rent only three years after the previous enhancement of 1907. But that could not prevent the parties from coming to such a compromise in the suit of 1910. The learned Munsif further observed that the revenue officer might settle a higher rent at the time of the next settlement, as the mouza in question was within Government khas mehal. But that again could not prevent an arrangement from being binding as between the tenant and his under tenant.

On this point, see the case of Tayefa Khatun v. Surendrakumar Sen (6). That in these circumstances, S. 29 or S. 113, Ben. Ten. Act, has no application derives support from the case of Rampadarath Singh v. Sohrai Koeri (7), which I think applies to the facts of the present case, in any case as the learned advocate for the appellant has pointed out, the later compromise of 1925, was certainly more than 15 years after the previous settlement of 1907. This compromise was embodied in a decree and it is upon this decree that the present claim is based. On these grounds I think that it must be held that the present suit is one for recovery of rent. Consequently there was an appeal to the District Judge. I therefore reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court and remand the case for hearing on merits. The present appeal is allowed with costs. No order is necessary on the application.

Appeal No. 3051 of 1930, Decided on 11th May 1932, against appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Pabna, Bogra, D/- 22nd August 1930.

(a) Will—Construction — Absolute estate granted to daughters of testator.

A devise in general terms, where the testator simply intends that the estate shall vest in the daughters in the event of the widows not exercising their power of adoption, without the addition of words of inheritance, will pass the entire estate of the testator, unless a contrary intention appears from the context.

A clause in a will ran as follows : "If you do not exercise the right to adopt given, both of you shall enjoy my properties, and on your death, all the properties shall vest in my two daughters. The said two daughters shall live in my homestead and shall perform the devsheba and other ceremonies. If they do not do so, whoever shall perform the said sheba, etc., the properties shall vest in him."

Held : that the testator intended to give the daughters an absolute estate. [P 72 C 2, P 73 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law—Will — Daughters—Presumption.

There is no presumption in regard to a daughter that in every case she takes less than what would be taken by a male [P 73 C 1]

(c) Will—Construction — Absolute estate conveyed by words—Words cannot be cut down by supposed presumptions.

When the words in a will convey an absolute estate they cannot be cut down by any supposed presumption. Such presumption only arises when the document is uncertain or ambiguous.

[P 73 C 1]

(d) Will—Construction—Meaning of testator is to be found out from document as whole.

In construing a will, one has to try and find out the meaning of a testator, taking the whole of the document together and to give effect to his meaning. The primary duty of a Court is to ascertain from the language of the testator what are his intentions. [P 73 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for possession on establishment of title to the properties mentioned in the plaint. The plaintiffs' claim based on their right of inheritance as the agnates and reversionary heirs of one Krishna Sundar Adhikary, was resisted by the contesting defendants in the suit. According to the defendants, Krishna Sundar died leaving a will, under which his daughter Kumudini got an absolute estate in the properties in suit, and the plaintiffs could not have any title to the same. It may be mentioned that the first three defendants are the daughters of Kumudini, while defendant 4 is the husband of defendant 1. The clause in the will of Krishna Sundar, most material for the purpose of the decision of this case is the sixth, and it runs as follows :

"If you do not exercise the right to adopt given, both of you shall enjoy my properties, and on your death, all the properties shall vest in my two daughters. The said two daughters shall live in my homestead and shall perform the devsheba and other ceremonies. If they do not do so whoever shall perform the said sheba &c. the properties shall vest in him."

The Courts below have differed in the construction of this clause in the will. According to the learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court, no absolute right to the properties was conferred by the will to Krishna Sundar's daughter. The learned District Judge, in the Court of appeal below, has however held that an absolute title had vested in the daughter of Krishna Sundar, and in that view of the case the plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed. The decision of the Court below has been challenged by the plaintiffs appellants; and it has been urged on their behalf that the construction placed by the Court below upon Cl. 6 of the will, which has been set out above, was erroneous.

The will before us is a very simple document. The testator gave life estates to his two widows: the widows were given the power of adoption, which was not exercised. On failure of adoption by the widows, the testator's properties vested in the daughters. Upon the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge, the daughters lived in the testator's homestead and carried on debshoba as enjoined by the father for a pretty long time. The only question arising upon the finding so arrived at, is whether there was intention in the testator to give the daughters an absolute estate, and that question must, upon a plain reading of Cl. 6 of the will, be answered in the affirmative. It is well settled now that there is no presumption in regard to a daughter that in every case she takes less than what would be taken by a male. When, in a case like the present, there are words conveying an absolute estate, they could not be cut down by any supposed presumption, such presumption only arising when the document is uncertain or ambiguous. The rule of construction in the case of a will is very well known. One has to try and find out the meaning of a testator, taking the whole of the document together, and to give effect to his meaning. In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain from the language of the testator what are his intentions. A devise in general terms, as in the present case, the testator simply intending that the estate shall vest in the daughters in the event of the widows not exercising their power of adoption, without the addition of words of inheritance, will pass the entire estate of the testator, unless a contrary intention appears from the context. Taking these principles of general application, as our guide in the matter of construction, we have no hesitation in coming to the only possible conclusion that the will of Krishna Sundar Adhicary conferred an absolute right on his daughters.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants before us, on the decisions of this Court in Surendra Nath v. Saroj Bandhu (1) and Hara Kumari Dasi v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (2), for the purpose of construing the will before us. In matters of construction of documents, decisions in other cases, do not, and cannot afford sufficient guidance; and the cases to which our attention has been drawn do not lay down any principle of general application, or any rule of construction other than those to which reference has been made above. In our judgment, the decision arrived at by the Court of appeal below is right, and must accordingly be affirmed. The appeal fails, and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 511 of 1930, Decided on 1st March 1932, against original order of Second Addl. Sub-Judge, Dacca, D/- 25th August 1930.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 17, Rr. 2 and 3—Suit decided on evidence of plaintiff and defendant in absence of plaintiff—Judge should act under R. 2—If suit is dismissed, decree is ex parte within Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9.

Where in the absence of the plaintiff a suit has been decided on merits upon some evidence given by the plaintiff and the evidence given by the defendant, the right of appeal depends upon what the Court did and not upon what the Court should have done. In such a case the Judge is not entitled to act under R. 3 but should act under R. 2, O. 17. Where however in such a case he dismisses the plaintiff's suit on merits the decree of dismissal made is ex parte within O. 9 : (Cases referred). [P 74 C 1,2]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 13—Plaintiff's strenuous attempt to get witnesses to Court is sufficient cause.

Where the plaintiff was doing his best and acting very strenuously in collecting his witnesses and bringing them in Court and was therefore late in attendance and his suit was dismissed on merits in his absence under O. 9, R. 13, he need not be debarred from having his remedy, although in a wrong headed and muddle-headed way he was doing his best to have his witnesses in Court and his suit should be restored. Rankin, C. J.—In this case there was a suit brought by the plaintiff to set aside a compromise decree which had been entered into on his behalf by his mother when he was a minor. The decree was in September 1926, the plaintiff attained majority in 1927 and the events that we are concerned with happened in January and February 1930. The suit was in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Dacca. On 31st January 1930 the plaintiff wanted time because of communal disturbance in the town and he was given time till next day. Then he filed a petition saying that his pleader had not come to Court and he was given an adjournment till 5th February. On the 5th he filed another petition asking for examination of a witness on commission. The Judge was not willing to give him an adjournment on that ground though he was prepared, if necessary, to consider whether that should be done during the trial. Consequently on 5th February the suit was taken up. The plaintiff was examined but his examination was not concluded and as it was late in the day the suit was adjourned to the next day. There seems to be no doubt that the plaintiff had not been attending diligently to this matter and when the suit was called on on the 5th he made up his mind to do what he could and it seems and we accept it as a fact that to get his witnesses he went off that very day to the district of Mymensingh and came back with some witnesses on the morning of the 6th; but he must have been something like an hour late in attending the Court because the learned Subordinate Judge waited 40 minutes and then took some evidence and then dismissed the suit on the merits.

The plaintiff applied to have the suit restored and the first question is whether he was entitled to do that or whether his only remedy was to appeal from the decree. I confess there is a good deal to be said in favour of the view that where a suit has been decided upon some evidence given by the plaintiff and the evidence given by the defendant the right of appeal depends upon what the Court did and not upon what the Court should have done and on those lines there is a good deal to be said in favour of the view that the proper remedy is by way of appeal. It seems however that, in a number of cases a different view has been taken not always in cases exactly on all fours. Cases where a different view has in substance been taken are the cases of Enatulla Basunia v. Jiban Mohan Roy (1), Ram Charan Lal v. Ragubir Singh (2) and Shashi Bhusan Kumar v. Dwarka Prosad Marwari (3), and in other cases. It seems quite clear that the learned Judge was not entitled to act under R. 3, O. 17, Civil P. C., but he, it seems, should have acted under R. 2 of that order and as he dismissed the plaintiff's suit I am disposed to treat it on the line of the authority to which I have referred, as though the decree of dismissal had been a decree made ex parte. The plaintiff's evidence had not been completed and the suit was dismissed in his absence. So although the learned Judge has wrongly proceeded to call the defendant's evidence, I think we may treat it as a case coming within O. 9.

That being so, the question is whether there is sufficient cause for the plaintiff being late. Now, in a sense there is not sufficient cause because the plaintiff ought to have done his work of collecting his witnesses earlier and he ought to have got before the learned Judge sooner than he did. But it is evident that the man was doing his best and acting very strenuously in collecting his witnesses and bringing them in Court on the morning of the 6th and I do not think that we are debarred by terms of O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., from giving him his remedy when in a wrong-headed and muddle-headed way he was doing his best to have his witnesses before the Court. That being so, I am of opinion that we ought to allow the appeal, set aside the decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit and direct that the plaintiff's suit be restored. I think however that the appellant ought to pay the respondents' costs of this appeal but we do not make it a condition precedent. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs. There will be no order for costs in the Court below on the application.

relatives omitted—Omission amounts to sufficient defect so as to revoke probate.

It is the duty of the person applying for grant of probate to bring to the notice of the Court who are the persons who prima facie have a claim on the estate. Where the applicant only mentions the names of some persons as having such claim but omits to mention the names of other relatives having claim on the estate of the testator and in consequence of the omission they are not cited, the proceedings are radically defective in substance. The failure to mention the existence of the relatives and to have them represented and cited is defect sufficient to revoke the probate.

The person to whom probate is granted under such circumstances cannot contend that a long series of years have elapsed from the grant of probate and it would be well nigh impossible to prove the will by reason of lapse of time, death of parties and witnesses and destruction of records, as the difficulties could have been avoided by prudent action on his part: A I R 1931 Cal 713 and A I R 1928 P C 2, Foll.

Judgment.—The will concerned in this case is alleged to have been executed by one Ganga Bishnu De on 17th September 1888. He died about a month after, leaving a brother named Ram Gobinda De and a widow, a widowed sister and three infant daughters who were then residing with their mother in the house of Ram Gobinda. On 17th December 1889 Ram Gobinda as executor made a petition for probate giving in the petition the names of the widow and the widowed sister and stating that they were under the will entitled to enjoy the profits of the estate left by Ganga Charan and also saying that his own son Jagatbandhu was the owner of the said property by virtue of the will. Citation was issued on the widow and the widowed sister. There was no contest and on the other hand there was a petition purporting to have been made by the widow and the widowed sister consenting to the grant. On 11th August 1890 letters of administration were ordered to issue on the footing that there was no opposition, but there was prima facie proof of the will, and that the applicant was a legatee under the will. There is some doubt however whether the grant was of letters of administration or of probate, because in the order by which the grant was issued it was said that letters of administration were to issue, while an endorsement in the order sheet of the case states that it was probate that was granted.

Ram Gobinda died soon after, and thereupon his son Jagatbandhu applied for letters of administration on 5th December 1890, and obtained the same on 28th January 1891. The records of this case have been destroyed and there is nothing to show what proceedings took place in it. On 19th December 1928 Menaka Sundari, one of the daughters, applied for revocation of the probate and the letters of administration, obtained respectively by Ram Gobinda and Jagatbandhu. The main ground alleged was that the three daughters had no notice or knowledge of the cases and that though they were infants, no guardian had been appointed on their behalf, nor any citation issued, so far as they were concerned. The Judge has upheld the objection and revoked the grant. The sons of Jagatbandhu have preferred this appeal and Menaka Sundari is the respondent. We called upon the appellants to produce the probate and the letters of administration but they have not been produced, it being said that they cannot be found.

As regards the probate it has been argued before us on behalf of the appellant that no citation was necessary because S. 62, Probate and Administration Act (5 of 1881) which states what the petition for probate or letters of administration with the will should contain does not require the names of the relatives of the testator to be given, while S. 64 which deals with the contents of a petition for letters of administration on the footing of intestacy expressly requires such particulars to be given. There is no force in this contention because though there is this difference between the two sections, which merely describe what the respective petitions should contain, S. 69 says:

"It shall be lawful for the District Judge or District Delegate . . . to issue citation calling upon all persons having or claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of probate on letters of administration," and S. 50, Illus. (b) shows that a grant made without citing parties who ought to have been cited is fit to be revoked. It cannot be seriously urged that, it is not the duty of the applicant to bring to the notice of the Court who are the persons who prima facie have a claim on the estate. If the applicant says in his petition, as the applicant in the present case did, that the widow and the widowed sister were such persons and omitted to state that there were three minor daughters left by the testator and in consequence of the omission they were not cited the proceedings were radically defective in substance.

Arguments were then advanced on behalf of the appellants to show that a long series of years have elapsed since the probate was granted, and so it would be well nigh impossible to prove the will at this distance of time, that the daughters had in fact knowledge of the proceedings and that as they were living under the guardianship of their mother who herself was cited and had appeared and consented to the grant, no other result would have followed even if they had been cited. We agree with the findings of the Judge that it has not been proved that the respondent was aware of the will at any time before when she alleges she came to know of it or has taken any benefit under it or that the estate has been dealt with in a way inconsistent with its being joint family property. It is not necessary to go into the question whether the widow or the widowed sister was duly served or whether the consent that purported to be given by them was really their consent because the failure to mention the existence of the daughters and to have them represented and cited was a defect sufficient to revoke the probate: see Haimabati Mitra v. Kunja Mohan Das (1), and the cases cited in it. The other arguments noted above are mostly met by the observation of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ramananda Kuer v. Kalawati Kuer (2) by which very similar arguments were overruled and which were as follows:

"And as against the difficulties in the defendant's way by reason of lapse of time, death of parties and witnesses and destruction of records it has to be remembered that much of it might have been avoided by prudent action on the part of the propounder e.g., by taking proper and necessary steps to have the will proved per tests in the presence of an independent guardian for the infant daughters."

As regards the argument that the mother would have been appointed then guardian we are not prepared to place

2. A I R 1928 P C 2=107 I C 14=55 I A 18=7 Pat. 221 (P C).

much weight on it. As regards the grant of letters of administration to Jagat-bandhu it has already been stated that the records relating to this matter are not available. The appellants have not produced the grant on the allegation that it is missing. There is little doubt however that the grant was a de bonis grant such as is made in favour of a universal or a residuary legatee or a new representative. The practice in such cases is to file a petition disclosing the fact of the former grant and to annex the grant if possible with the petition. There is no reason to suppose that this was not done. Citations have to be issued, but the respondent says she never got any notice of the proceedings, ordinarily her own denial would not have been sufficient, but judging from the short interval that elapsed between the grant of the probate and the application for letters of administration, we think we shall not be wrong in supposing that her denial is true.

The result is that, in our opinion, the appeal ought not to succeed. It is accordingly dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs.

Gopendra Nath Das and Byomkesh Bose—for Appellant.

Bijan Kumar Mukerji and Apurbandhan Mukerji—for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case it appears that one Sarat Kumar Roy presented his own petition for adjudication in insolvency on 25th September 1929, and that on that date the usual order was made to admit the petition. On 4th December a certain creditor who appears to have been No. 1 in the list of creditors filed by the debtor asked the Court to appoint an interim receiver. The Court did on that day appoint an interim receiver and notice of the application was given to the debtor. On 3rd January 1930, the same creditor applied to the Court for an order upon the receiver directing him to serve notice on the tenant at Calcutta "for paying rent of the house to him" and for certain other matters. It may here be explained that there was a certain house at Chandernagore which the insolvent's wife claimed as her own she having purchased it with her own money.* There was also a house in Calcutta which was the occupation of a tenant with reference to which, as I understand there was a claim by the wife under a deed of gift from insolvent. But from the beginning the position was that these two houses were claimed by the wife. Now the creditor's application that the receiver should be directed to serve notice on the tenant was entirely a harmless application.

I should have thought that the receiver under his ordinary powers would give notice of any claim—if he thought there was any claim—to the tenant and after that if the tenant paid any rent to the wife he would be under a liability when the receiver established that the properties belonged to the insolvent to pay the rent over again. The Court made an order directing notice to be served upon the tenant not to pay rent to any other person excepting the receiver. The tenant was not obliged to obey that order at all; merely he was under the risk that if he paid to a wrong person he would have to pay twice. That being so there was nothing wrong with that order even considering the fact that the wife had not been a party. The order was merely for giving a notice to the tenant such as the receiver might perfectly well issue without any order from the Court. Then the matter proceeded and the creditor asked the Court for attachment of the house of the petitioner for insolvency purchased in the benami of his wife. What this proceeding was supported to be I confess I did not at first understand, but it has been explained to us that it was supported to have been made under S. 21, Provincial Insolvency Act. If so I can only say that it was an abuse of the section. That is a section which gives powers to the Court which it may exercise at the time of admitting the petition and at any other time. It may, for instance, order the debtor to give security for his appearance if he is expected to abscond; that might be a reasonable thing to do. In the same way it may order the attachment by actual seizure of the whole or any part of the property in the possession or under the control of the debtor excepting such things as are exempted from execution by the Civil Procedure Code; and the proviso is to the effect that an order under Cl. (2) is not to be made unless the Court is satisfied that the debtor with intent to defeat or delay his creditors or to avoid any process of the Court has absconded or has failed to disclose or has concealed, destroyed or removed any documents likely to be of use to his creditors or any part of his property. To apply that provision to the case of an immovable property where the Court knows that the property is claimed by the wife and that the petitioner and his wife are both saying that the property does not belong to the insolvent on the mere ground that the insolvent has not declared it as an asset is of course a thoroughly unjust and absurd procedure.

These summary powers are intended to prevent the debtor from making away with what is his property; documents and books of account which might be used against his property that he might run away with and take away out of the reach of the creditors. Merely because there is a dispute between the creditors and the insolvent as to whether certain property belongs to the insolvent or his wife to pass an order to attach a house under S. 21 is an unreasonable proceeding. Property in the possession of the wife and claimed by the wife having been attached the wife had only to appear before the learned Judge and she was entitled to an order cancelling that attachment as a matter of right. The phrase "property in the possession or under the control of the debtor" was never intended to apply to a house claimed by the wife because the debtor and his wife are living together. Now this order having been made, the wife on 29th January 1930 did apply in substance to have these proceedings cancelled. As regards the Calcutta house, apparently by some confusion it was thought that the order of 3rd January 1930, amounted in some way to an attachment of the rent. In any case the lady applied and she was treated as a person making a claim. It appears that she prayed for an inquiry of her claim petition by the receiver and though her property had been attached in her absence and she wanted the receiver to inquire and find out after all it was her property she was ordered to deposit certain costs before the receiver would begin the inquiry.

Then the claimant filed her sale-deed and the receiver appears to have made a report on or about 10th June. On 24th June the lady applied for an order directing the receiver not to take delivery of possession or realize rent of the premises mentioned in the petition. The receiver was directed by the learned Judge on the 27th to proceed to Calcutta and realize the outstanding arrears of rent and apply a portion towards necessary repairs. All this was done before there was any adjudication as to whether this property belonged to the insolvent or not. The tenant was ordered to pay the whole of the arrears by a certain time. What obligation the tenant was under to obey that order I do not know. However it appears now that the tenant has paid a certain amount of rent to the receiver and that that amount is now in Court and the tenant is apparently continuing to pay his rent into Court. Lastly the claimant asked that the investigation of the claim matter by the receiver be stayed and the matter be dealt with by the Court on evidence. By an order of 2nd August, the learned Judge declared that the receiver was already in possession of the property and the receiver was directed to continue his inquiry into the question of ownership. From that order the wife appeals to us. In my judgment the proper order is to put the matter back into the position from which it never ought to have been changed in the absence of a proper adjudication as to whether the property belongs to the insolvent's estate or not. I propose to set aside the order of attachment of 13th January 1930; I propose to declare that the lady was in possession of the Chandernagore house and by her tenant of the Calcutta house at the time of the insolvency; and I propose to declare further that unless and until a creditor or the receiver at his own risk as to costs brings a proper motion before the learned Judge or a proper suit for a declaration that those two houses do not belong to the lady but belong to the insolvent, the possession which she originally had is not to be disturbed.

As the tenant of the Calcutta property is paying his rent into Court that arrangement for the present need not be interfered with; but unless within six weeks from today a proper motion against the lady is filed before the learned Judge or other proper proceedings to make a claim on behalf of the estate against the lady are instituted, then at the end of six weeks the lady is to be entitled to receive the rent out of Court subject to any right that the receiver may have to bring a motion to recover the money from her upon establishment of title of the insolvent. This appeal must succeed with costs against the creditor No. 1; hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Appeal No. 2259 of 1928, Decided on 30th June 1932, against the appellate decree of First Addl. Sub-Judge, Mymensingh, D/- 13th June 1928.

(a) Bengal Municipal Act (1884), Ss. 85 and 89—Imposition of personal and property tax in same ward is legal.

As regards the proviso to section prohibiting the realisation of both kinds of tax in the same ward, S. 85 must be read in conjunction with S. 89 of the Act. S. 89 is an exception to the general rule stated in S. 85. Where in the same ward of a Municipality a personal tax is realised from private persons living in that ward as from those living in the other wards of the Municipality but there being some Government buildings in that ward, rates on the values of those buildings were realised from Government, in such a case there is no contravention of the provision of S. 85. [P 79 C 2; P 80 C 1]

(b) Bengal Municipal Act (1884), S. 7—Personal tax under old Act—Increase in rate—Sanction of Government is not necessary.

Sanction of Local Government is not required for increasing the rate of the personal tax imposed under the old Act. The sanction mentioned in S. 7 relates to the removal of taxes realised under the old Act or to a change of one kind of rate to another kind of rate. It has no application to an increase of the rate of the old tax. [P 80 C 1]

(c) Bengal Municipal Act (1884), S. 85—Personal tax does not attach to any holding.

The personal tax imposed under S. 85 does not attach itself to any particular holding but it is a tax imposed upon a person occupying a holding within the Municipality according to "circumstance and property." [P 80 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff, who is a Deputy Magistrate and was posted in Mymensingh during the period in suit, against the order of dismissal of his suit for recovery of Rs. 168 (being the amount which according to him he had to pay to the Mymensingh Municipality "illegally and inequitably") the amount of tax realised from him at the rate of Rs. 9 per quarter during the first two quarters of the year 1920-21 and at the rate of Rs. 15 per quarter during the last two quarters of the same year and all the four quarters of each of the two following years. Both the Courts below have concurrently found against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit.

The facts are that the plaintiff was a Deputy Magistrate living in the town of Mymensingh and originally drawing Rs. 300 a month. His salary was subsequently raised to Rs. 500 a month. He was assessed originally at the rate of Rs. 9 per quarter, that is, one per cent. on the annual income and from October 1920 he was assessed at Rs. 15 a quarter it being alleged that his salary was Rupees 500 a month. The tax realised from the plaintiff was what is called in the Bengal Municipal Act, a personal tax. The points taken in this appeal are the following which may be considered in their order. The first is that personal tax could not be imposed without the sanction of the Government under S. 85, Bengal Municipal Act (3 of 1884 B. C.). This objection is founded on the ground that in Ward No. 1 where the plaintiff resided for the greater part of the period in suit there were Government buildings which were taxed on their annual value and in view of the last proviso to S. 85 the Municipality had no jurisdiction to impose personal tax as well as a rate on the annual value of the holdings in one and the same ward. It has also been argued that the Municipality could not impose personal tax without the previous sanction of the Local Government under that section. This objection must be overruled. The Mymensingh Municipality was formed under Act 6 of 1868 which empowered it to impose personal tax and this form of tax has been imposed since its creation. The Act of 1868 was repealed by Act 5 of 1876 by Ss. 2 and 7 by which all impositions made under the previous Act were allowed to stand and to be considered to be made under that Act. Act 5 of 1876 in its turn was repealed by the present Bengal Municipal Act, Ss. 2 and 7 of which make the same reservation with regard to the impositions made under the previous law S. 85 of the present Act contemplates the imposition of a personal tax or a rate on the annual value of the holdings for the first time since the creation of the Municipality. It says that the Commissioners may, with the sanction of the Local Government, impose one or other or both of the following taxes: namely, a tax upon persons and a rate on the annual value of holdings. It has no retrospective effect and if it has any, the imposition of such tax under the previous Act has been sanctioned by the present Act of 1884. As regards the proviso to the section prohibiting the realisation of both kinds of tax in the same ward, S. 85 must be read in conjunction with S. 89 of the Act. S. 85 lays down that in the same ward the Municipality cannot realise personal tax from some persons and tax on property from some other person. This is a general rule. S. 89 however says that in any municipality in which tax on persons is imposed, no tax shall be assessed on any person in respect of his occupation of a holding in any building the property of Government. This section apparently is an exception to the general rule laid down in S. 85.

It relates to the part of the municipality in which tax on persons is imposed. It says where tax on persons is imposed such tax would not be realised from a person in occupation of a Government building. Instead of that the municipality has to levy on such building a rate on their annual value to be ascertained in the manner prescribed in S. 101. In Ward No. 1 of the Mymensingh Municipality it so happens that personal tax is realised from private persons living in that ward as from those living in the other wards of the municipality but there being some Government buildings in that ward rates on the values of those buildings were realised from the Government. In our opinion in such a case there is no contravention of the provision of S. 85.

It is argued in the second place that under the old Act personal tax was at the rate of 8 as. per cent. whereas the present Municipality enhanced it to Rupee 1 per cent. It is said that under S. 7 rate, tax, fee or tolls that had been duly imposed under the previous Act should be deemed as duly imposed under the present Act and such rate, tax, fee or tolls shall continue to be levied until the Commissioners at a meeting, with the sanction of the Local Government, shall otherwise direct. On this language of the section it is argued that the tax at the rate of 8 as. per cent. ought to be continued under the present Act and that the Municipality had no power to increase it from 8 as. to Re. 1 per cent. without the sanction of the Local Government. We do not think that this is the meaning which can be given to the words: "until the Commissioners at a meeting with the sanction of the Local Government shall otherwise direct."

These words are intended to enable the Commissioners with the sanction of the Government to make such alteration in the rate, tax etc., that were realised under the old Act as to remove them altogether or as has been provided in the Act itself, change one kind of rate to another kind of rate. Even if there be any force in this argument in the present case it must be deemed to have none because it was not taken at the trial like some other points that will be noticed later. There are no findings of fact by the Courts below to support the objection.

The third contention is that the respondent Municipality had no power to increase a tax within the period of assessment of 3 years from Rs. 9 to

Rs. 15. There is a great deal of force in this argument; but unfortunately this objection too was not taken at the trial. S. 93, Bengal Municipality Act, contains provision which empowers the Municipality to enhance an assessment upon the ground that it appears to them to be inadequate and to have been so made owing to mistake and fraud. The power is curtailed by the limitation that not only the present assessment should appear to the Municipality to be inadequate but it must also be shown to have been made owing to mistake or fraud. As the learned appellate Court remarked, if this objection were taken at the trial we do not know what the defendant would have proved were he called upon to meet such a case. We cannot allow this objection to be raised at a subsequent stage of the suit when no issue and consequently no evidence were directed towards it. The same must be said with regard to the second contention noted above. If it were raised before the trial Court, the Municipality would have been able to show that there had been no illegal increase in the tax realised under the old Act.

The next contention is that there is no holding in respect of which the plaintiff has been taxed. It is not very easy to understand this objection. It seems that the plaintiff had changed his residence from one place to another but no particular holding was taxed. The personal tax imposed under S. 85 does not attach itself to any particular holding but it is a tax imposed upon a person occupying a holding within the Municipality according to "circumstance and property." These are all the main grounds taken on behalf of the appellant in this case some of which undoubtedly have great force and would have met with better result if they were raised at the trial.

In the result the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

As the appeal fails on the merits we have not considered the question as to whether or not a second appeal lies in this case under S. 102, Civil P. C.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendants 3 and 5 from a decree by which the plaintiffs' claim for recovery of arrears of rent for a certain ferry alleged to have been leased out to their father by the plaintiffs has been decreed against them and some others. One of the contentions which was attempted to be urged on behalf of the appellants was that no lease was taken and so no money was due; but in view of the evidence, oral and documentary that there is on the record and which amply establishes the fact that such a lease was taken and that the amount claimed was due under it, this contention was not eventually pressed. The other contention, which is of considerable substance, is that the decree, such as it is, is not supportable. The appellants' father Tamizuddin died leaving his mother, a widow, three sons and three daughters. All these heirs were impleaded in the suit as defendants. Two of these heirs, namely, defendants 6 and 8, were minors and as they were not properly represented, the suit as against them was dismissed. It was decreed against the others, on contest against defendants 3 and 5 and ex parte as against the rest. The entire amount due from Tamizuddin as claimed was decreed against these defendants, they being held "liable for the aforesaid decretal amount to the extent of the assets of Tamizuddin inherited by them."

Now, all authorities are agreed that if the estate of Tamizuddin had been distributed after his death each of his heirs would have been liable for his debts to the extent only of a share proportionate to his own share of the estate (Pirthipal Singh v. Husaini Jan (1), Amba Shankar v. Sayad Ali (2), Bussunteram Marwary v. Kamaluddin Ahmed (3) (at p. 428). What we are concerned with here is a case in which there has, in fact, been no distribution. Two questions arise: 1st. Whether the creditor may sue any heir in possession of the whole or any part of the estate without joining the other heirs as defendants, for realization of the entire debt, and if so, whether a decree for the entire debt passed in such a suit may be enforceable against all the assets that are in his possession or only against that particular heir's share in the estate; and 2nd. What sort of decree should be passed in the present case. So far as the first question is concerned the opinion of this Court has been consistently in the affirmative. Two decisions in support of this view may be cited. In the case of Muttyjan v. Ahmed Ally (4), three earlier decisions, amongst others, were referred to, viz., Mt. Nuzeerun v. Ameerooddeen (5), in which the analogy of a Hindu widow sued in her representative character was applied, Assamathennessa Bibi v. Roy Lutchemput Singh (6), in which such analogy was ignored but the procedure prescribed in the Hedaya for the guidance of Mahomedan Law officers was relied upon, and a much earlier decision of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut in Kishwur Khan v. Jewan Khan (7), in which neither of the aforesaid two views was adopted but it was held that creditors' suits were to be regarded as administration suits. The learned Judges held that the proper principle to apply was to treat the creditors' suit as an administration suit, and as such an heir in possession is bound to account for any assets that may have come into his hands and to that extent he is liable to pay the creditors and that the residue, if any, is to be divided amongst the heirs. The case was very unfavourably commented on by Mahmud, J., in a very exhaustive judgment in the Full Bench case of Jafri Begum v. Amir Muhammad Khan (8), notwithstanding that it was followed in a later decision of this Court in the case of Amir Dulhin v. Baij Nath Singh (9). The learned Judges appear to have felt the force of the contention that was urged against the view. They observed :

"If we rightly apprehended his argument, it was directed to this, that the amount decreed ought to be proportionate to the interest in the estate of the particular heir, and that when it is sought to recover the whole of the debt all the heirs ought to be before the Court. Stated in that form, the proposition is one of which there is much in favour. An individual heir cannot be said with strict propriety to represent his co-heirs in a suit brought by a creditor to enforce his claim against the property of the deceased proprietor. The right of each heir is several and distinct, and arises, as has been said, immediately on the death of the person whose heir he is. There is no intermediate vesting and no rule of Mohamedan law by which an individual heir, as such, may be taken to represent either the estate or the heirs generally."

Having made these observations and quoted Jafri Begum's case (8), and other cases in support of them, the learned Judges referred to the case of Amir Dulhin's case (9), and followed it giving some additional reason in support of the decision in that case. The reason why they did so was put in the following words :

"And we think that apart from the consideration that it is an authority of this Court which has remained unquestioned now for several years, it embodies a salutary rule and one to which effect ought to be given."

The principle enunciated in Jafri Begum's case (8) which, as already stated, was also acknowledged as correct, in Amir Dulhin's case (9), though not acted upon therein has been adopted in later decisions in Allahabad : see Dullu Mal v. Hari Das (10), and the more recent decisions in Bombay : see Bhagirathibai v. Roshanbai (11), Shahasaheb v. Sadas Shiv (12) and Lala Miya v. Manu- bibi (13), and has also been approved of in Madras Abdul Majeeth v. Krishnama-chariar (14). In a recent decision, this Court has re-affirmed the proposition that in Mahomedan law there is no representation of the family as under the Hindu Law by one or more members of it, and expressed an opinion that the decisions of this Court which have proceeded upon an assumption that the doctrine of representation is applicable to Mahomedan families may require reconsideration. Notwithstanding all this we should not be prepared to make a reference to the Full Bench to examine a settled view of law as propounded in this Court ever since the days of the Sadar Dewany Adwlt: Kishwar Khan v. Jewun Khan (7), and which was upheld in Amir Dulhin's case (9), in a considered judgment in which the force of the observations in Jafri Begum's case (8) was fully recognized.

We now arrive at a point where it becomes necessary to consider the second question formulated above. The principle which this Court has acted upon, treating the creditors' suit as an administration suit, in our opinion, cannot, and should not, be applied indiscriminately to all cases in which some only of the heirs are sued for recovery of the entire debt. It has its limitations. There are weighty reasons why it should not be applied to suits other than those in which some only of the heirs are sued, as being in possession of a part or the whole estate or assets not merely for themselves but on behalf of all the heirs. The decisions of this Court, to which we have referred as adopting this principle, sufficiently show that the suits concerned therein were against some of the heirs who were in possession of the whole or the part so as to be bound to account for the same to the rest, or in other words were against some of the heirs who were in possession of more than their share of the inheritance. It is only on such a footing that the analogy of an administration suit can, with any show of reason, be invoked. Where however that is not the case, but the heirs are made parties as being in possession of their shares of inheritance only, the principle cannot possibly be of any application. In the present case all the heirs were made parties, suggesting that each was in possession of the share he or she had individually inherited. In our opinion it would be wholly wrong to apply this principle to such a case. Here, two of the heirs, namely, defendants 6 and 8 have been absolved, the suit against them being dismissed because they were not properly represented; and the other heirs if they are made liable for the entire debt, will have no right of contribution as against them. Either under the Mahomedan law or according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience which we are bound to look to where, as here, both the parties to the suit are not Mahomedans: see S. 24, Act 6 of 1871, the plaintiff should not recover from the remaining defendants anything more than their proportionate share of the debt from out of the assets they have inherited in their shares. This view is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Bussunteram Marwary v. Kamaluddin (3). A Hindu creditor of a deceased Mahomedan sued his heirs four in number to recover money due from him alleging that they were in possession of the estate left by him; the debt was barred against three of the heirs but not against the fourth, one Kamaluddin who had made a part payment. In the Court below the entire claim was decreed against the fourth heir, the suit against the other three being dismissed. It was held that under the circumstances of the case and having regard to the rule of Mahomedan law, the creditor was not entitled to a decree against Kamaluddin for more than his own proportionate share of the debt and that on principles of justice, equity and good conscience it would not be equitable to hold him liable for the whole of the debt. The learned Judges observed:

"What the Mahomedan law says is that only when the estate is completely involved that the heirs cannot take the estate and a decision amongst them cannot be allowed before the debts are discharged. We therefore hold that in the circumstances of the present case the plaintiffs, under the Mahomedan law, can only obtain as against the two-fifth share of Kamaluddin a proportionate share of the money due to him... The debt due to the plaintiff is indeed an indivisible one; and the plaintiff would, under ordinary circumstances, be entitled to realise his dues from the whole estate, or from any portion of it, as he might choose. But the circumstances that have occurred in the present case are such that it would be inequitable to insist that Kamaluddin's share should bear the whole of the debt. The claim of the plaintiff as against the heirs is now barred by the law of limitation and their shares having been exempted Kamaluddin would not be entitled to demand contribution from them, in the event of the whole debt being realized from him or from his share. That being the case, it would not be just or equitable to hold the share of Kamaluddin answerable for the whole claim... If Kamaluddin was in a position to call upon the other heirs for contribution, there would be no difficulty in decreeing the whole claim as against his share. But, in the circumstances of the case, we are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to charge the share of Kamaluddin with any more than a proportionate share of his dues."

The result is that in our opinion the appeal should be allowed in part and the decree made by the Court below in favour of the plaintiff and as against the defendants other than defendants 6 and 8 should be modified by reducing the amount of the claim to $71/88 \times \text{Rs. } 6,479.2.9 = \text{Rs. } 5,227.8.3$, representing the share of the debt proportionate to their share of inheritance. In other respects, the said decree will stand. The costs of this appeal will be awarded to the parties in proportion to their success.

Bansi Dewan and others—Defendants—Appellants.

v.

Majaharuddin Talukdar and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Appeals Nos. 9 and 10 of 1931, Decided on 25th February 1932, against order of Sub-Judge, Rajshahi, D/- 23rd July 1930.

(a) Practice—Retrial—Two rent suits decreed—Lower appellate Court remanding suits for retrial but making retrial dependent upon plaintiff paying costs within two months from arrival of record in trial Court—Costs not deposited within given time but allowed to be deposited subsequently—In one case deposit allowed to be taken out by defendant, and also to be returned at defendant's risk—Retrial held conditional and as costs were not paid in time suits stood dismissed—Although in one case deposit was allowed to be taken out and returned, that mistake could not revive suit once dismissed.

Two rent suits were decreed by the trial Court but on appeal the lower appellate Court remanded the cases for fresh trial upon payment of Rs. 15 in each case for costs, and went on to say: "If this cost is not paid within two months from the date of arrival of the record in the original Court, the suits shall be dismissed. If this cost is timely paid, there shall be a retrial." Cost however was not paid by plaintiff within the given time. Subsequently Court allowed the same to be deposited in Court. In one of the two cases the deposit was also allowed to be taken out by defendant and to be returned by defendant at his own risk.

Held: that the retrial order was conditional upon payment of costs within time proscribed in the order and the suits stood dismissed as the costs were not deposited within that time:

Held further: that although in one suit the deposit was allowed to be taken out and returned, such a mistake in the proceedings could not revive the suit which was once dismissed. [P 85 C 1, 2]

(b) Practice—Retrial—Although ordinarily one can rely upon Court and its clerk being sufficiently diligent to give notice when record is returned duty of making inquiry is on party.

It may be very natural in an ordinary case of retrial on remand to rely upon the Court and its clerks being sufficiently diligent to give notice of the return of the record, but the duty must be upon the party to make inquiry and if he makes no inquiry he has only himself to blame.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the defendants appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi whereby he reversed an order of the Munsif of Naogaon. It appears that the plaintiff brought two rent suits against different defendants, that in April 1925 these suits were decreed by the trial Court, that appeals were brought to the Subordinate Judge against the decrees and that on 14th February 1927, the Subordinate Judge first of all allowed the appeals, set aside the decrees and remanded the cases for fresh trial on the lines laid down by his judgment upon payment of Rs. 15 in each case for costs by the plaintiff to the defendants. His order went on to say:

"If this cost is not paid within two months from the date of arrival of the record in the original Court, the suit shall be dismissed. If this cost is timely paid, then there shall be a retrial."

It seems that the record was not received in the trial Court until 8th April 1927. Two months elapsed without the plaintiff paying the Rs. 15, but on 27th June Rs. 15 was deposited in Court in each case. That payment was made under an order to which the defendants were not parties. The plaintiff applied to the trial Court and he called the attention of the trial Court to the fact that he was out of time. The trial Court took the view that there was some excuse for being out of time and that the clerk in the office ought to have drawn the attention of the plaintiff's pleader at the time when the record was received back by the trial Court. It therefore made the order that the plaintiff should be allowed to deposit the money and it was deposited and the fact of the deposit was a few days afterwards brought to the notice of the pleader for the defendants. From time to time the question of rehearing of the suits was on the trial Court's list and the hearing was adjourned until some time in June 1928. In the meantime the Rs. 15 for costs was lying in the trial Court and it appears that on 18th November 1927, the pleader for the defendants got an order entitling him to take it but, and just a few days before the hearing was coming on, another order was made enabling the money to be returned by the defendants at their own risk. This incident of taking out and returning was in one of the two suits before us only and not in the other.

In these circumstances the learned Munsif, when the matter came before him on remand, held that the condition upon which alone the retrial was directed had not been complied with, that he had no jurisdiction to proceed with the rehearing of the suits, that the order allowing the costs to be deposited had done no harm in itself but it certainly could not amount to a valid order having regard to the terms upon which the retrial was directed. That matter came on appeal before the learned Subordinate Judge who took another view. He appears to have considered the original order of 14th February 1927, as a direction to the Court below would dismiss the suits if something was not done. He also considered that the fact that the return of the record was not brought to the notice of the plaintiff's pleader was an almost complete excuse for the plaintiff's pleader and the plaintiff for not complying with the term of the order. He therefore directed the trial Court to proceed with the hearing of the suits. From that order the present appeals have been brought. The first question is as to the meaning of the order of 14th February:

"If this cost is not paid within two months from the date of arrival of the record in the original Court, the suit shall be dismissed, this cost is timely paid, then there shall be a retrial."

It appears to me quite clear that the only right of the plaintiff to have a retrial was conditional upon his making the payment in time and that it was not necessary for the lower Court to exercise any sort of discretion in the matter. If the payment was not made within that time, the intention was that the suits should stand dismissed without further order. On that view it appears to me that the view taken by the learned Munsif was correct. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to think that, because it is inconvenient for pleaders to have to come and to ask from time to time whether records have been returned, and therefore to assist them the Court makes the practice of calling the fact of the return of the record and many other things to the notice of the pleaders, any failure of this endeavour on the part of the Court is a complete excuse in such a case as the present for the parties in not complying with their obligations under the decree. That seems to me to be entirely wrong. I cannot agree with the learned advocate for the respondent that the facts here show a great hardship so far as the plaintiff is concerned. It is true that there was a delay of two months in the return of the record. Accordingly the plaintiff had something like four months after the order in which to make the deposit. It may be very natural in an ordinary case to rely upon the Court and its clerks being sufficiently diligent to give notice of the return of the record. But the duty must be upon the party to make inquiry and if he makes no inquiry for a period of over four months he being the person whose right to a retrial is dependent upon making timely payment, I cannot say that he has any none except himself to blame. However that may be, it does seem to me that on the lapse of two months the plaintiff had lost his chance except possibly by proceeding to the Court which made the appellate decree and asking it in review for an extension of the time limited in the circumstances of the case. If the order was not a decree it may be that by going to the appellate Court he could have got the time extended under S. 148, Civil P. C., but that perhaps is a very doubtful question. He did nothing of the sort. He got an order ex parte for paying the money into Court and then the cases drifted on until this point which went to the jurisdiction was taken in Court.

In one of the two suits we have to consider whether the fact that the pleader could not resist taking the money out of Court on 18th November 1927 and returned it on 27th July 1928, is a fact which can operate to give the plaintiff a right to retrial. I have some difficulty in this matter but, on the whole, it does not seem to me possible that a suit which has been dismissed can be revived by such a mistake in the proceedings as that. If it were a question of appealing from the order of the appellate Court, no doubt by taking out this money he would have debarred himself from any right of appeal; but if the suit stood dismissed on a previous date some months before, it does not seem to me that the taking out of the money and returning it could possibly revive the suit or give jurisdiction to the trial Court when the decree of the appellate Court or the order of the appellate Court no longer justified a retrial. In these circumstances it appears to me that these appeals should be allowed, that the order of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside and the order of the Munsif restored with costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court. The hearing fee is assessed at two gold mohurs in each case. No order is necessary on the applications.

Judgment.—This rule is directed against an order of the Munsif of Rampurhat, dated 17th March 1932. For the purpose of making it clear how that order came into existence, it is necessary to recite certain facts. The present petitioner, Kali Charan Singha, on 6th December 1923, obtained decrees in his favour in eighteen suits which he had brought against a lady named Kiranbala and another lady named Bindubashini. A number of different bargadars holding under them were also defendants in the suits. The suits were for the recovery of khas possession and mesne profits in respect of a two-thirds share in certain properties, the plaintiff's right to that two-thirds share having already been established in antecedent litigation. It is to be observed that in those eighteen suits both Kiranbala and Bindubashini appeared and made various defences to the plaintiff's claim. The decrees having been made in favour of the plaintiff the defendants appealed and ultimately the matters in issue between the parties came before this Court in second appeal and the original decrees were affirmed by this Court on 9th August 1928, it being declared that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession which he was claiming and also to mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 4 until recovery of possession.

Early in the year 1929 the present petitioner Kali Charan Singha, as the decree-holder in the eighteen suits, applied for execution of those decrees and as a result of the execution proceedings he obtained khas possession of the lands claimed by him, but the matter of payment of the amount awarded by way of mesne profits was not proceeded with at that time, as negotiations were opened between the parties with regard to the payment of the mesne profits and costs. Eventually the execution proceedings aforementioned came to an end for want of prosecution. The parties however did not come to any settlement in the matter of the mesne profits and accordingly Kali Charan Singha, on 10th November 1930, instituted eighteen fresh execution cases and these are the cases out of which the order now complained of arises. Those cases were described as Title Execution Cases Nos. 117 to 134 of 1930, in the first Court of the Munsif of Rampurhat and in them the petitioner as decree-holder sought to recover mesne profits at the rate awarded to him for the period of three years prior to the institution of the suits and up to the date of delivery of possession.

In those execution cases Kiranbala, as one of the judgment-debtors lodged objections under S. 47, Civil P. C. and the whole matter was then registered as Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 37 of 1932. Kiranbala's objection took the form of an allegation that the decrees could not be put to execution because the amount due under them in respect of mesne profits had already in effect been paid upon an adjustment between the parties. The objection was eventually dismissed in default of prosecution. Subsequently (according to the statements made by the petitioner in his present petition) a man named Surendra Narain Singha who is said to be the reversionary heir of Shyama Charan, the husband of Kiranbala and who had been looking after and managing her affairs and conducting all the litigation on her behalf caused his sister Bindubashini (who as already mentioned was one of the defendants in the original suits) together with one Sushila Sundari, the widow of his predeceased brother Ashutosh Singha, to institute Proceedings in Lunacy (numbered 14 of 1931) under the provisions of Act 4 of 1912, in the Court of the District Judge, Murshidabad, praying that the judgment-debtor Kiranbala should be adjudged a lunatic and also praying for the appointment of Surendra Narain as guardian of her person. At the time when the order now complained of was made the lunacy matter was still pending though one Bibhuti Bhusan Singha, a pleader practising at Barhampur, had been appointed interim receiver of the estate of Kiranbala. Bibhuti Bhusan Singha as such receiver on 15th January 1932 put forward a further objection in the eighteen execution cases under S. 17, Civil P. C., alleging therein that Kiranbala had been a lunatic and of unsound mind from a time long antecedent to the institution of the eighteen suits brought against her by the present petitioner and that therefore all the decrees made in those eighteen suits including apparently the final decrees made by the High Court were made without jurisdiction and void inasmuch as the judgment debtor Kiranbala had not been properly "represented" as a lunatic at the time when those decrees were made.

It appears that since the date of the order now complained of, that is to say, on 21st April 1932, the lunacy proceedings have been determined. Kiranbala has been adjudged a lunatic and Bibhuti Bhusan has been appointed permanent manager of her property. The objections lodged by Bibhuti Bhusan were registered as Miscellaneous Judicial Cases Nos. 37 to 51 of 1932, and upon those cases coming on for hearing the petitioner Kali Charan Singha as the decree-holder in the original suits out of which the execution and Miscellaneous Judicial cases arise contested the objection put forward by the manager, on the ground inter alia that the validity of the original decrees could not be challenged in the execution cases and he contended that the decrees were valid and binding on Kiranbala and that the executing Court was not competent to enter upon any investigation into the question of whether or not Kiranbala was a lunatic at the time when the decrees were made. The present petitioner further contended that the objection put forward by the manager could not be put forward by him as such under S. 47, Civil P. C., in execution proceedings and that it was one that could only be raised by way of a suit. These contentions of the present petitioner as decree-holder were overruled by the learned Munsif of Rampurhat by his order dated 17th March 1932, that is to say, the order now complained of, and he decided that the petitions made by the manager were maintainable under S. 47, Civil P. C., and he fixed 9th April 1932 as a day for taking evidence to enable himself to come to a finding as to whether or not the judgment-debtor Kiranbala was of unsound mind at the date of the decrees in the original suits.

The main question which I have to determine is whether it was right for the learned Munsif to take it upon himself to go into the question of whether or not the eighteen decrees originally made on 6th December 1923, even though they were affirmed by this Court on 9th August 1928, were valid and binding on Kiranbala. In my opinion the law is that, broadly speaking, a Court executing a decree cannot go behind that decree and it must take the decree as it stands. Such a Court has no power to entertain any objection as to the validity of the decree (even if the decree is said to have been obtained by fraud) or as to the legality or correctness of the decree. There are a number of reported cases giving ample judicial authority for those propositions and I do not propose to refer to them in detail. The reason for that legal position is that a decree, even though it may not be according to law, is binding between the parties, unless and until it is set aside by way of appeal or revision or if it has already been dealt with by way of appeal or in revision then by an appropriate suit brought for the express purpose of questioning the validity of the decree. It seems to me difficult to say that the Court charged with the duty of executing a decree can even go into the question of whether that decree was made by a Court without territorial jurisdiction having regard to the terms of S. 21, Civil P. C., which says:

"No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice."

If no objection as to the territorial jurisdiction of the Court trying the case is to be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court a fortiori the matter cannot be canvassed before the Court which is merely concerned with the execution of the decree after it has been made: see per Wallis, C.J., in Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty (1). There is however on this point a decision of the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Gora Chand Halder v. Prafulla Kumar Roy (2); and the learned Munsif in making the order now challenged, seems to have misinterpreted the effect of that decision and also to have relied on the case of Jungli Lall v. Laddu Ram Marwari (3), where it was held that the proposition that an inquiry into the validity of a decree is outside the functions of an executing Court, is subject to the proviso that there is a valid decree which it can execute. In Gora Chand's case (2) the view taken was that:

"where a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had not jurisdiction either pecuniary or territorial or in respect of the judgment-debtor's person, to make the decree, the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction."

Walmsley, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court was however careful to indicate that only within these narrow limits is the executing Court authorized to question the validity of a decree. In other words Walmsley, J., was manifestly of opinion that except in connexion with matters of the kind expressly enumerated by him, an executing Court has no jurisdiction to question the validity of a decree sought to be executed. I am bound to say, with all possible respect to Walmsley, J., and the other learned Judges who subscribed to his judgment that I think the decision in Gora Chand's case (2) is not altogether consistent with the majority of the decided cases upon the question whether or not an executing Court can go behind or question the validity of the decree which it is called upon to execute. A large number of those cases were reviewed and discussed by Sir Arthur Page, C.J., of Burma, in the case of S. A. Nathan v. S. R. Samson (4), which was a decision of the Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court. In the course of his very exhaustive judgment the learned Chief Justice said (at p. 500 of 9 Rang.) referring to Gora Chand's case (2):

"Was it rightly decided? With all respect to the learned Judges who were parties to it, in my opinion, it was not. No reasons are given in support of the decision, and the law laid down in that case rests solely upon the ipse dixit of the learned Judges who decided it. The judgment is one that I do not find it altogether easy to understand. What is meant by the word 'apparently' in the passage that I have cited? Does it mean that where the want of jurisdiction in the decretal Court is patent the executing Court can question it, but where it is latent, the executing Court possesses no such power, and must execute the decree? But if the fact is that the decretal Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree I ask, with all due respect to the learned Judges who decided Gora Chand's case (2) what difference does it make in principle or as a matter of common sense whether the executing Court ascertains that fact by perusing the decree, or after hearing evidence or holding an inquiry? In my opinion, none whatever. If there was a want of jurisdiction in the decretal Court the fact exists and remains whether the absence of jurisdiction is apparent or not. Indeed, if it is only a patent want of jurisdiction that can be questioned, the executing Court would not be entitled to question the validity of a decree passed against a dead person, for the only documents before the executing Court would be those set out in O. 21, R. 6, and from a perusal of those documents the want of jurisdiction in the decretal Court in such a case would not 'be apparent'; and it is only after it has been ascertained allunde by evidence or otherwise that the judgment debtor was not alive, when the "decree was passed that it is possible to hold that the decree was made without jurisdiction and therefore is inexecutable."

With the views expressed in that passage I respectfully agree. The use of the word "apparently" in the judgment of Gora Chand's case (2) does indeed create considerable difficulty in the way of understanding the reasons underlying the judgment of Walmsley, J., especially as in the case then before the Court, there had it seems already been a finding of fact affecting the question of jurisdiction. Some light however is thrown on the ambiguity created by the use of the word "apparently" as it appears in the judgment in Gora Chand's case (2) by a recent decision of this Court given by Mukerji and Guha, JJ., in Amalabala Dasi v. Surat Kumari Dasi (5), where it was held that the proposition laid down by the Full Bench in Gora Chand v. Prafulla Kumar (2) was that an executing Court would be competent to refuse to execute a decree only when on the face of the decree it would appear that the Court which passed it had no jurisdiction. The Court then surmounted the difficulty discussed by Sir Arthur Page in the Rangoon case by holding that the expression "the decree" signifies "the decree and the papers relevant for the purpose of understanding it." It is to be observed that this decision was given independently of the Rangoon case and at a time when the report of it had not been published. The Rangoon case decided in terms that "a subsisting decree passed by a duly constituted Court, that has not been set aside in proceedings by way of appeal, revision, or otherwise by due process of law, is not to be treated as a mere nullity, but is binding and conclusive against the parties thereto duly impleaded in the suit. A Court to which such a decree has been transferred for execution, must take the decree as it stands and is not entitled to question the validity of the decree on the ground that the decreting Court had no jurisdiction, territorial, personal or pecuniary, to pass it."

I entirely agree with the reasoning upon which that decision of the Rangoon High Court is based and I think it represents a correct enunciation of the law. But even if the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Gora Chand's case (2) is to be taken as correct and authoritative that decision as interpreted in Amalabala Dasi v. Surat Kumari Dasi (5) does not cover the exact point now before me and therefore it constitutes no authority or justification for the order which the Munsif of Rampurhat thought fit to make. The actual decision in Amalabala Dasi v. Surat Kumari Dasi (5) on the other hand seems to furnish sufficient authority for holding that the learned Munsif was altogether wrong in making any such order seeing that neither the decrees themselves nor any of the pleadings and other documents forming the record in the original eighteen suits and in the appeals would on the face of them have revealed or indeed given the slightest indication of the fact that one of the defendants in the suits was a lunatic (if indeed she was) at the time of the institution of the suits and therefore not "duly impleaded." On the contrary seeing that Kiranbala not only entered appearance in the original suits, but actually put in defences to the plaintiff's claims and contested these claims right up to the High Court and in the execution proceedings, any "apparent" irregularity in the constitution of the suit or any defect manifest "on the face" of the proceedings was entirely non-existent.

With regard to the question of the powers of an executing Court when a decree has been passed against a person under disability who was not properly represented in the suit in which the decree was passed, Sir Arthur Page in the Rangoon case said at p. 492 of 9 Rang. in S.A. Nathan v. S.R. Samson (4), in such circumstances the decree as against the person under disability would be set aside ex debito justitiae in a regular suit though he added that :

"it might also reasonably be contended although in the present case it is not necessary to express a definite opinion on the matter that inasmuch as in the eye of the law such a decree is not a decree which has been passed against a party to the suit the executing Court also would be competent to regard to execute it."

In my judgment however it would not be right in law to hold that an executing Court has any power whatever of questioning the operative effect of a decree outside the narrowly circumscribed limits betokened by the judgment of Mukerji and Guha, JJ. I am fortified in that view by another decision of this Court which has a direct bearing on the present case. I refer to the case of Kalipada Sarcar v. Hari Mohun Dalal (6). In that case it was held that :

"the Court executing the decree must take the decree as it stands and has no power to go behind the decree or entertain an objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree. The validity of a decree cannot be questioned in execution proceedings on the ground that as the lunatic plaintiff was not properly represented by a competent next friend in the suit, no decree for costs would have been made against him. A proceeding to enforce a judgment is collateral to the judgment and therefore no inquiry into its regularity or validity can be permitted in such a proceeding. On this principle it can properly be held that a judgment against a person who was non compos mentis at the time of the trial and yet was not represented by a legal guardian, is not to be impeached in execution reversed or annulled in some direct proceeding taken for the purpose. Such a judgment can be attacked, for instance, by way of an application for review to the Court which made it or by way of an appeal or by an application for revision to a superior tribunal, or by way of a regular suit in a Court of competent jurisdiction, but the Court which made the decree cannot, when called upon to execute it, be invited to hold that the decree was erroneously or improperly made."

The matter has been very tersely and clearly put in the judgment of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., at p. 638 of the Report, where they said :

"We are of opinion that the safest course to follow is to adhere rigidly to the established principle that every order and judgment however erroneous is, in the words of Lord Cottenham in Ghuck v. Cremer (7) at p. 115, good until discharged or declared inoperative, and that the executing Court cannot enquire into the validity or propriety of the decree."

That proposition in my view is eminently a sound one and is applicable to the present case. I accordingly hold that the order made by the learned Munsif was wrong and made without jurisdiction. This rule is accordingly made absolute and the order of the learned Munsif is set aside. The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this rule; hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

M.N. Rule made absolute.

Appeal No. 128 of 1929, Decided on 11th May 1932, against original decree of Second Class Sub-Judge, Pabna, D/- 25th January 1929.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 21 (2)—Cases of joint debtors should be considered separately.

Under the Limitation Act the cases of joint debtors by virtue of S. 21 may have, as a matter of law to be considered separately, the limitation law being plain to the effect that one joint debtor may have an answer on a point of limitation and another joint debtor may not have. [P 91 C 2]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 184 and Sch. 3—Suit for rent of putni falls within S. 184.

Section 184 applies Sch. 3 to a suit for rent of putni. Such a suit falls within S. 184. [P 92 C 1]

(c) Limitation Act (as amended by 10 of 1922), Ss. 19, 20 and 29—S. 29 does not cut down whatever is provided by special or local law either by express words or clear intention—Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 184.

The amendment in S. 29 by Act 10 of 1922, merely means that such sections as Ss. 19 and 20 are not to apply by virtue of the Limitation Act; and if they are to apply, the grounds for applying them are to be found in the local Act itself; but S. 29 is not to be construed as intending to cut down whatever is provided by any special or local law, either by express words or by clear intention: A I R 1930 Pat 301, Foll. [P 92 C 2]

(e) Limitation Act (1908), S. 19—Acknowledgment—Letter addressed by lessee to lessor held to be acknowledgment.

A letter in respect of the rent of a putni lease written by the manager after stating that certain sums had been sent, asked for a correct account. It said that the manager desired to send a further sum, that two letters had been written to the lessor as how much amount had been paid but got no answer; it further asked what amount had been recently paid. In another letter the manager said that he had not been sending money because the amount of the claim as made by the lessor was at variance with the accounts of the lessee.

Held: that the letters amounted to acknowledgments. The letters showed that a certain amount was outstanding on account of the putni lease, and the amount, whatever it was, thereby acknowledged. [P 93 C 1]

Rankin, C. J.—In this suit which was brought on 22nd June 1928, the plaintiffs sued for the rent of a putni which under a deed dated 20th March 1876 was payable in six instalments every year and amounted to Rs. 1,920-14-0 per annum. There was a stipulation that in default of due payment of any kist for money outstanding should carry interest at 12 per cent per annum. There is no longer any dispute about the sum of money which the putnidars have paid. The plaintiffs brought the suit for rent for the period from Jyoisto 1327 to Jyoisto 1335 B.S., that is to say, from some time in 1920 to some time in 1928. It may here be noticed that the suit was not brought in 1928 until the month of June. Accordingly, in the ordinary way, under the Bengal Tenancy Act, Sch. 3, the plaintiffs would only be entitled to recover rent for a period of three years. It seems that, under the terms of the putni lease, the putnidars had, first of all, to pay the revenue that was due in respect of the property and the rest had to be paid to the plaintiffs; and, for the purpose of describing the amount of this residuo, the money which had to be paid to the plaintiffs was called the malikana. It appears that the putni is really held in two shares or accounts, though each share is liable for the whole of the putni rent.

These two shares are called the Bara Taraf and the Chhoto Taraf and at the time with which we are concerned the Chhoto Taraf's share was under the management of the Court of Wards. It appears that for the year 1926 B. S. a settlement of the dues was arrived at and there is certain correspondence put in evidence which shows the ultimate settlement of the rent for 1926. Not only that, but there are accounts which go to the same effect. I may refer for this purpose to the letter (Ex. A) written on behalf of the plaintiffs to the manager of the Bara Taraf on 27th March 1921. That letter shows that sums have been received from both the sharers of the putni, that a sum of Rs. 3,000 and a sum of Rs. 500 have been appropriated to clear off the dues for 1926 and that Rs. 2,000 being Rs. 1,000 sent by each of the sharers is credited towards payment of the amount of interest for breach of instalments from 1927. It is not shown that this letter was also sent to the Chhoto Taraf; but the probabilities are—and there is indirect evidence which makes the matter clear—that this settlement of the arrears of 1926 and the carrying over of money against the interest already due for 1927 came to the notice of both the sharers.

In that position, we have to consider whether there is any answer to the plaintiffs' claim for what is due to them for rent from Jyaisht 1927. The first thing to be noticed is that the plaintiffs when they received any sum of money on account invariably credited as much thereof as possible to the interest outstanding at that time. The result was that when this suit was brought in 1928 a large amount of interest had been wiped off right up to the time of the suit and the consequence of this method of accounting is that, if the plaintiffs are to recover what is really due to them, they have to recover rent for a longer period than three years before the suit. As the plaintiffs did appropriate the money to interest, it does not seem to be possible to reverse that position. Accordingly, in order to decide this suit, we have really to see whether the plaintiffs can recover rent for more than three years previous to the suit. On that matter, it has to be observed that the defendants in the lower Court filed one and the same written statement and they were represented by the same pleader. In the same way, in this Court also they have joined in bringing one appeal together. In the issues taken in the lower Court, the question of limitation was not raised separately as regards each of the two shares and, in the memorandum of appeal to this Court, no grounds are taken distinguishing one case from the other. The fact, is of course, that under the Limitation Act the cases of joint debtors by virtue of S. 21 may have as a matter of law, to be considered separately, the limitation law being plain to the effect that one joint debtor may have an answer on a point of limitation and another joint debtor may not have. At the same time, in the present case, it is not pressed before us that, if either of these two sharers is liable, he should, as between them, be made liable for the whole amount with the result that the other escapes.

I propose therefore to consider this matter without distinguishing minutely between the cases of the two defendants. This is the way in which the learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the matter. He has not separately dealt with the case of each defendant. The plaintiffs did not in their plaint state the reasons which took them out of the law of limitation and, in the present case, it turns out that they relied both upon acknowledgment under S. 19, Lim. Act, and upon part payment under S. 20. In this appeal, Mr. Nasim Ali on behalf of the appellants contends that Ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act of 1908, do not apply to a claim for rent which is governed by Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act, and he further contends that, if they do apply, we have to see whether there is a proper acknowledgment and, if not, we have to see not whether the payments were made in such a way that the plaintiffs would be entitled to appropriate them in part payment of interest but whether the payments were made of interest as such: the matter being prior to the year 1928, they are governed by the Limitation Act before the recent amendment and payments of interest as such do not require evidence under the handwriting of the defendants at the time.

Now, on the first question whether Ss. 19 and 20 apply under the special limitation of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the position is this: Under the Act of 1885, the section which imposes a special limitation is S. 184 which applies Sch. 3 to cases of a certain class of which the present is one. It cannot be doubted that, if this is a suit for rent of a patni, it is within S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act. This is not a proceeding under any Patni Regulation but it is a proceeding under the general law for recovery of patni rent. In S. 185, the then Limitation Act of 1877 was referred to: Ss. 7, 8 and 9 were declared not to apply; but subject to the provisions of Ch. 16 the other provisions were declared to apply. There can be no doubt that under that law acknowledgment and payment of interest save the statute from running: Kamal Krishna v. Kedar Nath (1), Rakhlal v. Hemangini (2); and decisions to the effect that Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act, applies to suits for patni rents are Burna Moyi Dassi v. Burna Mayi Choudhurani (3), Rash Behari Lal v. Tilak Dhari Ball (4) and Basant Kumar Bose v. Khulna Loan Company (5). In 1908 however the Act of 1877 was amended and, by the operation of the General Clauses Act, the references to the provisions of the Act of 1877 must be taken as references to the corresponding provisions of the Act of 1908. In 1922 again the Limitation Act of 1908 was amended by an alteration of the provisions of S. 29 of the Act and S. 29 by its second clause dealt with the question of a special or local law which prescribed the period of special limitation.

In such cases, the Act as amended in 1922 said that the provisions of S. 3 should apply as if such period were prescribed therefor in that schedule, and for the purpose of determining any period of limitation, the provisions in certain sections should apply only in so far as they were not excluded by the local law and the remaining provisions of the Act should not apply. Accordingly, in this appeal Mr. Nasim Ali for the appellants contends that, by virtue of Cl. (b), sub-S. (2), S. 29 as it stood after 1922, Ss. 19 and 20 are not to apply in the case of special limitation under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It seems that until 1922 it had never been doubted in this Province that claims for rent were taken out of the period of limitation by acknowledgment or part payment of interest; but it is said that that changed in 1922. In 1928, the local legislature amended S. 187, Ben. Ten. Act and made it quite clear that from that time Ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act were to apply to cases within Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act. It is said however that between 1922 and 1928 the law was otherwise. As to that, it appears to me that the authority which has been quoted to us on the part of the respondents, Hasan Imam v. Brahmddeo Singh (6), is an authority which ought to be followed. It is there pointed out that the amendment made in S. 29, Lim. Act of 1922 merely means that such sections as Ss. 19 and 20 are not to apply by virtue of the Limitation Act and that if they are to apply the grounds for applying them are to be found in the special or local Act itself, but that that section is not to be construed as intending to cut down whatever is provided by any special or local law either by express words or by clear intention.

It seems to me, for example, that if S. 184, Ben. Ten. Act, stood by itself and no such provision as S. 185 had been added, then it would be quite right to apply S. 29, Lim. Act, and say that the mere S. 184 was not under the Limitation Act to import such sections as Ss. 19 and 20. But in the present case by the Bengal Tenancy Act, S. 185 means that certain sections of the Limitation Act should not apply and certain other sections should apply. It appears to me that the proper effect and result of that is that by virtue of the local Act Ss. 19 and 20 did apply to cases under Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act, even between the years 1922 and 1928. I propose therefore on that point to follow the Patna decision. Assuming therefore that the period of three years may be extended by acknowledgment or payment of interest, we have to see whether the plaintiffs have made out their case entitling them to recover arrears of rent from Jyoisto 1327 B. S., that is, from the year 1920. As to that, so far as the Bara Taraf is concerned, I think there is little difficulty. It has been conceded on behalf of the appellants that, if the payments can be taken to be payments of interest as such within the meaning of S. 20, the plaintiffs are entitled to the whole of their claim. It may be just as well, first, to deal with the question of acknowledgment. So far as acknowledgment is concerned, the Bara Taraf writing on 24th June 1924 states that it has sent Rs. 2,000 and Rs. 1,000 and asks for a correct account. It says that it desires to send a further sum, that it wrote two letters to the General Manager to find out how much was paid by the Court of Wards but got no answer and asks what amount has recently been paid by them. That seems to be a letter which is consistent with this that a certain amount is outstanding on account of the putni lease and that the amount whatever it may be is thereby acknowledged.

There are further letters of the same character; in particular, there is a letter of 1926 at p. 51 of the paper book where the Manager of the Bara Taraf says that he has not been sending money because the account of the claim as made by the plaintiffs is materially at variance with the accounts of the two different branches of the estate. He sent a copy of the account showing the dues of both the Tarafs and showing that a certain sum of money was due. In these circumstances so far as the Bara Taraf is concerned, apart altogether from the payment of interest, it appears to me that the matter is covered by acknowledgment. It does not appear however that there is any letter which can be claimed to be an acknowledgment sent by the Chhoto Taraf.

I come now to consider the payments and the circumstances in which they were made. It is quite clear from the very commencement of the negotiations about the rent due for 1327 that in 1924 the plaintiffs were saying that the dues for 1326 had only just been cleared off after crediting a large amount. They were further saying that Rs. 2,000 was being credited against interest already due for default of the 1327 rent. Now, that arrangement clearing off the 1326 rent has plainly been accepted by both the Tarafs as the learned Subordinate Judge points out and it certainly must have come to the notice of both of them. The Bara Taraf in its letter of June 1924 refers to another payment that it has made and it asks for a correct account to be sent. It says that it does not know how much has been paid by the Court of Wards; but it is quite clear that any money that the Bara Taraf sent must have been sent both on account of interest as well as of principal. It knew that it would be credited against the interest first. On 10th September 1924, the Manager writes to the plaintiffs that Rs. 2,000 has been credited to interest on account of the year 1327. He asks for an account to be sent up to 1326. He says that there is no contract for anything except malikana rent and interest. He sends an account and he also sends a sum of money on account of malikana rent. He says that the Court of Wards promised that it would shortly send money and he demands a detailed and correct account for the years 1326 to 1330 and says that he will try to pay the balance of the dues as early as possible. In these circumstances every sum of money that was sent in that way was sent upon an admitted obligation to meet interest and was sent with the knowledge that the plaintiffs would not apply any part of the money in reduction of the principal until the interest had been first wiped out. When we come to 1331 we find that the Bara Taraf admitted that a large amount of malikana had remained unpaid. Indeed, from the beginning of the correspondence it is clear that neither Taraf was under any delusion to the effect that the payments that were being made were not payments for long standing arrears. In 1331 the Bara Taraf asks for an extension of time up to Sravan next and the correspondence goes on in that way.

The case of the Chhoto Taraf, if it were necessary to distinguish it in the present case, would not be quite as strong; but in that case it is to be remembered that in 1333 when the parties were minded to exchange accounts, the Chhoto Taraf sent in an account according to which the payments that had been made were all credited in the first place against interest. The form of the letters does not say anything about interest. It uses the phrase malikana or amount of rent, but the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the finding that the Chhoto Taraf is in no different position from the Bara Taraf in respect that the money was intended from the first to be applied to outstanding interest and then to the principal. Before the learned Subordinate

Judge the main contention of the defendants was that the language of the letters making remittances by both the Tarafs was such that the plaintiffs were not entitled to credit any part of the money to interest as distinct from principal. It appears to have been conceded on behalf of both the defendants that, if the plaintiffs were competent to credit portions of the payments made towards interest then no portion of the claim would be barred by limitation.

There can be no doubt that the plaintiffs were competent to credit portions of these payments to interest. But in this Court Mr. Nasim Ali has pointed out that it is not quite the same thing to say that the plaintiffs were entitled to appropriate the money to interest as to say that the money when sent was meant for payment of interest as such by the defendants. I think in an ordinary case it would be quite obvious that there might be a very considerable distinction between those two things. That matter however was not submitted to the learned Judge as a question for his determination upon the facts. We have to say as regards the evidence before us whether we think that these defendants can escape by reason of the payments being made without any statement about interest accompanying the payments. It is reasonably clear that the learned Judge was entirely right as regards the Bara Taraf and though as regards the Chhoto Taraf, the matter is not so plain, they too had no expectation that the principal would be reduced until the interest had first been fully paid off. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Guha, J.—This appeal has arisen out of an application under O. 28, R. 3, Civil P. C., made by the plaintiff in a suit for recording a compromise. The suit was instituted by the plaintiff in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Howrah, for a declaration that the properties mentioned in the plaint were debuttar properties of the idols Sri Sri Iswar Ratneswar Kedar Nath Shiva and Sri Sri Iswar Sridhar Jiu, and for a further declaration that the plaintiff was a shebait of the idols. In view of the allegations made in the plaint that the defendants, three in number, had acted in contravention of the terms of the shebaitnama, dated 20th June 1874, the plaintiff prayed that the defendants might be declared unfit to continue as shebait. A permanent injunction was prayed for preventing the defendants from offering any resistance in case the plaintiff acted as a shebait of the said idols, and made repairs to the temples belonging to the idols. A prayer was made by the plaintiff as shebait for obtaining possession of the debuttar properties, and there was a further prayer for accounts to be rendered by the defendants in the suit. As it appears from the order sheet, the case was pending from 1924; on 18th August 1930, when it was about to come to a hearing, a representation was made to the Court by the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 that the parties wanted to come to an amicable settlement, and an application was filed in Court praying for a day's time to put in a solenama.

On that date pleaders were heard, and time was allowed as prayed for. On the next date the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 filed a joint application, stating that the solenama had not yet been signed by defendant 3, and prayer was made for a day's further time, to file the petition of compromise. The Court granted time as prayed for. On 20th August 1930, the pleaders of the parties, presumably the pleaders appearing for the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2, stated to the Court that defendant 3 was unwilling to join in the solenama. The case was on that date directed to be put up on 23rd August 1930, for enabling the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 to file the solenama, and for proceeding ex parte against defendant 3 who was absent on that date, viz., 20th August 1930. The next order recorded in the order sheet shows that on 23rd August 1930, plaintiff and defendant 1 filed a joint application praying for time to file solenama, and this prayer was granted, as the last chance; and the case was adjourned to 25th August 1930, for filing the solenama, for ex parte trial against defendant 3. At this stage of the proceedings, on 25th August 1930, the plaintiff filed the application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., for recording a compromise which, according to the plaintiff, had been entered into between all the parties to the suit. The defendants opposed the application so made by the plaintiff. The objections raised by the defendants have been negatived by the lower Court. There is no appeal to this Court by defendants 1 and 2. It is only defendant 3 who has preferred an appeal to this Court. (After discussing evidence his Lordship proceeded.) In the above view of the case, regard being had to the materials placed on the record, we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion, that so far as defendant 3 was concerned, he was not a party to the compromise which was entered into as between the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 and which was sought to be enforced by an application made to the Court under the provisions contained in O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C.

It is necessary to mention that a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, as to the maintainability of the appeal to this Court, on the ground that no appeal had been preferred against the decree that was passed in the case, and which had been signed before the appeal to this Court was filed on 13th January 1931. It would appear that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge recording the compromise under O. 23, R. 3 of the Code and directing the drawing up of the decree, the order against which this appeal is directed, was passed on 20th September 1930. The decree was actually signed on 4th November 1930. The appeal to this Court was filed on 13th January 1931. There is no doubt that on the date on which this appeal was filed, there was the decree passed by the Court below, in existence; and the preliminary objection relates to this that no appeal having been preferred against the decree, the appeal against the order dated 20th September 1930, made under O. 23, R. 3 was not maintainable. The objection so raised is based upon a decision of this Court in the case of Bengal Coal Co. Ltd. v. Apcar Collieries Ltd. (1). It appears to us that the decision in that case must now be taken to be superseded by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Talebali v. Abdul Aziz (2). The case in Bengal Coal Co. v. Apcar Collieries Ltd. (1) was referred to in the course of the argument before the Full Bench and having regard to the principle upon which the decision of the Full Bench is based, it is impossible for us to hold that the rule laid down in the case in Bengal Coal Co. v. Apcar Collieries Ltd. (1) is still good law. It may also be mentioned that the decision in the case reported in Bengal Coal Co. v. Apcar Collieries Ltd. (1) does not take into account the effect of S. 96, Cl. (3), Civil P. C., and of the statutory right of appeal given by O. 43, R. 1 (m), so far as O. 23, R. 3 is concerned. In our opinion after the decision of the Full Bench to which reference has been made, an appeal from an order under O. 23, R. 3 is not incompetent if a decree is made before the appeal is presented.

It is not necessary for the party aggrieved by an order under O. 23, R. 3 of the Code to appeal both from the order and the decree in order to maintain his appeal against the order under O. 23, R. 3. We overruled the preliminary objection, and heard the appeal from order, as preferred to this Court, on the merits.

2. A I R 1929 Cal 689=123 I C 305=57 Cal 1013 (F B).

In the result the appeal is allowed; the order of the Court below, so far as it relates to defendant 3 in the suit, is set aside. It will be open to the plaintiff-respondent now to proceed with the suit as against defendant 3 in accordance with law. We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Civil Rules Nos. 171 and 172 of 1932, Decided on 2nd March 1932, against order of Sub-Judge, Faridpur, D/- 14th November 1931.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 32 (3)—Sale of property under O. 21, R. 32 (3) is for a person's wilful failure to obey the decree of Court and cannot be set aside under O. 21, R. 89 which is not applicable—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 89.

The provisions of O. 21, R. 32 are intended chiefly to provide something in the nature of a penalty for breach of an order of the Court, though sub-R. (3) does provide that some portion of the price realized by the sale of the property may be allocated as compensation to the decree-holder in the suit. R. 89 can have no application where a sale takes place under the provisions of R. 32 (3) because proviso (b), sub-CI. (1), R. 89, cannot be complied with by the person applying to have the sale set aside. The proceedings under O. 21, R. 32 are clearly to be of a penal character designed to punish persons who have wilfully disobeyed the order of the Court. [P 97 C 2; P 98 C 2]

Judgment.—These two Rules are the outcome and it is to be hoped to be the last stage in a protracted litigation between a man Gahur Ali Karikar on one side and his wife Asia Khatun, her mother Kokanu Bibi and her stepfather Misir Ali Karikar on the other. In the year 1927 Gahur Ali instituted a suit against his wife Asia Khatun, her mother Kokanu Bibi and her stepfather Misir Ali in which he claimed as against his wife restitution of conjugal rights and as against the other two defendants an injunction restraining them from obstructing the return of his wife to him. On 14th July 1927, a decree was made in that suit whereby it was ordered that Asia Khatun should return and render conjugal rights to her husband, the plaintiff, and as regards the other two defendants that they be restrained from obstructing the return of the wife to the husband. Apparently that decree was not complied with by any of the defendants and accordingly the plaintiff made an application under O. 21, R. 32, for the attachment of certain property belonging to Kokanu Bibi and Misir Ali on the ground that they had wilfully failed to obey the decree which had been made against them. The property was in fact attached on 4th September 1927. After the lapse of one year an application was made under O. 21, R. 32, sub-R. (3) for the sale of the attached property. That move on the part of the plaintiff seems to have been countered by his wife, defendant 1, in the suit by the institution of a fresh suit in which she sought a declaration that the marriage between her and the plaintiff had been dissolved by her lawfully giving a talak to her husband under some delegated power conferred upon her at the time the marriage took place.

In answer to the application which was made on 2nd October 1928, certain objections were raised by the defendants including the objection that the suit for a declaration that the marriage had been dissolved was pending and that in fact the marriage had been dissolved on some date in July 1928, that is to say, on a date prior to the application for the sale. In consequence of such objections, various proceedings took place which I need not specify. Finally, an order was made directing the sale and the sale of the attached property took place on 16th December 1930. It does appear that the Subordinate Judge, when he dealt with an appeal from that application, was in some doubt as to whether or not the sale ought to take place in the circumstances as at that time there had been no decision in the suit for a declaration of the dissolution of the marriage. However he came to the conclusion that there was no reason why the sale should not take place under the provisions of O. 21, R. 32 (3). A month or so later, that is to say, on 9th January 1931, there was an application on the part of the defendants Kokanu Bibi and Misir Ali, to have the sale set aside. That application purported to have been made under O. 21, R. 89. The matter came before the Munsif, 2nd Court, Chikandi on 2nd February 1931. In the course of his judgment he says:

"The properties were sold to compensate the decree-holder for judgment-debtor's disobeying the order of the Court and thus being guilty of contempt of Court. In such a case judgment-debtors 2 and 3 have no locus standi to apply to set aside the sale under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. Their only remedy was to obey the decree and pay all costs of executing the same within full one year of the date of attachment as provided by O. 21, R. 32, Cl (4). Again O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., applies where immovable property has been sold in execution of a money or mortgage-decree. In the present case the properties in question were sold to compensate the decree-holder for judgment-debtors' wilfully disobeying the order of the Court passed in a decree for restitution of conjugal rights."

He came to the conclusion that judgment-debtors Nos. 2 and 3 had no locus standi to have the sale set aside and therefore the petition was rejected. A few days later, that is to say, on 13th February 1931, the learned Munsif proceeded to assess the amount of compensation to be paid to the decree-holder under O. 21, R. 32 (3). He was of the opinion that the decree-holder was entitled to get compensation to the extent of Rs. 600. One of the two Rules, with which I am now concerned, has reference to that order. Against both the decisions of the learned Munsif there was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Faridpur and he dealt with both matters along with another matter, that is to say, the appeal against the order of the Court of first instance refusing to set aside the decree which in the meantime, that is to say, on 2nd July 1930, had been obtained by Asia Khatun in her suit against her husband. That decree had been made ex parte and had declared that the marriage between Gahur Ali and Asia Khatun had been dissolved as from 16th July 1928. The learned Subordinate Judge of Faridpur was evidently of opinion that the litigation between these parties was not only very unfortunate but that some of the orders which were made in the course of the proceedings were the outcome of the applications which were in effect abuses of the process of the Court. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the sale of the property attached in the way I have described ought to be set aside not because O. 21, R. 89 was applicable to the circumstances of this case, but because the order directing the sale in the first instance ought, in fact, never to have been made on the ground that the decree of 2nd July 1930, made in the wife's suit, contained an injunction restraining her husband from putting into execution the decree obtained by him in July 1927. The learned Subordinate Judge also allowed the appeal as regards the Munsif's order for payment of Rs. 600 by way of compensation for the same reason. He definitely came to the conclusion that O. 21, R. 89, has no application in the circumstances of this case and I am of opinion that the order was correct. There seems to be no doubt that the provisions of O. 21, R. 32 are intended chiefly to provide something in the nature of a penalty for breach of an order of the Court, though sub-R. (3) does provide that some portion of the price realized by the sale of the property may be allocated as compensation to the decree-holder in the suit.

It seems obvious that R. 89 can have no application where a sale takes place under the provisions of R. 32 (3), because R. 89 provides that a person, either owning immovable property which has been sold in execution of the decree or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before the sale, can apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court, (a) for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per cent of the purchase money and (b) for payment to the decree-holder, the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered (less any amount to which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder). That rule requires a two-fold payment on the part of the person seeking to set aside the sale: one payment to the purchaser or purchasers and another to the decree-holder. This presupposes that there is some specified sum of money which is due from a person or persons who was or were defendants in the suit, to the decree-holder. In the present case from the very nature of the suit itself, no sum of money was due to the decree-holder at the time when the sale under R. 32 took place, and therefore proviso (b), sub-Cl. (i), R. 89, could not be complied with by the person applying to have the sale set aside. In the present case some two months after the sale took place the Munsif, as I have already said, decided that Rs. 600 out of the purchase money realized by the sale of the attached property ought to be paid to the plaintiff as compensation. If it can properly be said that in effect the sale took place in order to provide for the recovery of the amount which might subsequently be ordered to be paid to the plaintiff, then on that footing it follows that the owners of the attached property, that is to say, Kokanu Bibi and Misir Ali in order to have the sale set aside would have to deposit in Court the sum of Rs. 600 for payment to Gahur Ali.

I have said that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was based upon the view that no proceedings in the nature of an execution proceeding with reference to the original decree ought to have taken place after the decree in the wife's suit, that is to say, after 2nd July 1930. But the fact remains that when the order for the sale of the property was made, objection was taken to the making of that order and there was an appeal against that order and the direction for sale was confirmed by the appellate Court and it was in accordance with the decision of the appellate Court that the sale in fact took place. In those circumstances it is clear that the sale did, in fact, take place under an order of Court which was subsisting at the time when the sale actually took place. The order, I have said, had been confirmed on appeal and no further steps were taken at that time with regard to it. It must, I think, further be taken that the sale validly took place under an order of the Court made by virtue of the provisions of R. 32, O. 21. I have already indicated the reasons why I think the appellate Court below was right in holding that O. 21, R. 89, does not apply. Moreover the proclamation of sale did not and could not contain as it should contain all the particulars required by R. 66, O. 21. If R. 89 does not apply there seems to be no other procedure appropriate for setting aside a sale of this character once it has been completed.

I therefore come to the conclusion, although I do so with great reluctance, that the learned Subordinate Judge was not justified in law in taking the course which he did in ordering the sale to be set aside and the order for the payment of the compensation to the plaintiff rescinded. One must bear in mind, as I have indicated, that the proceedings under O. 21, R. 32, whatever the ultimate result may be, are clearly intended to be of a penal character designed to punish persons who have wilfully disobeyed the order of the Court. In that view of the matter and on the findings of the Courts below it appears that the defendants had disobeyed the orders contained in the original decree and therefore had rendered themselves liable to the consequences involved by the terms of R. 32, O. 21. It follows therefore that these rules must be made absolute, the orders of the Subordinate Judge be set aside and those of the Munsif be restored. By consent it is further ordered that if Kokanu Bibi and Misir Ali pay to Gahur Ali within two months from today's date Rs. 600 and Rs. 30 to the purchasers of the attached property then the sale will be set aside and the sale will be void and the parties will be restored to the position quo ante. If the sum of Rs. 130 deposited in Court at the time of the application for setting aside the sale is still available, it should be credited to the defendants and the amount of the purchase money Rs. 600 deposited by the auction-purchaser should be refunded to the purchaser and all further proceedings between the parties in respect of the sale of the said property will terminate. Nothing in this order contained will affect the validity or enforceability of the decree said to have been obtained by Asia Khatun in respect of her dower.

Appeals Nos. 851 and 898 of 1929, Decided on 2nd June 1932, against appellate decrees of Dist. Judge, Sylhet, D/- 6th October 1928.

(a) Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 27 (b)—Transferee for value without notice of original contract must prove that he fulfils that character.

Where a person claims to be a transferee for value without notice of the original contract, the burden lies upon him to prove that he fulfils that character. If he was aware when he purchased the property that negotiations for the sale of the property were already in progress between his vendors and the plaintiff, and purchases the property without making necessary enquiries as to whether any agreement to sell the property had been definitely concluded between his vendors and the plaintiff, he cannot claim to be a transferee without notice: 40 Cal 565, Ref. [P 100 C 2]

(b) Specific Relief Act (1877), Ss. 14 to 17—Contract, whether divisible, is question of fact.

The nature of a contract, whether it was divisible or not, must be determined upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case; and the question is essentially a question of fact. [P 101 C 1]

Defendants 6 and 7 as agents of defendants 2 to 5 who owned shares in certain family property went beyond the scope of their authority in agreeing to sell the property on behalf of their principals to the plaintiff. The contract was subsequently ratified by defendants 2, 4 and 5 but not by defendants 1 and 8.

Held: that the contract was one that was, on the face of it, and in view of the conduct of the parties and the intention to be gathered from such conduct, divisible in its nature, and was, in point of fact separated and divided by defendants 2, 4 and 5 ratifying the contract, and by the refusal of defendant 3 to do so, in respect of his own share in the joint property. It was therefore an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants 2, 4 and 5 for sale, and did not come within the general rule that where a person is jointly interested in an estate with another person, and purports to deal with the entirety, specific performance will not be granted against him as to his share. The contract was after ratification a concluded contract in regard to the shares of the defendants 2, 4 and 5, and as such specific performance could be granted of the same: A I R 1932 P C 43; A I R 1925 P C 45, Dist. [P 101 C 2]

Judgment.—The plaintiff in the suit out of which these two appeals have arisen, prayed for a decree for specific performance of a contract for sale said to have been entered into by defendants 1 to 5 on 3rd Chaitra 1330 B. S. or in the alternative for refund of earnest money and recovery of damages. Defendants 2 to 5 had maliki right in the property which was the subject matter of the contract for sale, to the extent of certain definite shares owned by each of them as a member of a joint Hindu family; defendant 1 had a meadi ijara right in the property to the extent of the share of defendant 3. Defendant 6 was the karta of the joint family of which defendants 1 to 5 were members, defendant 1 being the mother of defendants 2 to 5. Defendant 7 was an officer of the joint family estate. Defendants 6 and 7 acted as agents in the matter of the contract for sale, of which specific performance was prayed for by the plaintiff. Defendants 8 to 13 are purchasers from defendants 1 to 5, by kabalas dated 4th Ashar 1331 of the property in regard to which the plaintiff asked for specific performance. The plaintiff's claim in suit was resisted by all the defendants mentioned above. The contract for sale as alleged by the plaintiffs was denied; it was asserted that defendants 8 to 13 were bona fide purchasers for value, without knowledge or notice of any previous agreement for sale with the plaintiff as alleged by the plaintiff in the suit.

The controversy between the parties to the litigation are indicated by the principal issues raised for determination in the suit, which were to the following effect: Was there any contract for sale to the plaintiff? Was the contract legally enforceable and capable of specific performance? Had defendants 6 and 7 any authority to enter into any contract? Did defendants 1 to 5 approve of or ratify the contract? Had defendants 8 to 13 notice of the contract? Are defendants 8 to 13 bona fide purchasers for value? The learned Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Sylhet, in whose Court the suit was instituted, passed a decree in the suit in these words:

"The suit be decreed with costs, decrees against defendants 1 to 7 being for Rs. 850, and against all the defendants for costs, prayers ka to chha of the plaint and claim for Rs. 3,000 as compensation being disallowed and interest running at 6 per cent per annum on decretal amount till realization."

The prayers ka to chha, it may be mentioned, related to specific performance. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge of Sylhet modified the decree of the trial Court, and passed a decree directing that the suit be decreed as against defendants 2, 4, and 5 to 13, and that the plaintiff be allowed specific performance as against defendants 2, 4, 5 and 8 to 13, of the agreement dated 3rd Chaitra 1330. The kabalas dated 4th Ashar 1331, in favour of defendants 8 to 13 were declared invalid, in respect of the shares of defendants 2, 4 and 5. The decree further directed the execution of a fresh kabala in respect of the shares of defendants 2, 4 and 5, in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed as against defendants 1 and 3. Defendants 2 and 4 to 13, as well as the plaintiff, have appealed to this Court. The defendants' appeal being appeal from Appellate Decree No. 851 of 1929 while the appeal by the plaintiff is appeal from Appellate Decree No. 898 of 1929. In view of the questions raised in these appeals the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge on appeal in his elaborate and careful judgment may be briefly referred to. The learned Judge held upon the evidence before him, that defendants 6 and 7, on behalf of defendants 2 to 5, entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the sale of the property, and that the agreement was concluded on 3rd Chaitra 1330. Defendants 6 and 7, the agents, were, according to the learned Judge's finding, acting beyond the scope of their authority, but the agreement was ratified by defendants 2, 4 and 5, but not by defendants 1 and 3. On the question of the position of defendants 8 to 13 the District Judge has held that on the facts and in the circumstances mentioned by him the contract could be specifically enforced against them.

One of the points raised in the appeal by defendants 2 and 4 to 13 is with reference to the decision arrived at by the Court of appeal below, that defendants 8 to 13 were persons against whom the plaintiff's contract could be specifically performed; and mention has to be made of the reason given by it in this behalf. The learned Judge has made mention of evidence showing that these defendants had information of what was taking place in regard to the contract for sale, to the plaintiff, and of evidence showing that the plaintiff's agent having asked them not to buy the property in question. The learned Judge has refused to disbelieve plaintiff's evidence on the point; and has held that even if they were only aware of the fact that negotiations for the sale of the property was in progress, between defendants 1 to 5 and the plaintiff's agent, that should have put them on their guard, and they should have made necessary inquiries as to whether any agreement to sell the property had been definitely concluded. This defendants 8 to 13 did not do. There can be no doubt that the learned District Judge has rightly directed himself in coming to the decision on the question whether defendants 8 to 13 were or were not bona fide purchasers for value, and whether or not they had knowledge or notice of the previous contract with the plaintiff. It is well settled now that when a person claims to be a transferee for value without notice of the original contract, the burden lies upon him to prove that he fulfils that character. If defendants 8 to 13 chose to make no inquiry, they could not claim to be transferees without notice: "they could not predicate of themselves" that they were persons who claim without notice of the contract of 3rd Chaitra 1330, with the plaintiff: see in this connexion, Baburam Bag v. Madhab Chandra Pollay (1). The decision of the learned Judge, in the Court of appeal below, that the contract could be specifically enforced against defendants 8 to 13, is upon the findings arrived at by him correct and must be affirmed.

On the question of ratification of the contract for sale to the plaintiff by defendants 2, 4 and 5, and not by defendants 1 and 3, which was raised in the appeal by the plaintiff, there is a clear finding of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge. It was pressed before us that there has been an inaccuracy in quoting from the deposition of one of the witnesses for the plaintiff, examined on this part of the case, inasmuch as the witness stated that he "wrote" the document evidencing the sale to the plaintiff, at the bidding of defendants 1 to 5, and not that he "read out" the same, as mentioned in the judgment of the Court of appeal below. It has also been urged that upon the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Court, there was ratification in law by defendants 1 and 3, on the evidence that was common to the defendants 1 to 5. We are unable to say that the inaccuracy in quoting a passage from the deposition of a witness, to which reference has been made above, in any way affects the findings and the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge in the Court below, on the question of ratification. From the facts and circumstances to which reference has been made in the judgment of the Court below, the conclusion followed that the defendants 1 and 3 had not ratified the contract. It is impossible upon the findings arrived at by the lower Court, to hold in favour of the plaintiff, that defendants 1 and 3 had ratified the contract; and upon those findings there appears to be no justification for the contention that there was ratification in law, seeing that upon the facts proved in the case, and upon the inference drawn from such facts, there was no ratification of the contract, either express or implied, so far as defendants 1 and 3 were concerned.

The question whether the contract of 3rd Chaitra 1330, was legally enforceable, and the question whether the contract was capable of specific performance, were raised before the Courts below, and have been urged in the appeal by defendants 2 and 4 to 13. The plaintiff who had previously acquired some share in the property in suit, was desirous of securing other shares in the same. With a view to this, there were negotiations with defendants 2 to 5 for purchase of the shares of the property owned by them; defendant 6 who had sold his own share in the property to the plaintiff, negotiated as agent of defendants 2 to 5. Upon the finding arrived at by the Court below, the agents (defendants 6 and 7) had gone beyond the scope of their authority, but defendants 2, 4 and 5 had subsequently ratified the contract entered into by the agents on their behalf; defendants 1 and 3 however did not ratify the contract. Thus the contract sought to be specifically enforced was not treated by the parties concerned as one entire contract indivisible in its nature: it was not also a contract entered into by a cosharer of joint property undertaking to obtain the consent of the other cosharers in respect of joint property. It may be noticed that the nature of a contract, whether it was divisible or not, must be determined upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case; and the question was essentially a question of fact. The contract entered into by the agents in the case before us, was one, in regard to the distinct and different shares of cosharers defendants, 2 to 5, in the joint property, and in respect of which shares only, taken separately, there could be a conveyance of title, so far as any of the cosharers was concerned. There was the contingency of any of the cosharers not agreeing to convey his own share; and subsequent events showed that such contingency did happen. The position then was that the agents were negotiating on behalf of each of the cosharers, defendants 2 to 5, for the sale of the joint property; some of the parties concerned, defendants 2, 4 and 5, ratified the action of the agents; defendant 3 as well as defendant 1 did not ratify the same.

Defendant 1, it must be remembered, was not a cosharer, but was only an ijaradar of the share of defendant 3 in the joint property. The contract therefore in the case before us, was one that was, on the face of it, and in view of the conduct of the parties and the intention to be gathered from such conduct, divisible in its nature; and was, in point of fact separated and divided by defendants 2, 4 and 5 ratifying the contract, and by the refusal of defendant 3 to do so, in respect of his own share in the joint property. It was therefore an agreement between the plaintiff and defendants 2, 4 and 5 for sale, and does not come within the general rule that where a person is jointly interested in an estate with another person, and purports to deal with the entirety, specific performance will not be granted against him as to his share. Very great reliance has been placed by the learned advocate for defendants 2 and 4 to 13, appellants, on the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in the case of Rai Promotha Nath Mittra v. Gosha Behari Sen (2), as also upon the rule laid down by their Lordships in Graham v. Krishna Chunder Dey (3), in support of the case of these defendants, that there was no concluded contract in the case before us, which could be specifically enforced by the plaintiff, in view of the non-ratification of the contract by defendants 1 and 3; and that the plaintiff not having relinquished his claim to further performance and all right to compensation, was not entitled to a decree for specific performance. It was urged that there was no mutuality in the contract of which specific performance was sought, as defendants 2, 4 and 5 could not insist upon the enforcement of the contract.

The questions thus raised do not in our judgment, arise for consideration in the case before us, in view of the nature of the contract entered into. It cannot be said in this case, as it was made out in Rai Promatha Nath Mittra's case (2) that the contract was on the footing that all the owners of the property would consent to the sale. The agents acting on behalf of defendants 2 to 5 in this case were negotiating for the sale to the plaintiff, of the share of the joint property, owned by each of these defendants separately; and defendant 3 refused to ratify the act of the agents, so far as his own share was concerned. In Graham's case, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee definitely held that in India ss. 14 to 17, Specific Relief Act, 1877, constituted a complete Code, so far as specific performance of part of a contract was concerned, and their Lordships laid down the law in a case where there was the question of a part performance of a contract, the vendor having failed to make title to one of the two items of property agreed to be sold. The contract was not one in regard to which it could be said that one of the items of property stood on a separate and independent footing, so as to be within the terms of S. 16, Specific Relief Act. In the case before us, the separate shares of defendants 2 to 5 in the joint property stood altogether on an independent footing, and the plaintiff and the agents on behalf of these defendants were negotiating for the sale of these separate shares of these defendants in the joint property. The case placed before the Court by the plaintiff, regard being had to the averments made in his plaint, was one to which S. 15, Specific Relief Act, could not have any application; and the rule laid down by the Judicial Committee, in Rai Promatha Nath Mittra's case (2) that unless there was relinquishment by the plaintiff of claims, as provided by that section, there could be no decree made for specific performance, in favour of the plaintiff, could not therefore apply.

The contract in the case before us, was, after ratification, a concluded contract in regard to the shares of defendants 2, 4 and 5, and as such, specific performance could be granted of the same. The decision of the learned District Judge, in the Court of appeal below, in favour of the plaintiff, is, in our judgment, correct, and it is in consonance with the principles underlying the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the cases referred to above, upon which reliance has been placed on behalf of defendants 2 and 4 to 13 in the suit. In the result both the appeals are dismissed with costs. The decision and decree passed by the learned District Judge in the Court of appeal below are affirmed.

Appeal No. 8 of 1929, Decided on 1st June 1932, against original decree of Second Class Sub-Judge, 24-Parganas, D/- 19th May 1928.

(a) Mahomedan Law — Wakf — Construction—Principle stated.

The intentions of the settlor have to be gathered primarily from the terms of the deed, though attendant circumstances may be looked into if the intention is not apparent or clear from such terms, and subsequent circumstances also, but only if and so far as they throw any light on such intention: A I R 1932 Cal 93, Ref. [P 105 C 1]

(b) Mahomedan Law—Wakf—Mere declaration of wakif extinguishes his rights in wakf property.

According to Abu Yusuf whose tenets hold the field so far as Bengal is concerned the wakf becomes absolute and binding on the mere declaration of the wakif, and on such declaration being made, his rights in the properties which form the subject matter of the declaration become extinguished at once: A I R 1922 Cal 429; A I R 1930 Cal 673 and A I R 1927 P C 191, Ref. [P 105 C 1]

(c) Mahomedan Law — Wakf — Validity established — Whether acted on or not is immaterial.

Once it is found that a wakf is valid, it is wholly immaterial whether its provisions were carried out or not for that is a matter of breach of trust only. Once it is found that the wakf is valid and operative, even the wakif himself has no power to interfere with it. [P 105 C 2]

(d) Mahomedan Law — Wakf — Family settlement made after wakf cannot affect wakf property.

Family settlement cannot affect any properties which were not the properties of the family but were the properties of an endowment validly created, the ownership of which belonged not to the parties to the settlement but to the Almighty. Under the guise of a family arrangement a party cannot enter into a transaction which he is not under the law competent to do and which is beyond his disposing power. Hence even if the wakf did not act according to the terms of the wakf or subsequently converted a part of the wakf property into a family dwelling house for himself or his heirs or that he disposed of some of the properties of the endowment as if they were personal properties of his own they would not affect the validity or operative character of the wakf. [P 105 C 2]

(c) Mahomedan Law—Alienation—Guardian—De facto guardian cannot alienate minor's property but minor can ratify alienation on becoming major.

Under the Mahomedan law a mother has no power as de facto guardian of her infant children to alienate or charge their immovable property. But if the minor on coming of age ratifies the arrangement or accepts a benefit under it he would be estopped from questioning its validity. [P 108 C 2]

(f) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142 and 144—No dispossession or discontinuance—

Suit for possession by plaintiff is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 142.

Where there is no transfer by the plaintiff to the defendant of any interest in immovable property at all but only a permission to reside in the premises, and so there was no dispossession nor any discontinuance of possession on the part of the plaintiff, plaintiff must be deemed to have been in possession of the premises; and if the defendants contend that they acquired by adverse possession for over 12 years a limited interest, viz., a right to reside which could not be defeated, the suit is governed by Art. 141 and not by Art. 142 and time would begin to run only after plaintiff's right to that possession is denied. The plaintiff's case shortly put was the following: that his father Mohamed Ismail, who owned considerable properties in and near about Calcutta built a mosque at No. 21, Ismail Street, and dedicated it as a place of worship for the Mahomedan public; and for the upkeep of the same he also, by a deed of wakfnama dated 17th January 1864 dedicated, amongst other properties, premises No. 20, Ismail Street, which consisted of some land with buildings standing thereon; that the said Mohamed Ismail acted as muttawali during his lifetime, that on his death his son Mohamed Ibrahim, and on the death of the latter the plaintiff came to be muttawali; that during the minority of the plaintiff, Syed Tajammal Hossein, father of defendants 1 to 4, who was the husband of the plaintiffs' sister Srimati Azimunnessa Bibi, managed the properties on his behalf; that by lease and license of the plaintiff, his two sisters, viz., Srimati Fatema Bibi and the said Srimati Azimunnessa Bibi, lived with their respective families in certain rooms in the said premises No. 20

Ismail Street; that the said Azimunnessa Bibi died in 1915, and since her death her children, defendants 1 to 4, were allowed permission by the plaintiff to remain in occupation of certain rooms in the said premises which were described in the schedule to the plaint, and in 1916, defendant 1 agreed to pay Rs. 5 as rent for an outer room which he also came to occupy; and that the plaintiff as muttawali of the wakf served a notice on the defendants to vacate the rooms in their possession, but the defendants set up a claim to retain possession thereof. It was said in the plaint that the pro forma defendants 4 and 5 did not question the title of the plaintiffs and on the contrary expressed their willingness to vacate the rooms in their possession, and so no relief was claimed as against them.

The defence was that no valid wakf was created by Mohammad Ismail and at any rate the wakf which he created was never acted upon by him; that soon after the wakfnama he himself converted premises No. 20 Ismail Street, into a family dwelling house; that he executed a will before his death; that on his death the heirs executed an ekrarnama as amongst themselves and partitioned the properties left by him; that by the ekrarnama it was agreed that the said premises would be used as a family dwelling house by his heirs; and that having acquired the right so conferred by the ekrarnama the father or the defendant made extensive addition and alterations at his own expense. Occupation of the heirs under the leave and license of the plaintiff, as well as the lease at a rental of Rs. 5 were denied. The Subordinate Judge having decreed the suit defendants 1 to 3 have preferred this appeal.

Before dealing with the questions raised a few more facts require to be stated. By the wakfnama executed on 17th January 1864, Mohamed Ismail dedicated two plots of land, Nos. 393 and 394 said to comprise 1 bigha 4 cottas of land together with certain structures. He constituted himself the first muttawali and reserved to himself the right to appoint either one of his heirs or a stranger as muttawali to act after him. He provided that:

"If during my life-time I do not appoint anybody as muttawali either from amongst my heirs or outsiders, then out of my heirs, first of all out of my male heirs, my sons, should they be competent or honest, or otherwise one of them (my other heirs), who may be competent or honest, shall carry out the duties of the towliat."

He directed that after defraying the expenses detailed, whoever would be muttawali would get a remuneration not exceeding Rs. 10 per month.

It appears that Muhammad Ismail made a will on 24th June 1875. The will is not forthcoming and it is not possible to say if and to what extent it interfered with the wakf. It then appears that after the death of Muhammad Ismail and on 30th June 1876 an ekrarnama was executed. The parties to this document were: (1) Mt. Sharfunnessa, the widow of Muhammad Ismail, for self and as mother and guardian of her minor son Abdur Rahim; (2) Muhammad Ibrahim, son of Muhammad Ismail; (3) Fatima Bibi; and (4) Azimunnessa Bibi. It was stated in this document that Muhammad Ismail had built a mosque and had dedicated three plots of lands, Nos. 383, 393 and 394 not the last two plots only as in the wakfnama, and the first plot (containing 13 cottas of land) and had divided his house properties in Gardener's Lane and European Asylum Lane amongst the executants, his heirs, by virtue of the will dated 24th June 1875. It was stated further that the heirs agreeing with one another thought it better to perform all acts according to the desire of their deceased ancestor and that they accordingly made certain stipulations the more important of which, to quote the words of the deed, were the following:

1. "We by this deed declare that we shall in compliance with the will and towliat, be bound by the recitals in this deed, that is to say, our claim in the capacity of heirs respecting the lands bearing holdings Nos. 383, 393 and 394 with the brick-built houses relating to the wakf shall not be valid."

2. "We, Muhammad Ebrahim, Muhammad Abdur Rahim and Muhammad Gholam Gous shall remain mutwallis thereof, but during the minority of Muhammad Abdur Rahim and Muhammad Gholam Gous all the affairs relating to the trust shall be conducted by me Muhammad Ebrahim."

3. "After defraying the proper and necessary expenses of the wakf, whatever balance out of the income of the wakf property will be left shall be divided equally amongst us the three mutwallis monthly by way of remuneration."

4. "None of the heirs or mutwallis shall have any claim to the right of direct or exclusive possession of the particular dwelling house No. 20 nor shall any of them have the right to prevent any other from residing therein or occupying it for residence. On the other hand excepting the right of transfer, etc., we the heirs and the mutwallis shall always have equal right of residence. All the heirs and mutwallis shall equally be bound to do all improvements and repairs with regard to the said house."

5. "Whatever debts are due by the said deceased ancestor shall be paid according to the details given below. The details given are that Muhammad Ebrahim should pay Rs. 229, Muhammad Abdur Rahim Rs. 173, Fatima Bibi Rs. 291 and Azimunnessa Bibi Rs. 177, that is to say Rs. 1,070 in all."

Now, one of the issues framed in the suit in view of the pleadings of the parties, was:

"Was the wakfnama acted upon? Is it a valid and binding document? Can the defendants raise this question?"

The intention, as far as one can gather, was on the part of the defendants to challenge the validity of the dedication itself and to assert that it was not operative because the wakif himself did not act according to its terms; and on the other hand on the part of the plaintiff to deny the right of the defendants to raise these questions. In the letter (Ex. C) which was written by the defendants' solicitor in answer to the notice dated 12th June 1930 calling upon them to vacate by 30th June 1930, it was said:

"They (i. e., the defendants) state that they are occupying a portion of the premises No. 20 Moulvi Ismail Street, as heirs of the wakif and they have every right to do so. A reference to the wakfnama and the deed of confirmation of the said wakfnama dated 30th June 1876 will convince you of the fact. Your allegation that they are occupying a portion of the said premises with your client's leave and license is without foundation and my clients totally deny the same."

It is clear therefore that the defendants claim at that time was based upon the wakfnama and the ekrarnama, which purported to confirm the wakf and not to dispute it. It is quite true that in the written statement, substance of which has been already quoted above, the validity of the original dedication and the operative character of the wakf were challenged; but it is obvious that such a position is not consistent with the letter Ex. C."

Be that as it may, when the issue has been tried and decided, we think we should express our view on it. The original dedication does not seem faulty in any respect. The wakif went through the formality and the procedure of having the deed registered. There is nothing to indicate that it was not executed with the bona fide intention of creating a wakf. The intentions of the settler have to be gathered primarily from the terms of the deed, though attendant circumstances may be looked into if the intention is not apparent or clear from such terms, and subsequent circumstances also, but only if and so far as they throw any light on such intention: see Masuda Khatun Bibi v. Muhammad Ebrahim (1) and the cases referred to in it. According to Abu Yusuf whose tenets hold the field so far as Bengal is concerned [Jinjira Khatun v. Muhammad Fakirulla Mia (2)] the wakf becomes absolute and binding on the mere declaration of the wakif, and on such declaration being made his rights in the properties which form the subject-matter of the declaration become extinguished at once: Debendra Nath v. Nohar Mal Jalan (3). In the case of Balla Mal v. Ataullah Khan (4) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have observed:

"Under the Act (meaning the Wakf Validating Act, 1913) a wakf is not rendered invalid merely because it appears that the main object of the settlor was to make a settlement of his property on his family rather than to devote it to what are understood as charitable purposes, whereas with regard to a wakf created before the passing of the Act the test still is, as laid down by the Board in Ahsanulla Chowdhury v. Amar Chandra Kundu (5), Mujibunnissa v. Abdur Rahim (6), Ramanandan Oshthar v. Veva Lalal Marakayar (7) and Solehman Quader v. Saiton Ullah Bahadur (8), was there a substantial dedication of the properties included in the wakf to charitable purposes. The test may sometimes be difficult of application and in applying it, the Courts, especially, since the passing of the Act, will not be disposed to construe the provision of the deed too strictly; but still the question must remain whether the properties included in the wakf have been substantially dedicated to charity, or whether they have been put into wakf by the settlor with the real object of effecting some non-charitable purpose, such as, for instance, that of making a family settlement of his property which would otherwise be invalid as opposed to the Mahomedan law of succession. . . . The law as laid down by the Board is that the properties must be substantially dedicated to charity, and not . . . that the gift to charity should be substantial."

Judged in the light of these tests, the materials placed before the Court do not suggest that the wakf was anything else than a valid one. Once this is found, it is wholly immaterial whether its provisions were carried out or not, for that is a matter of breach of trust only. In so far therefore as it has been contended that the wakif himself did not act according to the terms of the wakf, or that he subsequently converted the premises No. 20, Ismail Street, into a family dwelling-house for himself or his heirs or that he disposed of some of the properties of the endowment as if they were personal properties of his own, allegations even if proved would not affect the validity or operative character of the wakf which in our opinion was in its inception a good Mussalman Wakf. In our judgment, no claim of the defendants based on the position that the premises was not a property of the endowment, but a personal property left by Muhammad Ismail can possibly succeed.

Subsidiary to the contention just dealt with, it has been argued that the wakif by the will which was subsequently executed interfered with the wakf. Once it is found that the wakf was valid and operative, even the wakif himself had no power to interfere with it; but it is not at all clear that he, in fact, did so. The will as already stated is not forthcoming. It is very likely that it is being withheld by the plaintiff and so a presumption may not unreasonably be drawn against him that if produced it would have gone against some part of his case. The secondary evidence that has been sought to be given of its contents by certain witnesses is not of a convincing character at all. In a conveyance executed by the plaintiff in 1891 in respect of premises No. 19, Gardener Lane, it was recited that Muhammad Ismail being absolutely seized and possessed of the said premises had executed a will on 24th June 1875 by which he had partitioned and divided his real estate amongst his widow and children, and that after his death the said widow and children had amicably divided and partitioned the said estate amongst themselves by an instrument of partition dated 30th June 1876. The plaintiff's evidence betrays an anxiety on his part to deny all knowledge of everything. He deposed thus:

"I am not aware of any will of my father. No will of his is with me. I am not aware of any ekrarnama. I sold the property No. 19, Gardener Lane. In that respect I relied upon my brother-in-law Syed Tajammal Hossein, father of defendants 1 to 4, for everything I did as I was directed by him. I cannot understand English documents. He dictated what was recited in the kobala. He told me that everything was all right. So I accepted it as correct. I was not aware of its contents. I do not know that in this deed any reference to the will was true."

It is evident that these denials are not true and that they must have been made with an ulterior motive. But even then it cannot be inferred from them or from what was said in the conveyance that the will in any way concerned the wakf properties. On the other hand the avowed object of the ekrarnama and the basis on which it proceeded was to leave the endowment untouched. And further, the defendants, if they rest their case upon the ekrarnama, as they most undoubtedly do, must be held bound by the admission contained in it as regards the validity and operative character of the wakf. This being the position, what has to be considered next is whether the plaintiff should be held bound by the ekrarnama. It has been contended on behalf of the defendants, in the first place, that the parties to this deed are bound by its terms inasmuch as it embodies a family settlement arrived at bona fide. It may be assumed from what is to be gathered from the terms of the deed, though there is no direct evidence worthy of belief to that effect, that there was an apprehension of dispute, that the arrangement was made bona fide with the object of removing that dispute which might induce a litigation the result of which was uncertain, and that there was a policy of giving and taking pursued in arriving at that settlement. This is apparent from the recitals in the deed itself; Muhammad Gous being given the status of a mutwalli, provision being made as to who should act as guardian of the mutwallis as minors, and arrangement being made as to which party was to discharge what share of the debts.

In these essentials the arrangement satisfies the requirements of a bona fide family settlement. But such settlement could not possibly affect any properties which were not the properties of the family but were the properties of an endowment validly created, the ownership of which belonged not to the parties to the settlement but to the Almighty. Under the guise of a family arrangement a party cannot enter into a transaction which he is not under the law competent to do and which is beyond his disposing power, Indra Narain Manna v. Sarbajit Dasi (9). It has next been contended that the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the settlement embodied in the ekrarnama because the plaintiff himself came in as a mutwalli by reason of the terms of the ekrarnama. On behalf of the plaintiff it has been argued that no estoppel can possibly arise as against the plaintiff because the plaintiff was a minor at the date of the ekrarnama and whatever arrangement may have been agreed by his mother as her guardian is not binding on her, and reliance in this behalf has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (10). As far as the last mentioned contention is concerned it is quite true that under the Mahomedan law a mother has no power as de facto guardian of her infant children to alienate or charge their immovable property. But it cannot be disputed that if the minor on coming of age ratifies the arrangement or accepts a benefit under it, he would be estopped from questioning its validity. A more sound position for the plaintiff to take would have been to say that even though there might be an estoppel personal to the plaintiff by reason of such benefits as he might have received for himself under the ekrarnama, and which he would not be entitled to under the towliat, such estoppel can only be personal to the plaintiff and can in no way be operative as against the endowment.

Under the wakfnama the plaintiff was to be a mutwalli if he was competent and honest and under the ekrarnama he became one of the mutwallis. It is possible that there was no objection to his being the mutwalli on the ground of want of competency and honesty, and in that way he, by being appointed mutwalli under the ekrarnama, got nothing under it to which he was not entitled under the wakfnama. But, that he obtained certain advantages under the ekrarnama which he had not under the wakfnama, cannot be seriously disputed for, as far as can be gathered now, it removed a dispute as to mutwalliship; it divided the liability for the debts and it enhanced the remuneration for the mutwalli which in the absence of the accounts, which must be with him and which he has not filed, must be taken to have been drawn by him since then. That there may be an estoppel personally to that extent as against the plaintiff is a matter on which we entertain no doubt. It has been argued that there can be no estoppel where both the parties made an agreement with full knowledge of the real facts. This proposition cannot be disputed. But the defendant may say that though the property was wakf property and they were aware of that fact they were not aware that an arrangement of the character embodied in the ekrarnama was outside the competency of the mutwalli to make. Of course, the defendants rested their case upon a much higher footing, alleging that they and their father had spent money on improvements and repairs and the plaintiff has reaped the benefit thereof, but in this respect their case has failed.

This leads us to a consideration of the next question that arises, namely whether this estoppel which is personal to the plaintiff precludes him from going to recover possession on behalf of the endowment. In the case of Jagannath Mohinee Dosses v. Sookha Mony Das (11) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that a former abuse of trust in another instance could not be pleaded against a trustee who sought to prevent a repetition of abuse, even if he were formerly implicated in the same indefensible courses against which he was seeking to protect the property, though it would be a reason for excluding him from administration of the property as shebait. The question of estoppel did not arise in that case. Their Lordships observed:

"The Court could not with propriety say: 'We will decline to protect the property and leave it further exposed to loss,' and decline to make a declaration that it is trust property merely because they would not trust the plaintiff with its administration."

Their Lordships made a decree declaring that the properties were and continued dedicated to a trust, but made no decree for possession which had been prayed for and further declared that the decree was to be without prejudice to any further suit or proceedings for the enforcement of the trust declared on the appointment of a proper shebait. It has been contended before us on behalf of the plaintiff that it is always open to a shebait or a trustee to sue for recovering trust property alienated by himself and that there is nothing to stand in the way of his succeeding in the suit once he establishes that the alienation was unauthorized and beyond his powers. The following observations in Narain Das v. Abdul Rahim (12) (at p. 879 of 47 Cal.) have been relied on in this connection:

"A mutwalli is a mere manager and in the case of public charitable endowment, such as the present the legal ownership of the property dedicated is the Divine Being or in the charity created in his name. A transfer by a mutwalli who assumes to deal with the trust property as if he were the true owners, in breach of his duty and in fraud of the trust reposed in him, is ultra vires and may be avoided by timely proceedings taken for the purpose."

The observations do not support the position contended for, and it will be seen that the case in which they were made was a suit by the successor of a mutwalli who had made the alienation. Reference in this connection has also been made to the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Muhammad Fahimul Haq v. Jagat Ballaw Ghosh (13) (at p. 400 of 2 Pat.) where it has been said:

"The general principle in these cases is that where the transfer is void in law no question of equity as between the transferor and the transferee can arise."

Whether the principle can be laid down in so general terms is a matter which we need not discuss. But we are not prepared to hold that a Court is so powerless as to feel compelled in all cases to place the property again in the hands of the same delinquent mutwalli or shebait who had previously committed a breach of trust in respect of it and who now seeks to avoid the consequences of his own act, even though proper defences are taken resisting such a course. That a trustee of an endowment may under circumstances be estopped from questioning his own breach of trust is a proposition that cannot be denied: Sidhu Sahu v. Gopi Charan Das (14). It is unnecessary however to pursue this matter any further because it has not been pleaded in this case on behalf of the defence that by virtue of any misconduct on the part of the plaintiff he is disentitled to recover possession of the properties in his capacity as mutwalli. There was no plea of the character, and there was no issue raised in order to determine whether and if so to what extent the plaintiff was debarred from suing for possession in his capacity as mutwalli, nor any issue as to what sort of a decree, if any, he was entitled to in the circumstances of the case. In our judgment therefore, in so far as the present case is concerned, there is nothing in the nature of a bar to stand in the way of the plaintiff getting a declaration to the effect that the property in suit is the property of the endowment in respect of which he is the mutwalli and also an order that the said property be restored to the endowment. In other words, in our opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, in his claim for khas possession, if the defendants fail to establish their right to remain on the premises.

So far as this right is concerned the material on which the defendants rely is the ekrarnama; the wakfnama gives them no such right. So far as the ekrarnama is concerned, it is impossible to read its terms as creating any right in favour of anybody except the heirs of Muhammad Ismail who were parties to the deed. We have examined its clauses as carefully as possible, but we can find no means of construing it as creating any right whatever in favour of any descendants of the said heirs. Unless such an interpretation is permissible the defendants get no benefit from its terms.

The last contention of the defendants is, as it must be, that the claim is barred. It has been maintained on their behalf that Art. 142, Lim. Act, is the article to apply. As authority they rely on the decision of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Bageswari Charan Singh v. Jagarnath Koeri (15). In that case there was an alienation, a gift, void ab initio and consequent on it a discontinuance of possession of the real owner. In the present case there was no transfer of any interest in immovable property at all but only permission to reside in the premises, and so there was no dispossession nor any discontinuance of possession on the part of the plaintiff; notwithstanding the permission, such possession as the grantor of the leave of license could have, he had in the premises. It has also been argued that the defendants and their predecessors acquired by virtue of adverse possession for over twelve years a limited interest, namely, a right to reside which could not be defeated. One amongst several answers to this contention is that there was never any such right asserted adversely to the plaintiff at any time before the solicitor's letter Ex. C. In our opinion the article applicable to the case is Art. 144 of the Act, and time began to run only after the plaintiff's right to khas possession was denied, when only and not before the defendants' possession became adverse to the plaintiff. We can find no justification for holding that the plaintiff's claim is barred.

We have no option therefore but to dismiss the appeal and uphold the decision of the Court below. As we are not satisfied that the plaintiff really wants the rooms for the purposes of the wakf, and as a certain amount of deferential treatment in respect of the descendants of the founder of the wakf at the hands of the plaintiff, the present mutwalli, is apparent from the very frame of the suit, we would not make any order for costs in favour of the plaintiff so far as the appeal is concerned.

Sashi Bhusan Sarkar and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Appeal No. 30 of 1931, Decided on 23rd May 1932, against original decree of First Class Sub-Judge, Faridpore, D/- 22nd December 1930.

(a) Contract—Specific performance may be granted when essential terms are settled—Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 21 (c).

If the essential terms of a contract are settled the contract may well be regarded as complete and concluded and may be enforced or specifically performed, either as consisting of those terms only or together with such other terms and conditions as may be regarded as being usual in contracts of that description. [P 111 C 2]

(b) Principal and Agent—Nature of proof of implied authority of agent to settle lease indicated—Otherwise principal is not bound—Contract Act (1872), S. 237.

It was sought to be established that D had an implied authority to settle a lease on behalf of B, a shebait. The lower Court found that D was acting as if he was the real shebait.

Held: that the finding was insufficient to prove implied authority. What has to be found in this connexion was that D had implied authority to enter into a contract of the present nature, and for that it would be necessary to find that he had been authorized to do some work of this class to which the contract belongs. If an authority to settle this lease could be inferred from the facts and circumstances, it would have been more than enough; or if it could be established that he had authority generally to make all settlements, that also would have been sufficient; or if the settlement of this lease was necessary in order to do an act which D was authorized to do, that also would have sufficed. But in the absence of any such proofs, the authority cannot be held to be proved so as to bind the principal: Case law referred. [P 113 C 1]

(c) Hindu Law—Perpetual minority of deity is not under Hindu law—Valid contract on behalf of deity is capable of specific performance.

The analogy of minority of deities is a pure fiction for which no authority is to be found in Hindu law itself and there is no principle on which on such analogy a contract on behalf of a deity, otherwise good and valid can be taken out of the class of contracts of which specific performance may be granted under the law.

[P 113 C 1]

(d) Trusts Act (1882), S. 47—Duties of trustee cannot be delegated—Agent acting for shebait in matter which shebait was bound to look to—Shebait repudiating agent's acts—Specific performance cannot be obtained—Specific performance.

It is open to a trustee or a shebait to appoint a sub-agent, but such appointment must only be as a means of carrying out his own duties himself and not for the purpose of delegating those duties by means of such appointment.

Where the granting of a lease was a matter with regard to which D, the shebait, was bound to exercise her judgment, and when it is found that the agent under a supposed authority which must have purported to delegate that exercise of judgment to him made the contract, and when the shebait repudiates the contract at the earliest opportunity available to her, it is impossible to uphold this delegation, which is a good deal more than the mere employment of a machinery for carrying out the duties which attach to the shebait in the fiduciary character she occupies, and it is impossible to hold that specific performance should be granted in respect of it: *A I B 1922 P. Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Faridpur, decreeing a suit for specific performance of a contract of lease. Defendants 1, 2 and 4 are the appellants. The case of the plaintiffs, who were eleven in number, was the following: There is a jalkar mehal which is the debutter property of defendant 1, a group of deities, of whom the shebait is defendant 2 who is the mother of defendant 3, her only son. The jalkar was under an ijara lease with defendant 4, for a period of four years and a half which was to expire in Chaitra 1336 (=April 1929). On 16th Ashar 1335 (=30th June 1928) defendant 3 on behalf of defendant 2 having announced at Goalundo Ghat that on the expiry of the said lease the jalkar mehal would be again let out in ijara for a term of five years, there was a verbal contract between him and the first four plaintiffs to the effect that the said plaintiffs would be granted the said lease at an annual rent of Rs. 6,998; that they would pay defendant 2 Rs. 10,000 as rent in advance, out of which Rs. 2,000 was to be credited against the rent every year; that the remainder of the amount of rent would be paid in eight specified instalments every year; and that defendant 2 would execute a potta in favour of the said plaintiffs before the puja of 1338 and the said plaintiffs would also execute a kabuliat at the same time. In pursuance of the said contract the said plaintiffs paid Rs. 2,355 in several instalments up to 22nd Kartic 1335 (=8th November 1928).

On 24th Aswin 1335 (=10th October 1928) defendant 3 sent to plaintiff 4 a draft of the lease through an officer of his and informed him that the documents would be executed after the puja was over. On 14th Kartic 1335 (=31st October 1928) another officer was sent by defendant 3 for purchasing the stamps and they were purchased on 16th Kartic 1335 (=2nd November 1928), the price thereof, Rs. 210, being paid by plaintiff 4 on the understanding that it would be credited against the ijara rent. Defendant 3 put off the execution of the document on one pretext or another and ultimately gave out in Aswin 1336 (=September 1929) that his mother, defendant 2, would not grant the lease. The plaintiff's case was that "defendant 3 was performing all acts of management, such as looking after, preservation and settlement, etc., of the said debuttar and other properties,"

"as a matter of fact defendant 3 was the authorized agent of defendant 2."

Their case further was that defendant 4, with full knowledge of the aforesaid contract and of the receipt of money thereunder got a fresh lease of the said jalkar executed in his favour by defendant 2, and that in fact it was he who had induced defendants 2 and 3 to break the aforesaid contract. Various defences were taken. Defendant 4 alleged inter alia that he was a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration. Defendant 3 pleaded that there was no concluded contract with the eleven plaintiffs but only a proposal on the part of the first four plaintiffs to take a lease from defendant 2 through him, they having asked him to recommend to her the granting of lease upon the terms alleged and having proposed to pay him Rs. 1,000 and having agreed to pay the advance rent of Rupees 10,000 before the puja of 1335 (=1928); that the said plaintiffs deposited some money but failed to pay up the entire sum of Rs. 10,000 before the puja of 1335 (=1928); that in Pous 1335 (=December 1928) the said plaintiffs asked for extension of time but he refused and asked them to take back the deposit, and in the same month defendant 2, on coming to know of the matter rebuked defendant 3 for making negotiations with the plaintiffs for the lease and asked him to return the money; and that the draft of the potta filed by the plaintiffs was not genuine.

Defendants 1 and 2 took the defence that defendant 3 was not an authorized agent for making such a contract; that she had no knowledge of the contract on the deposit; that when she came to know that such proposal and negotiations had been made she at once turned them down; that the plaintiffs were tenants and ijaradars under the zamindars of Teota with whom she had litigation and who had a jalkar adjacent to this one and so the proposed lease would be undesirable; that defendant 4 had connexion with the estate for a long time before, and his father, an old officer of the estate, held this jalkar in ijara from long before, and he himself was the ijaradar for the period that was running; and that on 18th Sravan 1336 (=3rd August 1929) the lease was granted to him by defendant 2 for five years (from 1337 to 1341) on receipt of an advance rent of Rs. 12,000 and at a yearly rent of Rupees 7,000 out of which the said advance was to be deducted in instalments. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part. He ordered specific performance of the contract of lease as embodied in the draft in favour of plaintiffs 1 to 4 and khas possession of the jalkar to be delivered to them on their paying the balance of the advance rent, i. e. Rs. 7,435. He dismissed the suit in so far as it was of the plaintiffs other than Nos. 1 to 4. (Their Lordships in disposing of these matters held that the case was to be decided on the footing that defendant 3 was to be regarded as agent of defendant 2 and proceeded). The two questions that have to be primarily considered are: first was there a concluded contract which can be enforced; and second, if so, had defendant 3 authority to enter into it on behalf of defendant 2? To take the first question first. Upon the evidence which the plaintiffs have adduced there can be no reasonable doubt that there was a contract as alleged on their behalf. That the terms were proposed and agreed upon as between plaintiffs 1 to 4 and defendant 3 was also admitted on behalf of the latter except that it was alleged on his behalf that the understanding was that he would be paid Rs. 1,000 and would recommend to defendant 1 the granting of the proposed lease. Defendant 3 did not depose nor was any evidence adduced to support his version of the transaction. We think the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that defendant 3 deliberately omitted to put himself forward and we think that even though he was ill he could have given his deposition on commission if only he was not unwilling to face the trial. The points, upon which reliance was placed for the purpose of establishing that there was no complete contract but only a proposal depending on the acceptance of defendant 2 on the recommendation of defendant 3, are that the receipts for the moneys paid show that the moneys were to be held in deposit, that the terms of the alleged contract were not put into writing at the time, that as has been deposed to by plaintiff 1, when the latter suggested to defendant 3 that they should be put down in writing, defendant 3 replied that he would send a draft patta which would be enough, that even so late as on 31st October 1928 [Ex. 2 (d)] defendant 3 was inquiring as regards the names of the persons in whose favour the lease had to be executed, and further that the draft itself contained many new terms and conditions which were admittedly not thought of by the parties at the time of the said contract.

In our opinion these facts do not necessarily show there was no completed contract. It is quite true that the contract that can be enforced is the original contract and not the contract embodied in the draft; and in this respect the Subordinate Judge's judgment can only be upheld on the footing that the plaintiffs raised no objection to take the lease in that form. But we are unable to hold that merely because the moneys received were allowed to remain in deposit in anticipation of the due execution and exchange of documents between the parties or that the details were left to be settled in future when the draft would be tendered, or that the names of the actual parties in whose favour the lease would be executed were not known to defendant 3, the contract, the essential terms of which had been agreed upon, is to be regarded as being incomplete so as to be incapable of specific performance or unfit to be enforced. If the essential terms of a contract are settled, the contract may well be regarded as complete and concluded and may be enforced or specifically performed, either as consisting of those terms only or together with such other terms and conditions as may be regarded as being usual in contracts of that description. Judged by this test, the terms contained in the draft Ex. 3 may not satisfy its requirements. But the plaintiffs not having raised any objection and on the other hand being willing to have the lease in that form, it is not open to the appellants to contend that there was no complete or concluded contract on 16th Ashar 1335 (30th June 1928) to the extent that the terms, which are all the essential terms of a contract of this description, were settled between the parties. In the result we hold that there was a complete and concluded contract between the parties as alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs. We are also of opinion that the plaintiffs' version of the subsequent events, except as regards a few matters which however are of no real consequence, is true in the main. We think that the plaintiffs' account of the deposits and payments that were made, of the sending of the draft patta by defendant 3 to them, of the purchase of the stamp paper for the documents and of the subsequent refusal of defendant 3 to have the lease executed has been satisfactorily proved.

Of the points on which we feel doubtful about the truth of the plaintiffs' story, a few require to be mentioned in view of the defence taken, namely that the plaintiffs themselves abandoned the contract or at any rate failed to perform their part of it. (Their Lordships, after dealing with these matters, concluded that it was not established that the plaintiffs had abandoned the contract or were in default.) The second question is the question of authority. It is admitted that there was no express authority from defendant 2 in favour of defendant 3. An implied authority in his favour however has been sought to be established: Defendant 2, in her anxiety to repudiate the contract, has, it seems, endeavoured to put her case too high in her own evidence, and consequently her own evidence in this respect cannot be trusted. Equally unconvincing is the evidence of her witnesses who have endeavoured to make out that defendant 3 took no part whatever in the affairs of the estate. The evidence which has been adduced on behalf of the plaintiff sufficiently establishes that defendant 2 trusted defendant 3 and it was the latter who really did the works necessary to be done for the management of the estate. He was her only son, and however wayward he may have been, she does not appear to have withdrawn her confidence from him or excluded him from conducting the affairs of the estate. It is quite possible that in matters relating to the management of the estate it was his voice that used to carry weight, that the officers of the estate would look upon him as their master and carry out his bidding and that the lady herself did not in fact interfere with his doings. Notwithstanding all this it will still be necessary to find, in order to bind defendant 2 by any act of defendant 3 that the latter had authority not necessarily express, but such as may be implied by the facts and circumstances of the case. The term "agency" is very wide in its import. In Bh Blackburn Low & Co. v. Vigors (1) Lord Halsbury observed:

"I cannot but think that the somewhat vague use of the word 'agent' leads to confusion. Some agents so far represent the principal that in all respects their acts and intentions and their knowledge may truly be said to be the acts, intentions and knowledge of the principal. Other agents may have so limited and narrow an authority both in fact and in the common understanding of their form of employment that it would be quite inaccurate to say that such an agent's knowledge or intentions are the knowledge and intentions of their principal; and whether his acts are the acts of his principal depends upon the specific authority he has received."

In the case of Bombay Burma Trading Corporation Ltd. v. Mirza Mahmedally (2) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred to an earlier decision of the Board in Mackay v. The Commercial Bank of New Brunswick (3) in which the rule was laid down as to the principles which regulate the liability of a master for the acts of an agent done without his express authority but still within the scope of the authority of the agent. Their Lordships also quoted with approval the observation of Willes, J., in Barwick v. The English Joint Stock Bank (4) as containing as clear an exposition of the law upon this subject as is anywhere to be found. They are as follows:

"With respect to the question whether a principal is answerable for the act of his agent in the course of his master's business and for his master's benefit, no sensible distinction can be drawn between the case of fraud and in the case of any other wrong. The general rule is that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit . . . In all these cases it may be said, as it was said here, that the master had not authorized the act. It is true he has not authorized the particular act, but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in."

For instance where an agent under his power of attorney possessed implied authority to raise money by loan for the purpose of carrying on the business affairs entrusted to him which authority under circumstances of emergency must be deemed to include a power to borrow on exceptional terms outside the ordinary course of business, it was held that the lender was not bound to inquire whether the emergency had arisen or not, but that he was entitled to recover from the principal if he lent to the agent bona fide and without notice that the agent was exceeding his mandate: Montaignac v. Shitta (5). So also where an agent in contracting on behalf of his principal has acted within the terms of a written authority given to him by his principal, but the existence of which was not known to the other party to the contract, that principal cannot, if the other party has acted bona fide, repudiate liability on the contract on the ground that the agent, in making it, acted in his own interests and those of the principal: Hambro v. Burnand (6). That if the act of the agent falls within the class of acts delegated to him, the mere fact that the interest at stake is considerable or extraordinary, would not make any difference appears sufficiently from the decision in In re, Drabble Bros. (7). Bearing these observations in mind we have to examine the materials which have a bearing on this question. (Their Lordships summarized the evidence for the plaintiff and proceeded). The Subordinate Judge upon the above evidence has come to the conclusion that defendant 3 had been acting as if he was the malik or the shobait and that it shows that he and not defendant 2 was the real shobait of the deities, defendant 1. We are of opinion that all this evidence, giving to it the fullest weight, would not go anywhere near what has to be proved in this case to enable the plaintiffs to succeed. Moreover, this finding of the Subordinate Judge, even if correct, would not in our opinion sufficiently support his decision. What has to be found in this connexion is that defendant 3 had implied authority to enter into a contract of the present nature, and for that it would be necessary to find that he had been authorized by defendant 2 to do some work of this class to which the contract belongs.

Of course if an authority to settle this jalkar could be inferred from the facts and circumstances, it would have been more than enough; or if it could be established that he had authority generally to make all settlements, that also would have been sufficient; or if the settlement of this jalkar was necessary in order to do an act which defendant 3 was authorized to do, that also would have sufficed. But in our opinion no such thing can be held to have been established in the present case. It may be that defendant 2 ordinarily left the affairs of the estate in the hands of defendant 3 and so long as she did not interfere everything went on all right. But it has not been proved that she ever granted him any power or authority to enter into a contract of this kind or class on her behalf. Some evidence has been given by the plaintiffs as witnesses in this case to show the nature of work which they had seen defendant 3 do in connexion with the estate. That too is very general evidence and falls far short of establishing a liability on the part of a principal on the ground that his words or conduct induced third parties to believe that the acts of the agent were within the scope of the agent's authority, on the principle underlying S. 239, Contract Act. It may also be pointed out here that the plaintiffs have not rested their claim on any such estoppel. Defendant 2 has not produced the Jama Kharach of the estate for the year 1335. We are not satisfied that the explanation given for its non-production is true. It is possible that if produced the Jama Kharach would have shown that the moneys received under the contract were credited in it. But this fact, even if it be assumed to be proved, would not in our opinion carry the case any far. In our judgment, the plaintiffs have failed to prove any facts or circumstances which would justify us in holding that defendant 2 was bound by the contract which defendant 3 had made. What we have just said is sufficient for the disposal of this appeal. But some of the other conclusions of the Subordinate Judge have also been either challenged or sought to be supported before us and so we propose to express our opinion on them though quite briefly. (Their Lordships after agreeing with the lower Court in holding that the contract was not injurious to the defaulter and that defendant 4 had knowledge of the contract when he took the lease, proceeded). It has been argued that the deities are perpetual minors and so no contract made on their behalf should be specifically enforced. The analogy of minority of deities, in our judgment, is a pure fiction, for which no authority is to be found in Hindu law itself and we can conceive of no principle on which on such analogy a contract, otherwise good and valid, can be taken out of the class of contracts of which specific performance may be granted under the law.

It has also been contended that even if defendant 2 had authorized defendant 3 to enter into the contract, such authority should not be upheld and so specific performance should be refused, on the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Bonnerji v. Sitanath Das (8). In that case it was held that neither a trustee nor a person in a representative capacity can delegate his authority; consequently a lease is invalid if it is granted by a person as attorney for one who is either a trustee or manager of the property leased and who did not negotiate or consider the lease or know of it until after its execution; this is so whether the executant acted under a general power of attorney or under a power specially relating to the management of the property. Their Lordships observed:

"Their Lordships therefore have considered what the position would be supposing such document had, in fact, been proved and had been shown to be a special power purporting to authorize dealings with the trust estate, and they are of opinion that in that event it could not have availed the defendants. The reason for this is plain. In whatever capacity Pratap held the land in question the capacity must have been a representative one. It was said that he was not in the strictest language a trustee; but be it so, his position was none the less a representative one, and it being plain that he never negotiated nor knew of the lease until after it was executed; if what was done, was done by virtue of a power of attorney it could only have been done because the power had delegated the representative authority that he possessed to a third party. The duties of Pratap, however they may be defined, were in their nature fiduciary, and fiduciary duties cannot be the subject of delegation. If therefore the document had been before their Lordships it would have been impossible to have supported the contention that it conferred the power to negotiate and execute the document upon which the whole of the defendant's case rests."

In the present case the plaintiff's case rests wholly on the foundation that defendant 3 had authority to conclude the contract for the lease, without any reference to defendant 2 and that for the completion or the conclusion of the contract no knowledge or consent of defendant 2 was necessary. Immediately, as it is conceded that her sanction was necessary, the contract would lose its character as a final agreement fit for specific performance. It is open to a trustee or a shobait to appoint a sub-agent, but such appointment must only be as a means of carrying out his own duties himself and not for the purpose of delegating those duties by means of such appointment. As Bowen, L. J., observed in, In re Speight, Speight v. Gaunt (9), at p. 763:

"The proposition that as trustees or agents they cannot delegate means this simply: that a man employed to do a thing himself has not the right to get somebody else to do it, but when he is employed to get it done through others, he may do so."

In Learoyd v. Whiteby (10) Lord Watson observed:

"Whilst trustees cannot delegate the execution of the trust they may, as has been held by this House in Speight v. Gaunt (9), avail themselves of the services of others wherever such employment is according to the usual course of business."

The principle has been explained by Kekewich, J., in Re Wroth (11) in these words:

"A trustee is bound to exercise discretion in the choice of his agent; but so long as he selects persons properly qualified he cannot be made responsible for their intelligence or their honesty. He does not in any sense guarantee the performance of their duties. It does not however follow that he can entrust his agents with any duties which they are willing to undertake, or pay them or agree to pay them any remuneration which they see fit to demand. The trustee must consider these matters for himself, and the Court would be disposed to support any conclusion at which he arrives, however erroneous, provided it is his conclusion, that is, the outcome of such consideration as might reasonably be expected to be given to a like matter by a man of ordinary prudence, guided by such rules and arguments as generally guide such a man in his own affairs."

It cannot be denied that the granting of a lease of this character was a matter with regard to which defendant 2 as shobait, was bound to exercise her judgment, and when it is found that defendant 3 under a supposed authority which must have purported to delegate that exercise of judgment to him made the contract, and when defendant 2 repudiates the contract at the earliest opportunity available to her it is impossible to uphold this delegation, which is a good deal more than the mere employment of a machinery for carrying out the duties which attach to defendant 2 in the fiduciary character she occupies, it is impossible to hold that specific performance should be granted in respect of it. The result is that in our judgment the plaintiff's claim for specific performance must fail. But we see no reason why plaintiffs 1 to 4 should not get a decree in terms of prayer 4 of the plaint. The decree of the Court below therefore should be set aside, and in lieu of it a decree should be passed in favour of the plaintiffs and against the heirs of defendant 3 for a sum of Rs. 2,555, carrying interest at 12 per cent per annum from 1st October 1925 up to the date of realization. The said plaintiffs will also get their costs from those heirs in respect of the suit and of this appeal, hearing-fee in the appeal being assessed at 15 gold mohurs. The decree will be realized from the assets of defendant 3 in the hands of the said heirs. All other parties will bear their own costs in this litigation. The cross-objection has not been pressed and it is dismissed, but with no order as to costs.

Appeal No. 96 of 1931, Decided on 1st February 1932.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 17 and 51—Prior adjudication under Provincial Insolvency Act passed by Delhi Court—Subsequent order of adjudication under Presidency Towns Insolvency Act by Calcutta Court—Act of insolvency relied on by Calcutta petitioning creditor prior to adjudication order in Delhi—Prior order in Delhi vested property of insolvent—Unless that order was dislodged proceedings under later order would be of no effect.

Under the Provincial Insolvency Act the Delhi Court passed an adjudication order and two days later the Calcutta Court passed another order of adjudication under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act against the same insolvent. The act of insolvency relied upon by the Calcutta petitioning creditor was prior to the adjudication order made in Delhi.

Held: that the prior adjudication order passed by the Delhi Court vested the property of the insolvent in the Delhi Court, although under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the title of the trustee relates back to the date of the first available act of insolvency having regard to the date of the petition. Hence unless the proceedings under the prior adjudication order were dislodged the proceedings under the later order of the Calcutta Court would have no effect: A I R 1919 Mad 566, Rel. on. [P 116 C 1]

The Advocate-General, S. N. Banerjee and S. B. Sinha—for Appellant.

Gregory—for Official Assignee.

A. K. Roy and Sambhu Banerjee—for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal by one Malik Ramlal who is stated to have on 4th February 1930 presented a petition in the Delhi Court for adjudication of the firm of Tulsidas Kissendayal and on whose petition the Delhi Court made an order of adjudication against these parties on 13th February 1930. At the time these proceedings were initiated and taken to completion the position was that the debtors had committed an act of insolvency under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act on 4th January, a petition in insolvency had been presented against them in Calcutta and this Court in Calcutta on 17th January had appointed the Official Assignee interim receiver of their assets in Calcutta, Delhi, Karachi and elsewhere. On 15th February, that is, two days after the date of the adjudication order of the Delhi Court, this Court made an adjudication order. In those circumstances, an application was made by the Official Assignee to the Delhi Court for an order under S. 36, Provincial Insolvency Act, that that Court should cancel the insolvency proceeding pending before itself or stay those proceedings. That application was dismissed by the Delhi Court. A Calcutta creditor had at or about the same time presented a similar application which application has not yet been disposed of by the Delhi Court. In these circumstances, the Official Assignee in Calcutta who had taken possession of certain Calcutta properties as interim receiver applied to the learned Judge on the original side sitting in insolvency for a direction whether the estate should stay under his own management or whether the proceedings ought to be carried on by the Official Receiver, Delhi.

The learned Judge before whom it first came made an order and directed that a copy should be sent to the Judge of the insolvency Court in Delhi and to the receiver. Nothing happened as a result of that and, on 1st September 1931, another learned Judge exercising the insolvency jurisdiction of this Court directed the Official Assignee to take steps to sell the property in his hands. It appears that he also directed the Official Assignee to appeal from the order of the Delhi Court refusing to take action under S. 36, Provincial Insolvency Act. But Mr. Roy informs us that this latter course would be infructuous as the time for appealing has elapsed.

We have therefore to say whether the learned Judge's direction to the Official Assignee to sell the Calcutta property in his hands should be allowed to stand. Now, it is true that under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the title of the trustee relates back to the date of the first available act of bankruptcy having regard to the date of the petition and in this case the act of bankruptcy relied upon by the Calcutta petitioning creditor was prior to the adjudication order made in Delhi. It has however been decided in the case of Official Assignee of Madras v. Official of Rangoon (1) that the adjudication order which is prior in time vests the property of the insolvent regardless of the doctrine of relation back which might be applied in favour of the Official Assignee under the later order. In these circumstances it appears to be plain that on 13th February 1930 the property with which we are concerned really vested in the insolvency Court at Delhi or its receiver and, in my judgment, it was not in these circumstances open to the learned Judge on 1st September 1931 to give a direction to the Official Assignee here to sell the Calcutta property.

The position is of course that unless the proceedings under the prior adjudication order can be dislodged, the proceedings under the later order will have no effect, and, if it does not seem necessary on this application to do more than deal with the question whether the property should be sold, I may point out that the course provided by the statute in the matter is simply this that if in the end the Delhi Court cannot be induced to set aside its own order or stay the proceedings thereunder then it will be for this Court on a proper application to consider whether it should not stay its own proceedings and annul its own adjudication under S. 22, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. I do not think that we ought to make any order under that section now. We will leave it to any person who may desire to have such an order to apply for it and obtain, if he can, having regard, in particular, to the fact that the application by the Calcutta creditor in Delhi has not been disposed of. But all that is necessary on the present appeal to say is that we set aside that part of the order of the learned Judge by which he directed the Official Assignee to sell the Calcutta property in his hands. The Official Assignee will have his costs out of any assets that may be in his hands. Both Mr. Roy's client and Mr. Banerjee's client will have liberty to add their costs in these proceedings before the learned Judge and before us to their proofs in any administration in this Court.

Civil Rule No. 1500 of 1931, Decided on 4th May 1932, against order of Munsif, Second Class, Bogra.

Oaths Act (1873), Ss. 8 and 9—Special oath can be administered under S. 9 only when initiative comes from parties.

It is only when the initiative comes from the parties that a special oath can be administered under S. 9 as according to S. 8 the initiative must come from the parties and not from the Court. [P 116 C 2]

Judgment.—This rule has been issued on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Munsif, Second Court of Bogra, dismissing the plaintiff's suit on a money bond should not be set aside and a re-trial ordered on the ground that the procedure adopted by the Munsif was very irregular inasmuch as he asked the parties to swear touching books which he represented to them to be sacred books and allowed his decision to be influenced by the refusal of the plaintiff to swear touching those books. The opposite party had put in an affidavit in which they state that this took place not after the evidence was recorded as stated by the petitioner. It was after the Court had asked the parties if they wished to take special oath and neither party took any oath, but both parties agreed to take special oath, that the Court proceeded to record evidence and decided the case on its merits. Taking for granted that the procedure adopted by the Munsif was as represented in the affidavit of the opposite parties, it still appears that the Court took the initiative in suggesting that the parties should take special oath whereas under S. 8, Oaths Act, the initiative should come from the parties and not from the Court and it is only under such conditions that special oath can be administered under

S. 9. Inasmuch as it is possible that the learned Munsif may have been influenced by what took place in reference to this special oath, I think in the interests of justice a retrial should be ordered. The order of the learned Munsif is accordingly set aside and the suit remanded for retrial by some other Court. Costs of this rule will abide by the result, hearing-fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this Rule is a firm carrying on business in lime and its case is that since May 1931 the articles belonging to the firm had been stored at 11 Neogi Ghat Street. The owner of the firm one Ganesh Chandra Khan, resides at 75-B, Baghbazar Street, but nothing is stored there. On 2nd June 1931 the firm applied to the License Officer of the Calcutta Corporation for a license in respect of dealing in and storing of lime at No. 11 Neogi Ghat Street, and again applied on 5th June 1931 to the Health Officer, District 1, for a license as aforesaid. These applications have not yet been disposed of. But on or about 6th June 1931, a summons was left at the residential house of Ganesh Chandra Khan. In that summons the petitioner firm was required to answer a charge made under S. 386 (1) (a), Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923, for using or attempting to use the premises No. 73-B, Baghbazar Street, for storing lime without license. The date of the offence was given as 2nd March 1931, but there was no mention of premises No. 11 Neogi Ghat Street. On 8th June Ganesh Chandra Khan appeared before the Municipal Magistrate. The petitioner's case is that Ganesh stated to the Magistrate the aforesaid facts with regard to the two applications for a license in respect of premises No. 11 Neogi Ghat Street. But the learned Magistrate took it to be a plea of guilty and, after recording it as such he sentenced the petitioner firm to pay a fine of Rs. 25. The petitioner firm alleges that Ganesh Chandra appeared in person and not by pleader, but that on taking a certified copy of the Magistrate's order he found that the place with regard to the offence committed was stated to be 11 Neogi Ghat Street. Thereupon the petitioner firm filed an application in this Court and obtained a Rule on grounds Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the application.

Now, it is quite clear from the summons, which was served on the petitioner firm and which has been produced before me, that it is addressed to Ganesh Chandra Khan and Sons, No. 73-B Baghbazar Street, to answer a charge made against the firm under S. 386 (1) (a), Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923, in respect of premises "aforesaid." The learned Magistrate in his explanation says that by mistake in the office the place of occurrence was not specifically mentioned in the summons issued. I should have thought that such a mistake in itself would be a material irregularity which would seriously mislead an accused in a case of this nature. But even this explanation of the Magistrate is not correct. Then the learned Magistrate further says that no mention was made by the accused during the trial of any petition for a license, but that subsequent inquiry showed that the accused had filed one petition for a license to the Health Department on 5th June 1931, and further that no petition, dated 2nd June* 1931, to the license officer had been found to have been submitted by the accused. This latter statement again is incorrect. The learned advocate for the petitioner has filed before me a receipt showing that an application from this firm for a license was filed before the license officer on 2nd June 1931. The learned advocate appearing for the opposite party was constrained to concede that this must be correct, but he contended that this application was for a license in respect of the year 1931-32 and not of the year 1930-31. This discrepancy in the year however was not a matter of much importance. As mentioned already it is the petitioner's case that the firm only started storing goods at premises No. 11 Neogi Ghat Street, in May 1931.

If he were permitted to establish this case there would have been no occasion for applying for a license for the year 1930-31. The learned Magistrate in his explanation submits that under S. 243, Criminal P. C., no evidence was necessary after the accused had admitted the charge against him. But that section of the Code requires that the admission should be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by the accused and, if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly. In this case it is clear that the plea of the accused was not recorded in accordance with the aforesaid provision of the Code. Having regard to the allegation in the petition which prima facie I am not prepared to disbelieve it would be unreasonable to suppose that the petitioner actually pleaded guilty to the charge with respect to premises No. 11 Neogi Ghat Street. The Rule must therefore be made absolute on the grounds on which it was issued. The conviction of the petitioner is set aside and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

(a) Contempt of Courts Act (1926)— Complaint not signed as required— Existence of evidence legally admissible showing prima facie that contempt has been committed— Absence of proper signature is not fatal irregularity.

Though the rules and practice of the Court require that petitions for taking action under Contempt of Courts Act should be signed by or on behalf of the persons presenting them, still where the Court has before it evidence legally admissible showing prima facie that contempt had been committed it can and should of its own motion issue the rule; and the absence of a proper signature in such cases is not a fatal irregularity and does not entitle the opposite parties to ask for the discharge of the rule.

N. K. Basu, S. K. Basu, C. C. Biswas, Hiralal Ganguli and Paramananda Dutt—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a rule granted on 18th July last by Jack and M. C. Ghose, JJ., on the application of His Excellency the Governor of Bengal in Council calling on the opposite parties, the first of whom is the editor, and the second the printer and publisher of a daily newspaper called the Amrita Bazar Patrika circulating in Calcutta, to show cause why they should not be ordered to stand committed, or otherwise dealt with for the contempt of the Court of the Commissioners appointed as herein-after stated and of this Court, in respect of the acts and publications referred to in the petition on which the application for the rule is based.

On 30th April 1932 Mr. Douglas, the District Magistrate, was assassinated at Midnapore. In June the Local Government; under the powers conferred upon it by the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act 1930, directed the trial by three Commissioners of one Prodyot Kumar Bhattacharjee for the murder of Mr. Douglas. The Commissioners sat at Midnapore during the month of June and delivered their judgment on the 25th of that month convicting the accused of the murder of Mr. Douglas and sentenced him to death. On 30th June the accused filed an appeal against his conviction and sentence. It is said that the reports of the trial appearing in the issues of the Amrita Bazar Patrika of 12th, 14th 17th 22nd and 23rd June 1932 are contempts of the Court of the Commissioners, a Court subordinate to the High Court and punishable by the High Court by reason of the provisions of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1926. It is further said that two leading articles appearing in the issues of 28th and 29th June 1932 are contempts of this Court. Mr. N. K. Basu who has appeared for the opposite parties raised certain preliminary points with which it will be convenient to deal before discussing the merits of the application.

He submits first of all that the rule should not have been granted inasmuch as the petition on which the Court was moved was unsigned. Relying on the judgment of this Court in Legal Remembrancer v. Matilal Ghose (1) he argues that inasmuch as these proceedings are criminal in character the opposite parties are in the position of accused persons and entitled to have the benefit of any error, however technical, into which the party who seeks to imprison them may fall. He therefore asks us to discharge the rule leaving it to the petitioner to move the Court again upon a properly signed petition if he is so advised. The learned Advocate-General has been constrained to admit that the petition, although verified by an affidavit affirmed by an Additional Deputy Secretary to the Government of Bengal, and supported by a further affidavit affirmed by Abdul Ghani, Sub-Inspector of Police, is not signed by anyone on behalf of the petitioner, the Governor of Bengal in Council, nor has he sought to question the proposition that the rules and practice of the Court require petitions of this sort to be signed by or on behalf of the persons presenting them. He argues however that the irregularity is not fatal to the application, since the Court at the time the rule was granted had before it evidence legally admissible showing prima facie that contempt had been committed, and could and should of its own motion, if it considered that the interests of justice so required, have issued the rule though there was no application before it by the petitioner or anyone else. We consider the contention is correct, and we hold that the absence of a proper signature does not entitle the opposite parties to ask for the discharge of the rule.

At the conclusion of the argument we permitted the petition to be returned for signature, not because we considered such signature necessary to enable us to deal with the application, but in order that the petition might be made to conform with the rules of the Court. The petition has now been signed by Mr. Henderson, Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Judicial Department. Mr. Basu contends that even now the matter is not at rest, and that it is necessary for the Advocate-General to show by evidence that the signatory has been authorized by rule under S. 49 (1), Government of India Act, 1919 (9 and 10 Geo. 5 C. 101), to represent the Governor in Council; and he calls attention to the difference between the language of that section and that of S. 40 (1) of the same Act. This point, in view of our opinion on the main question, does not strictly require our decision. We are disposed however to hold that Mr. Basu's argument is not maintainable and that when signing a petition of this nature a Secretary to Government must be presumed to be acting within the scope of the authority conferred upon him until the contrary is shown.

Mr. Basu was further disposed at one stage to challenge the locus standi of the Legal Remembrancer and his power to instruct counsel in a matter such as this. In our opinion no question can arise as to this. The Legal Remembrancer is ex-officio Public Prosecutor on the appellate side of the Court and as such has the power to instruct counsel, his authority to act for the Local Government being in no way dependent on anything in the nature of a vakalatnama or warrant of attorney. Another argument has been addressed to us which is only concerned with the part of the application which seeks the punishment of the opposite parties for contempt of the Commissioners' Court, and is to the effect that such Court is not a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of S. 2(1), Contempt of Courts Act, 1926, and therefore the statutory jurisdiction of the High Court does not extend to a contempt of a Commissioners' Court. It was not suggested that Commissioners are not Courts and indeed their powers including those of trying, convicting and sentencing are powers peculiar to Courts. Counsel's argument was based on S. 107, Government of India Act, 1919, which gives to the High Courts superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to their appellate jurisdiction and amongst other powers the power of making and issuing general rules and prescribing forms for regulating the practice and procedure of such Courts. Mr. Basu points out that the only right of appeal from Commissioners is the right of appeal to the High Court given by S. 3 (1), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Supplementary) Act, 1925, to a person convicted on a trial held by Commissioners, there being no provision for an appeal by the Local Government from an order of acquittal such as is made by S. 417, Criminal P. C., and also that the power to make rules for the procedure of Commissioners' Court is vested by S. 10 of the principal Act not in the High Court, but in the Local Government. We do not think that these arguments lead to the conclusion that Mr. Basu urges upon us. The jurisdiction to hear appeals from the Commissioner is nonetheless appellate jurisdiction because the right of appeal from Commissioners is less extensive than the right of appeal from the ordinary criminal Courts. The fact that the rule-making power with regard to Commissioners' Courts is vested in the Local Government appears to us immaterial, for under S. 107 the rule-making power is something different from and additional to the right of superintendence, and were Parliament to repeal sub-S. (c) that right would still remain.

It should further be observed that even under the section the power is not unlimited as the rules must not be inconsistent with the provisions of any law for the time being in force and in the case of this Court require the previous approval of the Governor-General in Council. A question in many respects similar to that which we are now discussing has recently been considered by the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Balkrishna Hari (2), where it was held that the High Court had the power to revise orders made by the Courts of Special Magistrates constituted by the Emergency Powers Ordinance 2 of 1932 on the ground that an appeal in certain cases lay from such Courts to the High Court.

It is now necessary to consider the merits of the application, first with regard to the reports of the trial appearing in the news columns of the paper which it is said are contemptuous of the Commissioners' Court. The petitioner's case is based not so much on the reports themselves as on the headlines by which they are preceded. It is said that their composition and the nature of their display were deliberately made to impress on the public and on witnesses who were likely to be examined that the prosecution case was weak and that the prosecution was not likely to succeed in proving the guilt of the accused.

We think there is reasonable ground for this allegation. The headlines of 12th June are not objectionable, but those of 14th June begin with the words in heavily loaded type "identity doubtful." The casual reader, it seems to us, would conclude either that these words are comments and express the general impression made on the mind of the writer by the day's proceedings or that prosecution witnesses had admitted doubts as to the identity of the accused person. In so far as the words are comment they are clearly not permissible when made during the course of the trial. In so far as they can be described as a summary of the evidence given they are garbled and misleading, for they are based on a passage in the cross-examination of Mr. George, the Subdivisional Officer and an eye-witness of the murder, where the witness is referring not to the accused but to a man who was stated to have joined in the attack on Mr. Douglas and to have escaped capture.

2. A I R 1933 Bom 1 (S B).

The headlines of 17th June are concerned with a statement by a witness that he was unable to vouch for the accuracy of all the entries appearing in a list made of the articles found when the person of the accused was searched after his arrest. Though there is nothing misleading in these headlines, we consider that, taken with the other headlines, they in fact amount to a criticism of the prosecution case under the guise of a summary of the day's proceedings.

The petitioner also relies on the headlines of 22nd June. We cannot see anything objectionable in them. It is true the opening line consists of the words "I am quite innocent" in large type; but the next line clearly explains, what the use of inverted commas had already indicated, that the words are a verbatim extract from the statement of the accused. They are for practical purposes the whole of his statement and we consider that having regard to the public importance of the case the editor was entitled to draw the attention of the readers of his newspaper to the statement by summarizing it in a headline and by the use of heavy type.

The position however is different with regard to the headlines of 23rd June. The first and most heavily typed is "Not guilty of any offence" and the second "Prodyot attracted from playground by report of firing." Then follows "judgment reserved" while the last headline is as is obvious from the use of inverted commas, the summary of an argument addressed to the Court. In fact the whole of the report is concerned with the address of the learned counsel for the defence and much of it reproduces the actual words used. But we do not think the casual reader would suppose the first two headlines which are not in inverted commas were merely the submissions of counsel to the Court although from the words "judgment reserved" he might infer that they were not the findings of the Court.

Taking the headlines as a whole and more particularly those appearing on 14th June and 23rd June we have no doubt that their publication might have an effect on the minds of witnesses to be examined or cross-examined before the Commissioners and is what Alverstone,

C. J., describes in R. v. Tibbets (3) as conduct calculated to produce an atmosphere of prejudice in which the proceedings must go on.

However if the headlines were the only material before us and if we were invited to punish the opposite parties solely on the allegation that they had been guilty of contempt of the Commissioners' Court we should be disposed to discharge the rule on the ground that there has been undue delay in moving the Court. The main justification for the summary fashion in which contempts of this nature are punished is that improper comments on pending proceedings tending to create prejudice must be stopped at once and this would not be possible if the ordinary procedure of the criminal law was followed.

It is no answer to the application to say that at the date the Court was moved the proceedings before the Commissioners had terminated. It may often be impossible to apply to the Court during the actual pendency of the proceedings. In the present case however it has not been argued that there were special circumstances making delay unavoidable. The first publication complained of was on 12th June and the last on 23rd June. The judgment of the Commissioners was on 25th June. No application to this Court was made until 18th July more than three weeks after the proceedings had come to an end.

We consider that in the circumstances to accede to the petitioner's prayer that we should punish the opposite parties for the contempts with which we have already dealt would create a dangerous precedent and encourage belated applications for the exercise of the summary procedure. There remain for consideration the articles of 28th June and 29th June which are alleged to be contempts of this Court. Each is the principal leading article of the day and each fills about two columns of the newspaper. That of 28th June begins with a statement to the effect that because on a careful and anxious perusal of the evidence and the judgment the writer has come to the conclusion that a grave miscarriage of justice has taken place he is compelled to "comment adversely" on the latter. Mr. Basu concedes that if in the circumstances it was a contempt to comment it is impossible to argue that contempt has not been committed. No useful purpose would be served by a close analysis of the articles. Although there is nothing improper or disrespectful in the language used they are from start to finish a systematic criticism of the judgment of the Commissioners for the purpose of showing that it is erroneous and that the accused person has been wrongly convicted.

The opposite parties first submit that inasmuch as at the date of publication no appeal had been filed there could be no contempt of the High Court as the case was not pending before it. This contention clearly puts the matter too high, for the authorities show that contempt can be committed when there is technically speaking no case pending. Thus it has been held contempt to comment on a case where the jury has disagreed but the case has not been set down for retrial: Re. Jabouchere Ex parte, Columbus Co., Ltd. (4). Again it is a contempt of the High Court of Justice to comment on the magisterial inquiry into a case triable only at the Assizes before the person charged has in fact been committed for trial [R. v. Parke (5)] or even when it is uncertain whether the person charged if committed will be tried at Assizes or Quarter Sessions: R. v. Davies (6). Moreover the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Legal Remembrancer v. Matilal Ghose (1) (at p. 215 of 41 Cal.) seems to recognize the possibility of a contempt of the High Court on the appellate side when no appeal is pending before it.

What were the circumstances in the case with which we are dealing? It appears to us that the editor must have had in his mind the probability of an appeal, for the readers of the paper were informed in the issue of 26th June, in which the judgment of the Commissioners was reported at length, that Prodyot had signed a vakalatnama for filing an appeal in the High Court. With regard to this the editor in an affidavit used in opposition states that he is personally aware of many cases in which no appeal has been filed although a vakalat-nama has been signed. We can attach no importance to this statement, for the only object which the editor could have in informing his readers of the signing of the vakalatnama was to apprise them of the fact that an appeal was to be expected.

The matter does not end here, for whether Prodyot appealed or not it was inevitable that the merits of the case should be the subject of judicial consideration by this Court, for S. 3 (2), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Supplementary) Act, provides that when the Commissioners pass a sentence of death the records of the proceedings before them shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court. It is—imagine, a matter of general knowledge among educated persons in this country that capital sentences passed by subordinate Courts require confirmation by the High Court and we entertain no doubt that the exhaustive criticism of the Commissioner's judgment published at the time it was, constituted a contempt of this Court by which the proceedings were bound under the provisions of the law to be considered. Lastly the submission has been made that in the circumstances if contempt has been committed it is a venial contempt and should not entail any punishment and our attention has been drawn to Ananta Lal Sinha v. A. H. Watson (7).

In that case newspaper comment had been made on the conduct of a barrister in accepting a brief from persons who were then on their trial before Commissioners. As Rankin, C. J., points out in his judgment the criticism, although this did not appear to be appreciated, by the critic, had little or no force except upon the assumption that the accused persons were guilty of the offences charged. The Court discharged the rule holding that, although contempt had been committed, the tendency of the article to do harm was slight and the character and circumstances of the comments were otherwise such that it could properly be ignored. On this aspect of the case we observe that there is no expression of regret on the part of the opposite parties for any contempt they may have unwittingly committed. Their defence has been "we have done what the law permits us to do." Apart from this however we consider that the circumstances of the case are too grave for us to confine ourselves to a mere expression of disapproval. That the findings of a criminal Court, which must under the law be considered judicially by this Court, should first be the subject of lengthy and detailed criticism in the Press, cannot in our opinion be tolerated for a moment. The affidavit filed by the opposite parties states that editors believe that they are entitled to comment when an appeal has not yet been filed. In support of this statement the deponent annexes a copy of the Statesman of 26th June 1932 containing the statements that the sentence of death will be generally approved and that the guilt of Prodyot is unquestionable.

We are only concerned with the case before us, but we think it right to say that all comment in the press whether by way of approval or disapproval of the judgments of Courts of Session or of Commissioners in capital sentence cases made pending their disposal by this Court is reprehensible and may entail most disagreeable consequences on those responsible for it. It is urged that there was no real danger of the articles prejudicing the minds of those Judges of this Court on whom the duty of confirming or setting aside the sentence passed by the Commissioners was to fall. This is true, but although the danger or absence of danger of actual prejudice is an important consideration it is not the only consideration. As observed by Bruce, J., in Re Labouchere ex parte Columbus Co., Ltd. supra the jurisdiction of the Court exists not only to prevent mischief in the particular case but to prevent similar mischief arising in other cases. To adopt the language of Wills, J. in In the matter of the Finance Union (8) articles such as those under discussion amount to a preliminary trial by newspaper when a trial by a regular tribunal is pending. As such they are an affront to the dignity of the Court and merit punishment. We do not in the circumstances of the present case consider it necessary to commit the opposite parties to prison and we consider it sufficient to order that Criminal Appeal No. 279 of 1932, Decided on 17th November 1932.

(a) Ordinance (2 of 1932) — Nature of — Ordinance 2 is special law for purposes of Limitation Act, S. 29.

For the purposes of S. 29, Lim. Act, Ordinance 2 of 1932 is a special law. [P 125 C 2]

(b) Ordinance (2 of 1932), Ss. 39, 34, 45 and 52—Conviction and sentence passed by special Magistrate under Ordinance—Appeal after period of seven days fixed by S. 39—Court has no power to extend time under Limitation Act, S. 5.

Where an accused is convicted and sentenced by a special Magistrate acting under S. 89 (1), and an appeal is filed after the period of seven days fixed for filing such appeal by S. 89, the Court has no power to extend time under S. 5, Lim. Act, as a wholly general provision cannot be read as interfering with the specific provision with regard to limitation: A I R 1923 Mad 95, Rel. on. [P 126 C 2]

(c) Ordinance (2 of 1932)—Limitation Act (1908)—Another meaning not to be given on grounds of hardship — Interpretation of Statutes.

It is necessary for the Courts to base the construction of Ordinance 2 of 1932 and of the Limitation Act upon principle and it is not possible for them on the ground of hardship to give another meaning to the Ordinance. [P 126 C 2]

(d) Arms Act (1878), Ss. 19 (f) and 20—Person giving revolver to another for purpose of keeping it concealed — Accused guilty under S. 20.

Where a person was in possession of a revolver and cartridges and he gave the revolver to somebody for the purpose of keeping it concealed:

Held: that it is a plain case under S. 20 and that he was guilty under that section. [P 127 C 2]

(e) Arms Act (1878), S. 20—Person guilty under S. 20—Punishment — Maximum sentence was upheld.

Where a person who was charged under Ss. 19 (f) and 20 pleaded guilty to the charge and it was found that his possession was connected with his political opinions and he was given the maximum sentence under S. 20.

Held: that it was very necessary that the powers of the Court should be employed in putting down those very dangerous crimes of possession and concealment of arms and that as there was nothing calling for interference, High Court refused to interfere in appeal or in revision. [P 128 C 1]

(f) Ordinance (2 of 1932), S. 51—Scope.

Section 51 does not take away the right of the special Magistrate to try a case simply because the first Magistrate does not wish for good reasons to try the case or is unable to try the case. [P 127 C 1]

(g) Limitation Act (1908), S. 5 — S. 5 applies to appeals from special Judge under Ordinance (2 of 1932), S. 34.

So far as the Limitation Act is concerned S. 5 is not to be deemed to be one which is to be applied to the special law, but in the case of an appeal from a special Judge under S. 34, Ordinance 2 of 1932 the provisions of the Limitation Act are to apply as if it were an appeal under the Criminal P. C. [P 126 C 1]

Rankin, C. J.—In this case, the accused Nil Ratan Ganguli has preferred the appeal from jail against the conviction and sentence passed upon him by a Special Magistrate in the District of Hooghly acting under S. 39 (1), Ordinance 2 of 1932. The case was one in which the charges were laid under S. 19 (f) and S. 20, Arms Act. There were two accused originally and the case against them was that this accused Nil Ratan had handed over to Upen Bhumij alias Upen Singh a revolver and afterwards to Upen's wife some cartridges in order that those might be concealed and kept on his behalf. Both the accused persons made confessions, the confessions being recorded on 17th January 1932. One of the accused was made an approver and the case in the end was held to be amply proved by the Magistrate. The Magistrate found as regards the present accused who gave his name and the occupation as that of a Congress worker, that he used to live in the Congress office and that his meals were supplied by different persons of the village Majdah; and the Magistrate thought that the accused acquired great influence over the villagers, so much so, that when the Sub-Inspector in charge of the case came to investigate into it he found great difficulty in getting witnesses to sign their names in the search list. At the trial, the present accused stated in his examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C., that his confession was true and he set up the case that he had found this revolver and the cartridges wrapped up in a piece of cloth near a railway station some four years ago, that he kept them buried and that at the time alleged he went to Upen's bari and made over to him the revolver and the cartridges wrapped in a piece of cloth. The accused disputed certain evidence to the effect that the cartridges as distinct from the revolver had been handed over to the wife of Upen; but that is the evidence. On being asked if he wanted to say anything else, he said:

"I don't want to say anything else. I want heavy punishment for 'freedom first'."

In his memorandum of appeal to this Court, the appellant having been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment says:

"I am guilty. The sentence passed upon me under S. 20, Arms Act, has been heavy. I therefore pray that your Lordships may be graciously pleased to reduce my sentence."

The sentence which has been inflicted by the Magistrate is the extreme sentence permissible under S. 20, Arms Act. The Magistrate gives us his reasons for this that there are no extenuating circumstances in the accused's favour and that when his statement was taken under S. 342, Criminal P. C., he showed a very defiant attitude and boldly challenged the Court to pass a heavy sentence and said "freedom first." In these circumstances, we find that the sentence having been passed on 5th February 1932 the appeal was not lodged from jail until the 28th March following whereas by S. 39, Ordinance 2 of 1932, which was a very recent Ordinance having come into force in the beginning of the present year a distinct provision is made that an appeal in such a case as this shall be brought within seven days. Accordingly, when this matter was examined first in the office, it was referred to me and the question of admission was sent to be dealt with by the Criminal Bench. The Criminal Bench however did not hear any argument or decide any question so far as I know, but the learned Judges recorded the order:

"This appeal will be heard on the question of sentence only. Let the record be sent for and the usual notices issue."

That order was made on 20th April 1932. The matter of the appeal therefore comes before this Court as an admitted appeal and it will appear that all questions of law are open both to the prosecution and to the defence.

We have accordingly directed our attention, in the first place, to the question whether we are debarred from entertaining this appeal by any provision of law. In support of the contention that we are so debarred the argument is as follows: By S. 29, Lim. Act it is provided that

"where any special law prescribes for any appeal a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by Sch. 1, the provisions of S. 3 shall apply as if such period were prescribed therefor in that schedule."

Accordingly, while the provisions of the Ordinance is that the appeal shall be brought within a certain time, prima facie that attracts the operation of S. 3, Lim. Act, which contains a provision against the Court entertaining the appeal. It is necessary however in this case to pursue the provisions of S. 29 of the Act somewhat further. That section goes on to provide that for the purpose of determining the period of limitation certain provisions of the Limitation Act shall apply only in so far as and to the extent to which they are not expressly excluded by the special law; and further that "the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply." Now, S. 5, Lim. Act, is not one of the provisions which are to apply in the absence of something to the contrary. It is one of the sections to which the concluding clause is applicable, namely "the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply." It is clear enough I think and it is conceded by the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer that the provision means "shall not apply by virtue of the Limitation Act" and is not a provision prohibiting any special law making the sections applicable or any special law according to the intention of which such a section as S. 5 can be deemed to be applicable. It means that so far as the Limitation Act is concerned the section is not to be deemed to be one which is to be applied to the special law. There is authority both in the Patna High Court and in this High Court for that proposition; but, as it is not contested, I shall not further deal with it.

On behalf of the appellant Mr. Basu, who at the Court's request has been so good as to support the appeal and has done so with great care and ability, puts forward two contentions. He says first of all that the Ordinance is not a special law, and he says in the second place that there is enough in S. 52 of the Ordinance to entitle this Court to say that the special law intends that S. 5 should be applied to an appeal such as the present. I cannot doubt that, for the purposes of S. 29, Lim. Act, Ordinance 2 of 1932 is a special law. It contains provision for setting up certain special criminal Courts. It is true that these Courts have jurisdiction not only over offences created by the Ordinance, but it would seem over offences of any kind provided they are committed in certain circumstances; but I cannot doubt that nonetheless it is a special law and it seems to me clear that when the Ordinance contents itself by saying that the appeal shall be presented within seven days it does so because of the provisions already made by the Limitation Act in S. 29 which attracts the operations of S. 3 and makes that period of time effective as the period of limitation.

The next question is whether we can say that in the special law itself there can be discerned any intention that the Court should have the power given by S. 5, Lim. Act. This question involves a careful examination of the Ordinance and certain sections of the Ordinance have been brought to our notice as having a possible bearing upon this question. It is to be noticed, for example, that in S. 45 where provision is made for an appeal from a Court set up as a summary Court to a tribunal called a Special Judge there is a provision that the appeal shall be presented within seven days from the date of the sentence followed by a provision that the Special Judge shall follow the same procedure and have the same powers as an appellate Court follows and has under the Code, that is the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is also to be observed that in dealing with the question of an appeal from a Special Judge S. 34 of the Ordinance makes a provision to the effect that the provisions of the Limitation Act are to apply as if it were an appeal under the Code from a sentence passed by a Court of Session. So it would appear that in the case of an appeal from a Special Judge the ordinary law of limitation is to be applied; but, to decide which of the provisions of the ordinary law is applicable to the new tribunal, it is prescribed that the new tribunal is to be deemed as a Court of Session.

The matter before us however depends upon the provisions of S. 39 of the Ordinance. This is another class of appeal provided by the Ordinance, namely, an appeal from a Special Magistrate. An appeal is provided in such a case as the present to the High Court and it is followed by a provision that it is to be presented within seven days. Nothing however is said as regards the powers of the High Court in that section. S. 52 however is a very general section applicable to all Special Criminal Courts, that is to say, all the Courts which are set up by Ch. 4 of the Ordinance from the highest to the lowest. It says that:

"the provisions of the Code and of any other law for the time being in force, in so far as they may be applicable and in so far as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Ordinance, shall apply to all matters connected with, arising from or consequent upon a trial by special criminal Courts constituted under this Ordinance."

The question is whether by virtue of that general provision we are entitled to say in the face of the concluding words of S. 29, Lim. Act, that the Ordinance itself contemplates and provides that the High Court in this case shall exercise the power of dispensation for sufficient cause which is contained in S. 5, Lim. Act. In my opinion it is impossible to attribute this meaning or this result to the very general provision of S. 52 of the Ordinance. In the first place it is very difficult to see that the phrase "the provisions of any other law for the time being in force in so far as they may be applicable" could have any such effect in view of S. 29, Lim. Act, as to introduce S. 5. But, apart from this question, the provision as to limitation contained in sub-S. 2, S. 39 of the Ordinance is a specific provision the consequences of which are provided for as a matter of limitation by S. 29, Lim. Act. These have been prescribed or provided for in advance. A wholly general provision could not be read as interfering with this specific provision with regard to limitation. Generalia specialibus non derogant is a maxim which is clearly applicable to S. 52 if it is argued that S. 39 (2) of the Ordinance is to be controlled by S. 5, Lim. Act. In these circumstances, I arrive upon this question at the same result as was arrived at by the Madras High Court in the case of Mittoor Modeen Haje and others reported in A. I. R. 1923 Mad 95. It is certainly somewhat alarming that limitation for so short a period as seven days should not be one over which the High Court in a proper case should have any power of control or dispensation; but it is necessary to base our construction of the Ordinance and of the Limitation Act upon principle, and it is not possible for us on the ground of hardship to give another meaning to the Ordinance. In these circumstances it would serve no purpose as regards this appeal to direct any inquiry whether this particular accused had any sufficient cause for not preferring his appeal in time. In view of what he said at the conclusion of his trial, it may or may not be probable that the delay was due to a sufficient cause; but that is a matter which it is not now necessary for us to decide.

Mr. Basu in the interest of the accused has asked us to examine into this case under the general power of superintendence which was given in certain terms by S. 15 of the High Courts Act of 1861, and in rather different terms by the Government of India Act, S. 107. He has invited us to interfere on several grounds. He has thrown a doubt upon the right of the particular Special Magistrate to deal with the case in view of the fact that the first Magistrate who dealt with it said that as he had heard the confessions of the accused and certain other persons connected with it he would prefer that some other Magistrate with a more open mind should deal with the matter. It is therefore said that, by virtue of S. 51 of the Ordinance, this Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal with the case. As regards that, I am of opinion that that contention has no foundation. It is quite unnecessary to read S. 51 as meaning anything such as is suggested. It is not possible to argue that in such a case if a Magistrate for good reasons does not wish to try a case or is unable to try it the case may not be tried by some other Magistrate. The first Magistrate in this case apart from taking cognizance of the case did not take any part in the trial. The change was entirely in the interest of the accused and in the interest of maintaining an attitude not only of absolute lack of prejudice but manifest lack of prejudice to the accused.

Then it has been suggested that we should interfere because while the accused was found guilty under S. 19 (f) Arms Act, he was not guilty under S. 20. I can only say that it seems to me to be a plain case under S. 20. S. 19 (f) deals with the mere question of having in possession or under control a weapon. A person may commit a breach of the law so far as that is concerned without being guilty of anything much worse than negligence or inattention. But S. 20 provides a heavier penalty in cases of possession where there is an element of concealment. As regards that the accused himself does not complain that he is not guilty. He did not do so in the trial Court and he has not done so in his memorandum of appeal to us. I am bound to say that in this matter on the facts disclosed I agree with the lower Court that he is guilty under S. 20. Here is a man who, according to his own statement in open Court, and certainly according to the evidence was in possession of a revolver and cartridges. He gave the revolver to somebody for the purpose of keeping it concealed. It is evident that his possession of this revolver was at any rate in some way connected with his political opinions because he asked for a heavy punishment and said "freedom first"; and it is a little difficult to see what this could have to do with the case unless he was a person who was committing a breach of the Arms Act in connexion with his political activities.

I cannot say that it is in any way evident to me that there is any necessity for minimizing the gravity of the offence. One can see easily enough what was quite likely to happen. If a person of such political opinions as are in some way connected with a revolver was keeping the revolver concealed in the custody of a friend, then there is a high probability that sooner or later this revolver would be found to have been used by somebody very probably by somebody of the age of 16 or 17. It is very necessary at the present time, when there is clear evidence of revolvers being kept in connexion with political movements, that the offence when it is made plain should be visited with a severe punishment. The accused said nothing to the trial Magistrate to show that he was in any way repentant. He appears to be a person who did his very best by bravado to adopt a contumacious attitude as long as he could. In these circumstances, the Special Magistrate thought that the maximum sentence prescribed by the law for offences under S. 20 would be appropriate. I am bound to say that I saw no reason for this Court to disagree with him. It is a heavy sentence even for an offence under S. 20 and it is the maximum sentence; but it is very necessary that the powers of the Court should be employed in putting down these very dangerous crimes of possession and concealment of arms. I cannot think that there is anything in this case calling for interference by this Court and I should be of the same opinion whether this matter came before us in appeal or in revision.

On the merits therefore the appeal to S. 107, Government of India Act, does not in this case avail the accused at all. I desire to say nothing in the present judgment about the meaning of the word "superintendence" as it occurs in S. 107, Government of India Act and S. 15 of the Act of 1861. When necessary, it may be a proper thing to examine the decisions so as to come to some conclusion as to the way in which the ultimate powers of the High Court under these sections should be regarded. It is not necessary at the present instance to do so and I prefer to wait till it becomes necessary before laying down any principle. The result is that the appeal is dismissed.

Corporation of Calcutta—Defendants —Appellants.

v.

Probhat Chandra Barua—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 225 of 1931, Decided on 24th May 1932, from original order of Small Cause Court Judge, Sealdah, D/- 31st January 1931.

Calcutta Municipal Act (1925), Ss. 131, 134 and 127—Premises vacant and with structures on, amalgamated during currency of assessment—S. 127 does not control Ss. 131 and 134—Total area cannot be revalued on residential basis.

Some premises with structures on, were amalgamated with vacant premises during the currency of an assessment. The Corporation reassessed the joint premises under S. 127 at a valuation higher than the total of the past separate valuation.

Held, that S. 127 could not come into operation in its entirety, in making a revaluation on amalgamation, and in fixing the annual value of amalgamated premises, so as to control the provisions contained in Ss. 131 and 134, during the currency of the assessment that was in force at the time of amalgamation. The total area of land comprised in the amalgamated premises could not be revalued on residential basis, under S. 127, on amalgamation, as the valuation made for the purposes of assessment was to remain in force for the whole of sexennial period, and the only addition that could be made was the amount that represented the annual value of the structures added to those standing on the premises before amalgamation.

Brojolal Chakravarty and Krishnalal Banerjee—for Appellant.

Jatindra Mohan Chaudhuri—for Respondent.

Guha, J.—The respondent in this appeal, Raja Probhat Chandra Barua as owner of the amalgamated premises No. 12, Mullen Street, Calcutta, appealed under S. 141, Calcutta Municipal Act, to the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah, on being dissatisfied with the order passed by the Deputy Executive Officer of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation, in respect of the valuation made by that officer of the amalgamated premises. The premises formerly bearing Nos. 12, 12-1 12-2 and 13 had, on the application of the respondent, been amalgamated into one, No. 12, Mullen Street; Nos. 12, 12-1 and 12-2 being vacant land, were according to the assessment that was in force at the time of the amalgamation in the year 1930, assessed on rental basis; No. 13 was however assessed on residential basis, i.e., on value of land plus cost of construction of the structures standing on the same. On amalgamation, a new assessment was made on residential basis in respect of the whole of the amalgamated premises, and the annual value for the purpose of assessment was raised from Rs. 1,359 to Rs. 1,987. It was against the valuation so made on 23rd May 1930 that an appeal was taken to the Court of Small Causes, as mentioned already.

The question raised by the Court of Small Causes, and the questions that arise for consideration by us on appeal to this Court, by the Corporation of Calcutta, relate to this: whether the Deputy Executive Officer was right under the law, in holding that the assessment on amalgamation could be higher than the assessment on separate valuation of the four amalgamated premises No. 12, 12-1, 12-2 and 13 plus the annual value of the new structures raised on the amalgamated premises, numbered as No. 22, Mullen Street.

On a consideration of the materials placed on the record, and on a construction of the provisions contained in the Calcutta Municipal Act, relating to the valuation, revaluation and assessment of lands and buildings, to the consolidated rate, the method of determination of annual value and the duration of such assessment, we have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes in allowing the appeal of the respondent before us, is correct. The annual value of the amalgamated premises could not, under the law, exceed Rs. 1,512, during the currency of the assessment that was made in 1928-1929, previous to the amalgamation in 1930.

In our judgment, S. 127 could not come into operation in its entirety, in making a revaluation on amalgamation, and in fixing the annual value of amalgamated premises; so as to control the provisions contained in Ss. 131 and 134, during the currency of the assessment that was in force at the time of amalgamation. The total area of land comprised in the amalgamated premises, could not be revalued on residential basis, under S. 127, on amalgamation, as the valuation made for the purpose of assessment was to remain in force for the whole of sexennial period, and the only addition that could be made was the amount that represented the annual value of the structures added to those standing on the premises before amalgamation. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs. The hearing-fee is assessed at two gold mohurs.

Appeal No. 105 of 1931, Decided on 11th April 1932.

(a) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 27 and 28—Court should not lightly dispense with public examination of debtor.

Although there may be power under the Act to dispense with the public examination of a debtor, in a case where a composition is being proposed, the Court should not lightly dispense with the public examination of the insolvent. A composition in the absence of public examination in a case where the debts are large, is not consistent with an efficient administration of the Act. [P 180 C 1]

(b) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 28 and 38—Court should investigate into conduct of debtor before annulling his adjudication.

The duty of the Official Assignee and of the Court is to see that the adjudications are not annulled unless the conduct of the debtor has been such as to entitle him to such a course, and the Court is satisfied that it knows what the assets and liabilities really are. [P 180 C 1]

(c) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), S. 28—Debtor's duty while submitting composition scheme stated.

The debtor applying for composition must take care in setting out in the scheme itself what his assets are and what his scheme of composition is; and if the assets are to be vested in a trustee or trustees, there must be a statement to that effect and if the trustee or trustees are to guarantee so much money to the creditors, there must be a proper statement to that effect also. [P 180 C 1]

Sudis Chunder Roy—for Appellants.

S. Ghose—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case it appears that three persons presented their own petition in insolvency on 1st August 1930. They did not even file their schedule of affairs till 31st March 1931. On the same day they filed a proposal of composition. That proposal is said to mean a good many things which are not properly stated. In itself it contains no information whatever except that there is a hope that the creditors will be paid five annas in the rupee. From what fund they will be paid there is nothing in it to tell us. There is a statement that certain people are very respectable and are prepared to act as trustees and are also prepared to furnish security to the satisfaction of the Court. The composition is not a scheme at all and ought not to be regarded as a scheme. Further details, however are to be obtained from other documents. It seems from the Official Assignee's report that these insolvents have incurred debt at least to the extent of Rs. 1,50,000. There are certain new creditors, who have come in but who are not included in the schedule. The probable assets set out in the schedule of affairs amount to Rs. 17,000 of good outstandings and Rs. 14,000 is described as bad outstandings. Apparently a sum of Rs. 15,000 has been collected by the Official Assignee and it appears that the money required in order to pay five annas in the rupee is Rs. 57,759-12-2. The creditors for some reason or other appear to have accepted the scheme; but what they thought they accepted I do not know.

The main objection on the part of the appellant before us is that this insolveney has been annulled before any inquiry whatever has been made by public examination into the debtors' conduct and affairs. I would like to say that, although there may be power under the Act, to dispense with the public examination of a debtor, in a case where a composition is being proposed, it is a very strong thing to dispense with the public examination. The rules of this court anticipate that public examination should be held in all these cases. In my judgment a composition in the absence of public examination, in a case where the debts are large, is not consistent with an efficient administration of the Act. In the present cases the scheme is extremely informal, hazy and unsatisfactory, and, apart from that, there has been no investigation such as could possibly show what the real assets of these debtors were. It is alleged that they are keeping back certain properties. There may be something in it or there may not be; but there has been no investigation into the matter; and until there has been an investigation no creditor can know whether it is his interest to accept the scheme of composition. The duty of the Official Assignee and of the Court is to see that these adjudications are not annulled unless the conduct of the debtors has been such as to entitle them to such a course, and the Court is satisfied that it knows what the assets and liabilities really are.

In my judgment the appeal must succeed and the order complained of must be set aside. As the debtors desire it, we make an order to the effect that the public examination of the debtors is to be held as soon as may be convenient to the Registrar in Insolvency. The next time the debtors apply for composition, they must take a great deal more care in setting out in the scheme itself what their assets are and what their scheme of composition is; and if the assets are to be vested in a trustee or trustees there must be a statement to that effect and, if the trustee or trustees are to guarantee so much money to the creditors, there must be a proper statement to that effect also. In my judgment the present appeal must be allowed and the creditor will have leave to add his costs of this appeal to his proof of debt.

Mohendra Kumar Ghose for Surajit Chunder Lahiri—for Appellant.

Barwell and Sudhansu Sekhor Kar—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal by a workman from a decision of the Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act in a case in which the workman claimed a lump sum exceeding Rs. 300 as compensation for the injuries alleged to have been sustained by him on 7th February 1930. It is clear enough that he went to the company's doctor on the next day and it appears that on 21st April he wrote a letter to the company in which he said :

"From 7th February last I am unable to work and could not attend owing to severe pain over the chest and heart. I had a hurt over the chest while I was boring rail; since then I am feeling this difficulty."

Then he goes on to ask that he may get his pay for the time during which he was absent and also that he may be permitted to retire with a gratuity. In the end the employing company, the Burmah Shell Company, refused to make any payment and the workman brought the case under the Workmen's Compensation Act on 6th August 1930. In his application before the Commissioner he stated the cause of his injury somewhat differently without succeeding in being very intelligible. He said :

"the cause of the injury was due to a fall from a height of about 20 feet while making a hole in the garden in the Filling Shade No. 3 in Budge Budge Installation of the said company."

That collection of English words is not particularly clear, but I understand from the learned advocate for the appellant that what it means is that he was drilling a hole in a joist, that by some accident he was hit on the chest by or fell up against the tool he was using so as to render him unconscious; at all events he slipped and fell down and in that way suffered an injury. The matter is by no means plain but it is important to observe that up to the present time it has not been inquired into at all. What happened was that the employers filed a written statement taking all the usual defences and three issues were framed: (1) whether the applicant sustained any personal injury by accident; (2) if so, did he sustain the injury alleged; and (3) was the statutory notice served. Under S. 10 of the Act the provision is that proceedings are not to be entertained: "unless notice of the accident has been given, in the manner hereinafter provided, as soon as practicable after the happening thereof and before the workman has voluntarily left the employment in which he was injured."

The Act however provides that: "the Commissioner may admit and decide any claim notwithstanding that the notice has not been given in due time" as provided by the Act "if he is satisfied that the failure so to give the notice was due to sufficient cause."

The section also provides that "the notice shall state in ordinary language the cause of the injury" and certain other particulars. Now when this matter came before the Commissioner he first of all decided to deal with issue 3 first: "Was the statutory notice served?" It was argued before him that notice had been given verbally the day after the accident, that is to say, on 8th February to the company. The Commissioner says that S. 10 requires a notice in writing. No doubt, so far the learned Commissioner is right. He goes on to say:

"He says that the applicant having done this supplemented it by a written notice on 21st April, which complies with all the provisions of the section. It does not however comply with the first provision, for it does not state the cause of the accident. This is given in the application as a fall from 20 feet, but the applicant has not been able to show that any notice of such a fall was ever given to the employer."

In my judgment, the decision is based upon an erroneous view. When the statute says that the "notice shall state in ordinary language the cause of the injury" it does not mean that the notice must state in language to the same effect as the subsequent document namely the application before the Commissioner. It merely says that the thing is not to be deemed a proper notice if it does not state in ordinary language the cause of the injury. In this case whoever has written the letter for this workman has done his best to state in his language the cause of the injury; but he has not done it very well; he has not done it in the same sort of language as is afterwards employed before the Commissioner. What he says is: "I had a hurt over the chest while I was boring rail." In my judgment, as a statement of the cause of the injury whether it is a very unsuccessful attempt or a good attempt has nothing to do with the point. The Commissioner's idea that this notice of 21st April is not a notice within S. 10 is in my judgment erroneous.

If there is something suspiciously vague about it, that is a matter which is to be considered when the Commissioner comes to deal with the merits. The delay in giving this notice may be a matter of great importance. What the Commissioner had to decide was whether he would refuse to entertain this because of the absence of a written notice given in due time. The Commissioner has not found that the notice of 21st April was bad because it was not given "as soon as practicable after the happening of the accident." He has not found that at all. In the same way he has not even purported to consider whether the failure was due to sufficient cause. It may very well be that this man having seen the company's doctor and told him all about it had considerable excuse for thinking that it was better to wait before giving a formal notice to the company. That matter has not been dealt with. The issues framed in the case do not show that the Commissioner had appreciated that on the failure to prove a timeous notice in writing he had other duties in the matter.

In my judgment, this matter must go back to the Commissioner. It will be open to him still to hold that the notice of 21st April is bad as not having been given "as soon as practicable after the happening of the accident." That is a matter which is to be inquired into upon evidence. The employers must pay the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

Criminal Appeal No. 445 of 1932, Decided on 2nd December 1932.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 5, 3 and 29—Time for appeal fixed by S. 33 (2), Bengal Emergency Powers Ordinance, 1931, cannot be extended by S. 5, Limitation Act—Bengal Emergency Powers Ordinance (1931), S. 33 (2).

In view of the terms of S. 29, Lim. Act, S. 5 thereof cannot be applied to extend the time prescribed by the Ordinance of 1931 for filing appeal. [P 133 C 2]

(b) Government of India Act (1915), S. 107—Power of superintendence not repealed by S. 39 of Ordinance—Bengal Emergency Powers Ordinance (1931), S. 39.

Section 107, Government of India Act, survives notwithstanding the wide language of S. 39, Bengal Emergency Powers Ordinance, and the High Court has the power of superintendence: A I R 1933 Bom 1 (S B), Ref. [P 133 C 2]

(c) Government of India Act (1915), S. 107—'Superintendence'—Meaning and nature of.

The superintendence is not a legal fiction whereby a High Court Judge is vested omnipotence, but is a term having a legal force and signification. The general superintendence which the High Court has over all jurisdiction subject to appeal is a duty to keep within the bounds of their authority, to see that they do what their duty requires and that they do it in a legal manner. It does not involve responsibility for the correctness of their decisions, either in fact or law: 1 Pat L J 326, Appr; 7 W R 420, Foll; 33 Cal 68 and 6 C L J 705, Ref. [P 134 C 1, 2]

(d) Appeals—Limit upon, to be enforced under S. 107, Government of India Act.

The limits put upon appeals by the Indian Legislature are a part of the judicial system which it is just as necessary for the High Court to enforce under S. 107 as any other feature of that system. [P 134 C 2]

(e) Government of India Act (1915), S. 107—Prohibition and Mandamus are not the sole forms of superintendence—High Court Act (1861), S. 16.

Prohibition and Mandamus are not sole forms of superintendence which an Indian Court should bear in mind as a guide to the character of the power conferred by S. 16 of the Act, 1861. Defects of jurisdiction, fraud on the part of the prosecutor and error on the face of the proceedings are all good grounds for certiorari: R. v. John Smith, (1800) 8 T R 589 and 1 Pat L J 326, Ref. [P 134 C 2]

(f) Government of India Act (1915), S. 107—Power of superintendence should be exercised upon judicial principles.

The power of superintendence is a power of a known and well recognized character and should be exercised upon those judicial principles which give it its character: Queen v. Bolton, (1811) 1 Q B 66, Ref. [P 135 C 1]

(g) Government of India Act (1915), S. 107—Conviction by Special Magistrate acting under Bengal Ordinance—Prisoner, being ignorant, complaining after seven days that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction—Objection should be entertained.

If a man ignorant and in prison, without legal assistance or knowledge of the special or general law, is to complain after seven days from his conviction that the Special Magistrate is not qualified as such, or that the case is not within his jurisdiction, the High Court should entertain such objection, but not a general objection to the justice of his conviction on the merits.

Where two persons are searched and on the body of one of them revolver cartridges are found but nothing incriminating on the other, S. 34, I P. C. had no application and the latter is not guilty under S. 19 (f), Arms Act. [P 136 C 2]

Santosh Kumar Basu—for Appellant.
Khundkar, Anil Chunder Roy Chowdhury and Fanindra Mohun Sanyal—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J. — The appellant Manmatha Nath Biswas was on 27th April last convicted of an offence against S. 19 (f), Arms Act—viz., of having in his possession or under his control a revolver and six cartridges on 18th February. He was tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate sitting as a Special Magistrate under the Bengal Emergency Powers Ordinance, 1931. Another man, Lalit Mohan Singha was tried together with him. The prosecution evidence was as follows: That these two persons had been seen at about 5 p. m. on 27th January standing and talking together for fifteen minutes in front of the office of a newspaper called "Liberty" in the Upper Circular Road, after which they went together to the Sealdah crossing and separated, that some three weeks afterwards, viz., at about 6.30 p. m. on 18th February, they were again seen near to the same spot, but on the east side of the street where there are railway lines; that they loitered and talked together there for about an hour, after which they proceeded northwards along the street till they came to the crossing of Rani Swarnamoyee Road, where there is a petrol shop, that they stopped and loitered in front of that shop till a little before 9 p. m. when Sub-Inspector Chowdhury challenged Lalit and arrested him after a severe struggle: that the appellant Manmatha at once began to run away, but was stopped in a few yards by a constable and did not resist arrest.

Both were there and then searched. In Lalit's right hand pocket was found a revolver wrapped in paper and in his left hand pocket were the six cartridges. Upon the appellant Manmatha nothing incriminating was found. The revolver was in working order and the cartridges fitted it. I should here carefully add that Sub-Inspector Choudhury says that the movements of the accused gave him the impression that they were waiting for some one and that opposite the petrol shop they were pointing this way and that moving about restlessly. Sub-Inspector Roy says that opposite the Medical School their movements "became suspicious." It appears that they had been pointed out to the officers as persons suspected of smuggling arms. The Special Magistrate convicted both accused under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, and convicted Lalit under S. 20 also. He sentenced Lalit to six years rigorous imprisonment under S. 20 and the appellant to two years under S. 19 (f) expressly acquitting him under S. 20. As regards the appellant, the Magistrate took the view that:

"there cannot be a shadow of doubt that he was aware of Lalit's possession of the revolver. His presence at the place in question in Lalit's company shows that he was aiding and abetting and sustaining him."

He does not however convict the appellant of abetment. He says that S. 34, I. P. C., applies to the case apparently because:

"the circumstances show that they both had the same common object, viz., to possess the revolver for the purpose of committing terrorist crime or for furthering terrorist crime, e. g., by selling the revolver to some anarchist."

Accordingly he arrives at the conclusion that Lalit who had the revolver in his own pocket possessed it in such a manner as to show an intention to conceal it; that the appellant had the revolver in Lalit's pocket, but not in such a manner as to show an intention to conceal it. On 15th April, the prosecution case having closed, the trial was adjourned to the 25th for defence if any and argument. On the 25th no lawyer appeared for the accused. They were convicted on the 27th and the present appeal by Manmatha was signed and forwarded from jail on 23rd May. Under the Ordinance an appeal from a Special Magistrate is to be brought within seven days, S. 33 (2), and this Bench has recently held that in view of the terms of S. 29, Lim. Act, S. 5 thereof cannot be applied to extend the time prescribed by the Ordinance. We are therefore prohibited by S. 3, Lim. Act, from entertaining this appeal.

Mr. S. K. Basu for the appellant accordingly prays in aid our power of "superintendence" under S. 107, Government of India Act, as the only remedy available to him in view of S. 39 of the Ordinance. That we have the power given by that section is to me reasonably plain. By S. 72, Government of India Act, an Ordinance has the like force of law as an Act passed by the Indian legislature and is subject to the like restrictions as the power of the Indian legislature to make laws. By S. 65 that legislature has no power to repeal or affect S. 107 unless expressly so authorised by Act of Parliament. By Sch. 5, Ss. 106, 108 (1), 109 and other sections are particularised as sections which may be repealed or altered by the Indian Legislature but S. 107 is not included, and therefore survives notwithstanding the wide language of S. 39 of the Ordinance: cf. Emperor v. Balkrishna Hari Phansalkar (1). In the present case Mr. S. K. Basu has contended that the power of superintendence imposes upon this Court a duty to see that justice is done by the subordinate Courts in every case and that this duty rests upon the Court independently of any action which the aggrieved party may take or may not take. He founds upon the observations of Woodroffe, J. in Lekraj Ram v. Debi Prosad (2), to the effect that there is no form of judicial injustice which this Court cannot, if need be reach and that Judges have repeatedly refused to make any declaration limiting their powers under the Charter. He further contends that as the accused has lost his right of appeal by reason of the shortness of the period of limitation we should on that ground be the more ready to examine his case upon the merits under S. 107 since we have no power to extend the time for appeal. Mr. Khunkdar on the other hand, besides arguing that the Magistrate's conclusions are well founded contends that when the time is elapsed for filing an appeal the Court in a case where the right of appeal existed should not exercise its power of "superintendence."

In my judgment both these lines of argument are to be rejected and are contrary to the weight of authority in this Court. Soon after S. 15, High Court's Act, of 1861 had introduced the word "superintendence" to describe the power in question it was pointed out by Norman, J., in Gopal Singh v. Court of Wards (3) that it had "a legal force and signification which are perfectly well known to the legislature." He referred to Blackstone's "Commentaries" and Bacon's "Abridgement" as showing that the writs of mandamus and prohibition were methods of exercising this power and concluded :

"This power of superintendence is entirely distinct from the jurisdiction to hear appeals. If the inferior Court after hearing the parties comes to an erroneous decision either in law or fact on a matter within its jurisdiction the Court having power of superintendence never interferes. The only mode of questioning the propriety of such a decision is by appeal."

An elaborate review of the decisions of this and other High Courts upon the subject is to be found in the Patna Case Parameswar v. Kailaspati (4), a case which like most of the Calcutta cases arose out of proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., for which before 1923 "revision" under that Code did not apply. In the Full Bench case of Sukh Lal v. Tara Chand (5) Maclean, C. J., described the power of superintendence as somewhat analogous to that of the King's Bench Division to interfere by mandamus, and in Kedar Nath v. Khetra Nath (6) Mitra, J., said that it could only be exercised in cases of non-exercise or illegal exercise of jurisdiction. I agree with Roe, J., in the Patna case that superintendence is not a legal fiction whereby a High Court Judge is vested with omnipotence but as Norman, J., had said a term having a legal force and signification. The general superintendence which this Court has over all jurisdiction subject to appeal is a duty to keep them within the bounds of their authority, to see that they do what their duty requires and that they do it in a legal manner. It does not involve responsibility for the correctness of their decisions, either in fact or law.

Thus in England a mandamus to hear and determine according to law does not mean that the inferior tribunal is ordered to give a correct decision nor does prohibition lie to correct a wrong decision on the merits. The limits put upon appeals by the Indian Legislature are a part of the judicial system which it is just as necessary for this Court to enforce under S. 107 as any other feature of that system. Upon the Indian cases however I doubt whether sufficient attention has been paid to the fact that as regards Magistrates in particular the King's Bench in England has made extensive use of the writ of certiorari to bring up and quash convictions. Prohibition and mandamus are not I think the sole forms of superintendence which an Indian Court should bear in mind as a guide to the character of the power conferred by S. 16 of the Act, 1861. Defects of jurisdiction, fraud on the part of the prosecutor and error on the face of the proceedings are all good grounds for certiorari. Thus in R. v. John Smith (7), where the evidence was set out in the conviction or order and it appeared that there was not proper evidence to be considered by the Magistrates in support of a point material to the conviction, the conviction was quashed. As Lord Kenyon's judgment shows, it is certainly not enough that the Magistrates have misconceived a point of law or come to a wrong decision on the facts. For this purpose the Magistrate should be regarded as the person to judge the weight of the evidence.

But if there is no evidence at all of the facts charged or if on the Magistrate's own view of the facts proved the offence was not in law committed, I think that an Indian High Court acting under S. 107 will not be misconceiving the character of its power if it interferes. In this respect only would I add anything to the valuable and concise statement given by Chamier, C. J., in the case of Parameswar v. Kailaspati (4) at p. 340. "The face of the record" meant a different thing in the old English cases from what we naturally mean by it in India today but what I have just said is I think the substance and meaning of the English rule in terms applicable to Indian practice. It should perhaps be made clear that the case where on the Magistrate's own view of the facts the offence was not in law committed is an entirely different thing from the case where the Magistrate in his judgment has not specifically mentioned every element in the offence. It is practicable that the High Court should see that no man is convicted without a legal reason. Indeed it is idle to give a remedy for irregularity in procedure if remedy is to be refused where, after a proper trial, the final order of the inferior Court is without any legal foundation. It is not practicable that this Court should re-try all cases of the lower Courts and that it should do so upon no settled principle but in cases arbitrarily and sporadically chosen is highly anomalous and undesirable. The power of superintendence is a power of a known and well recognized character and should be exercised upon those judicial principles which give it its character. The matter cannot be better put than in the words of Lord Denman, C.J., in Queen v. Bolton (8) at p. 76:

"It is of much more importance to hold the rule of law straight, than from a feeling of the supposed hardship of any particular decision, to interpose relief at the expense of introducing a precedent full of inconvenience and uncertainty in the decision of future cases."

This is in my opinion more in consonance with the nature of the power of superintendence, with judicial principle and with the due administration of justice itself, than is the alternative procedure which begins by refusing to recognize any limits to the power or any principles as fit to govern its exercise and ends by vouching discretion for the result, after an open rehearing of each case. So far from being tempted to extend the grounds of interference under S. 107 by the circumstance that the accused has allowed his right of appeal to become barred, I think that his difficulty is increased by the fact that he had such a right. Yet if he loses his rights as an appellant by a delay beyond seven days I cannot think that it is possible on that account to refuse him the much more limited right to complain of his conviction under S. 107. The circumstances are very strong to excuse his small delay.

By the ordinary standard for such matters in this Court he would have 60 days : he petitioned within 27 days. The matter may be tested thus. Suppose a man, ignorant and in prison, without legal assistance or knowledge of our special or general law, were to complain after seven days from his conviction that the Special Magistrate was not qualified as such, or that the case was not within his jurisdiction, could this Court because of the right of appeal provided by the Ordinance refuse to entertain such an objection. Surely not. Better reason must be given for refusing relief against a contempt of the Crown. My view is that there is all the difference between an applicant who comes into Court with such a case and one who comes with a general objection to the justice of his conviction on the merits ; that English practice shows that it is quite practicable, if none too easy, to draw a line of distinction between cases of the one kind and of the other and very necessary that the line should be kept clear and straight; that it is not a question of what the Court will ordinarily do in this jurisdiction but a question of what the scope and object of this jurisdiction is. The limit set to the right of appeal is not a limit to all remedy against usurpation of authority.

In the present case the accused cannot in my judgment dispute the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to determine the case but he is in a position to present his case as follows : He need not ask us to disbelieve any of the prosecution evidence but says that it does not amount to proof or indeed to any evidence that he knew of Lalit's possession of the revolver, or, if he knew, that he was abetting Lalit's offence of possessing it ; still less that he himself was in possession or control of the revolver whether jointly with Lalit or otherwise. He says that the Magistrate has upon no evidence convicted him of possession by reason as his judgment shows of an erroneous notion that S. 34, I. P. C., enabled him to do so, and that his findings as to S. 19 (f) and S. 20 are contradictory and betray the illegality of the conviction. Now, in my judgment the finding that the accused knew of Lalit's possession of the revolver is not a finding without any evidence though I do not think that the evidence carries the matter beyond the realm of suspicion. On the Magistrate's own view of the facts however I do not see how he could in law convict this accused under S. 19 (f). There is no evidence that the revolver in Lalit's pocket belonged to this accused and there is nothing to show that if this accused had asked for it he would not have met with the reply: "Certainly not. It is my revolver." No doubt if, both men acting together to shoot X, Lalit had fired the shot, S. 34 might apply to render Manmatha guilty of murder or of wounding. Again if the Magistrate had found as a fact that the two were in joint possession of the revolver the question before us would have been different.

But in what way S. 34 applies to show that Manmatha was in possessor or control of the revolver. I do not understand. With all possible respect to the learned and very able Magistrate, this conviction rests in the end upon no foundation in the evidence or in the findings and I think it should be set aside under S. 107. We were asked to substitute a conviction for abetment, but we would only do that if the accused had had an opportunity to meet a case based upon S. 28, Arms Act, and if we ourselves were satisfied with the proof of the elements of that offence. Neither condition is satisfied. I propose that we should treat this petition of appeal as an application under S. 107, Government of India Act, direct that the conviction be set aside and that the accused be acquitted and released.

Criminal Revn. No. 204 of 1932, Decided on 8th December 1932.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 15 — Accused charged under S. 409, Penal Code—Plea of bona fide payment to wrong persons under misapprehension—Evidence of other transactions of conversion of money to personal use is not admissible—Penal Code (1860), S. 409.

When an accused charged under S. 409, Penal Code, pleaded that the payments were made bona fide to wrong persons under misapprehension and the prosecution tried to let in evidence of other transactions in which the accused had appropriated sums of money out of fund entrusted to him to his own use.

Held: that S. 15, Evidence Act, had no application to the case and that such evidence would merely show general dishonesty and as such would be irrelevant and inadmissible for rebutting the accused's defence of bona fide payments to wrong persons. [P 138 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 167—Scope.

Where a trial Court convicts an accused on the evidence part of which has been wrongly admitted and the Sessions Court excluding the wrongly admitted evidence upholds the conviction on the remaining evidence and the trial has taken a course substantially different from that contemplated by the law by the admission of a large body of inadmissible evidence, the case is outside the purview of S. 167, Evidence Act, and should be sent back for retrial. [P 139 C 1, 2]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 15 — Conduct alleged and proved against accused susceptible of more than one interpretation — Evidence of similar acts is admissible to show systematic conduct.

Where the conduct alleged and proved against the accused is susceptible of more than one interpretation, it is permissible for the prosecution to call evidence of similar acts on the part of the accused for the purpose of showing that his conduct is systematic, and therefore, not capable of a favourable interpretation. Judgment.—This is a rule granted by my learned brother M. C. Ghose, J. and myself calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Dibrugarh to show cause why the order dismissing the appeal of the petitioner against his conviction and sentence should not be set aside. The petitioner is an employee of the Telegraphs Department in Assam. He was convicted on 5th November 1931 by the Extra Assistant Commissioner on charges under S. 409, I. P. C. The charges were three in number and related to sums of money amounting in all to Rs. 413-4-0. The trying Court convicted and sentenced the petitioner in respect of the first charge to six months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 413-4-0 or in default to a further term of imprisonment for two months, the fine, if realised, to be paid to the telegraphs department as compensation. In respect of the other two charges the petitioner was convicted and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment on each of them, the sentences to run concurrently with the sentence of imprisonment imposed in respect of the first charge. The petitioner appealed to the Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts and on 1st February 1932 his appeal was dismissed. He obtained this Rule on 14th March 1932. The Rule was granted upon six out of ten grounds set out in the petition. The grounds upon which we propose to dispose of the rule are those which are concerned with the admissibility of certain evidence tendered by the prosecution. It was the case for the prosecution that the petitioner in his capacity of Subdivisional Officer, Telegraphs, Dibrugarh Subdivision was in charge of Government Funds drawn on imprest account for various purposes, among which was the payment of wages to coolies employed from time to time on casual labour in connexion with repairs to telegraph lines in the Dibrugarh Subdivision.

It is stated by the prosecution that with respect to the three sums with which the charges are concerned the petitioner, instead of paying those sums to the coolies as wages, converted them to his own use, and it is also the case for the prosecution that the muster rolls, which from the record of the payments which the petitioner states he made, are fictitious documents in the sense that no payment was made to the persons whose names appear on the muster rolls or to any one. The prosecution called witnesses and produced documents to prove that the petitioner did not in fact make any of the payments appearing in the muster rolls, and that circumstances showed that the story that he had made such payments was not false but impossible. In addition to the evidence relating to the sums of money which formed the subject-matter of the three charges the prosecution called evidence in respect of other payments which, they alleged, the petitioner falsely claimed to have made, whereas in fact there had been no such payments, the petitioner having applied the sums in question to his own use. It appears that in addition to the three muster rolls with which we are concerned, and which related to the charges on which the petitioner was convicted, 14 other muster rolls were tendered and admitted in evidence and the circumstances with regard to the payments shown therein were investigated in the case at a rate of a large number of them. The petitioner contended before the learned Sessions Judge that the Magistrate had wrongly admitted the evidence concerning the payments and muster rolls other than the payments which were the subject-matter of the charges and the muster rolls supporting them.

The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that in this respect the petitioner's contention is well founded, and that under the Evidence Act the evidence to which the petitioner takes exception is not admissible. In the circumstances of the case we have first to consider whether the learned Sessions Judge was right in the view he took, because if we were of opinion that the evidence was admissible we should not have to consider the question of discharging or of making absolute the rule on any of the grounds connected with that evidence. We have come to the conclusion after hearing learned counsel for the petitioner and the learned Advocate General on behalf of the Crown, that the Sessions Judge was right in the view he took, and that the evidence should have been rejected by the trying Magistrate. The section of the Evidence Act under which the Crown seeks to justify the admission of the evidence is S. 15. In our opinion, S. 15 has no application to the circumstances of the case. The act alleged was misappropriation of public money, and if the prosecution story was true that the petitioner had applied the money for his own purposes and had endeavoured to conceal his dishonesty by fabrication of false muster rolls, no question arose whether his act was an intentional or accidental act. Moreover it was common ground that if the petitioner had done what he was alleged to have done he must have done it with full knowledge of the nature of his action and with dishonest intention. Various cases were brought to our notice where the conduct alleged and proved against the accused was susceptible of more than one interpretation.

In such cases it is permissible for the prosecution to call evidence of similar acts on the part of the accused for the purpose of showing that his conduct is systematic, and therefore, not capable of a favourable interpretation. In the statement filed by the petitioner when he was examined under S. 342, Criminal P. C., there are various observations to the effect that if it transpired that the payments which he alleges he made, were made to persons who were not entitled to receive them, he had acted bona fide and under misapprehension. The fact that in his statement he suggested the possibility of having made the payments to the wrong persons under misapprehension does not justify the prosecution in calling evidence of other transactions in which they say, the petitioner appropriated sums of money out of the fund entrusted to him to his own use. The case for the prosecution was not that he had dishonestly paid money to persons who were not entitled to it. The case for the prosecution was that not only had he not made any payment, but that it was impossible for him to have made any payment. If it be said that they were entitled to anticipate his defence of bona fide mistake, the answer to me appears to be that such an anticipation would not justify them in tendering evidence of instances of dishonesty of a different nature, because obviously it is one thing for a Government servant to put government money into his own pocket and quite another thing to pay it dishonestly to persons not entitled to receive it. Therefore it appears to me that if the issue was whether the payments, if made were made bona fide, examples of conversion of money to the petitioner's own use would merely show general dishonesty, and as such would be irrelevant for the purpose of rebutting the petitioner's defence of bona fide payments to wrong persons. For these reasons we agree with the Sessions Judge that the evidence ought not to have been admitted.

Having dealt with the evidence the admissibility of which was challenged, the Sessions Judge proceeded to consider the rest of the evidence as to the admissibility of which exception cannot be taken, and came to the conclusion that, if he excluded from his consideration the evidence wrongly admitted, the remaining evidence justified the conviction of the petitioners. At the first sight it would appear that the learned Sessions Judge has followed the course contemplated both by the Code and by S. 167, Evidence Act, and has after due consideration of the evidence properly admissible come to the conclusion that the accused is guilty. His finding is a finding of fact and prima facie we should not be disposed to interfere with it or question its propriety in revision. But it is clear from the language of S. 167 that it is not in every case that the admission of inadmissible evidence will be disregarded on the ground that it appears to the appellate Court that independently of the evidence improperly admitted there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision.

That, in our opinion, is clear from the language of the section which says that the improper admission of evidence shall not be ground "of itself" for a new trial or reversal of any decision. We have to consider whether there are circumstances here which would justify our interference with the order of dismissal in spite of the provision of S. 167, Evidence Act. With regard to this there are some important observations in the judgment of the learned Judge. Before the learned Judge the petitioner had taken exception to the mass of evidence which had been given before the charges were framed, because apparently evidence was given as to the 17 suggested instances of misappropriation prior to the selection of three of such instances as the subject-matter of three charges eventually framed. The learned Judge takes the view that this procedure was undesirable as it was bound to some extent to increase the difficulties of the defence. But he couples with this observation a statement to the effect that it is possible to conduct a trial, without infringing the provisions of the Code, in a manner prejudicial to the accused, and that it is not easy to see how it is possible for the Court to interfere in such a case. This is so, and we recognize the difficulty of giving any redress in cases of hardship where in fact the provisions of the law have been observed, but have operated harshly in the circumstances of the particular case. But the position is quite different when the evidence is not only embarrassing to the accused by reason of its complexity and bulk but is also legally inadmissible, as we have held it to be here.

It has not been questioned that, had the evidence been confined to what was directly relevant to the three charges the scope of the inquiry would have been considerably reduced. It seems to us that we cannot allow the conviction to stand when the lower appellate Court has found that the difficulties of the petitioner have been increased by the amount of material, oral and documentary, tendered by the prosecution, and where the fact that the amount has been so great is due to the admission of a large body of evidence not legally admissible. We attach less importance to the observation of the Judge that the evidence weighed with the Magistrate and influenced him in coming to his decision. We are not prepared to say that that is of itself a ground for setting aside the order complained of. The learned Judge was clearly impressed by the difficult position in which the defence was put by the admission of inadmissible evidence, for he repeats the observation to which we have referred shortly before concluding his judgment. In our opinion, the effect in this case of the admission of a large body of inadmissible evidence has been that the trial has taken a course substantially different from that contemplated by the law. We think that this is a circumstance which compels us to hold that the case is outside the purview of S. 167. We need not concern ourselves with the other grounds upon which the rule was granted because we think that the ground which we have dealt with of itself necessitates a retrial, and that even if the other grounds were substantiated they would not justify order other than one for a retrial. We therefore set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the petitioner be retried on the same charges by some Magistrate other than the Magistrate who had already dealt with his case. With regard to bail we direct that pending his retrial the petitioner be released on furnishing bail to the satisfaction of the Chief Presidency Magistrate for his appearance on such date and in such Court in the province of Assam as may be required of him.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to show cause why the conviction and sentence imposed upon the petitioner should not be set aside on the ground that the learned Magistrate ought to have held that the article in question is an attack upon the capitalists without reference to the Europeans and that the prosecution does not disclose an offence under S. 153-A, I. P. C. The charge in this case is that by the publication of an article entitled "Samrajya bader khara" or "Sword of Imperialism" the accused attempted to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects to wit, the Europeans and the Indians and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 153-A. We have perused the article which is the basis of the charge, namely, the article published by the petitioner in the paper called "Sarbahara" of which he is the Editor, entitled "Samrajya bader khara," and we find that while there are criticisms in this article of British Imperialism and the Rulers of India accusing them of exploiting and crushing the "workers" and the proletariat we think that the article cannot be said to be calculated to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between the Europeans as Europeans and the Indians as Indians to which enmity the charge refers. Nor is there any evidence that there was any intention on the part of the accused to promote that kind of enmity. We think therefore that on the charge as framed the petitioner ought not to have been convicted. We therefore set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioner under S. 153-A, and acquit him on the charge framed.

The petitioner will be released unless detained on any other sentence.

Criminal Appeal No. 68 of 1932, Decided on 5th August 1932.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 124-A — Indictment against Imperialism which was used in an interchangeable sense with Government—S. 124-A applies if hatred or dissatisfaction likely.

The terms "Imperialism" and "Imperialistic Government" and Government as used in an article were interchangeable and it was in that interchangeable character that the writer used them when writing the article. The passages in which "reckless oppression, free exploitation" and other acts were attributed to "Imperialism" were well calculated to excite disaffection and hatred towards the author thereof and Government was meant to be the author thereof.

Held : that the article was seditious.

[P 140 C 2 ; P 141 C 1]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 124 A—Sentence—Circulation of paper, age and education of accused are considerations.

A paper had not any wide circulation and there were only 760 copies printed of the issue in which the seditious article was published. The editor was a young man of about 22 only with not very great education. In appeal the sentence of one year was reduced to one already undergone.

Kshitish Ch. Chakravarty—for Appellant.

Khundkar—for the Crown.

Mallik, J.—The appellant A. M. A. Zaman has been convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and under that section sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Zaman was the Editor, Printer and Publisher of a Weekly Bengalee paper "Sarbahara." The charge against him was in respect of an article which appeared in that paper in its issue on 26th September 1931, under the heading "Massacre at Hijli and Responsibility of the Nation." In this article the writer after condemning the incidents at Hijli proceeded to analyse the reasons why the incidents had happened, whether the Nationalists (the Congress leaders) would be able to remove the causes and the writer concluded by saying that the Congress leaders were impotent in the matter and it would lie with the revolutionary proletariat to come forward to make the creation of a wider and finer society possible through the destruction of the existing impossible, social and administrative regime and the article ended with the slogan :

"Down with Imperialism : Victory to revolution : May the Proletariat be victorious in all ways. What explanation can the nation offer for the death of the prisoners ?"

The passages in the article to which objection was taken were (1) :

"The Imperialism which is based on reckless oppression and free exploitation has forgotten its responsibility. Hence such impossible oppression on these men has been possible,"

and (2)

"It is not the impotent Congress leaders but the revolutionary proletariat who will have to come forward to make the creation of a wider and finer society possible through the destruction of the existing impossible, social and administrative regime in order that this fighting propensity of Imperialism may be stopped."

According to the prosecution these passages were seditious as they could not but have excited disaffection and hatred towards Government. Mr. Chakravarty who appeared for the appellant conceded that if the term "Imperialism" in these passages could be taken to mean "Government" then that would be seditious. But his contention was that the term "Imperialism" in the article was not to be taken as meaning "Government." This contention, in my opinion, cannot for a moment bear scrutiny. According to the writer "imperialism" had : "Waded through the sea of blood of Santosh Kumar and Tarakeswar" who had been killed at Hijli, Imperialism had forgotten its responsibility and it was futile to cherish the hope of being partners of that Imperialism. Imperialism could not wade through the sea of blood. It cannot forget its responsibility nor can it have anybody as its partners unless it is taken to mean the followers of the doctrine of Imperialism which according to the writer the present Government was. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the terms "Imperialism" and "Imperialistic Government" and Government as used in the article were interchangeable and it was in that interchangeable character that the writer used them when writing the article. There can be no manner of doubt that the passages in which "reckless oppression, free exploitation" and other acts were attributed to "Imperialism" were well calculated to excite disaffection and hatred towards the author thereof and if Government was meant to be the author thereof as it must have been meant as shown above, the articles were clearly seditious. I am therefore of opinion that the appellant was rightly convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C.

Then as regards the sentence. It appears that the paper "Sarbahara" was not a paper with any wide circulation and there were only 750 copies printed of the issue in which the seditious article was published. It appears moreover that the appellant is a young man of about 22 only with not very great education. It appears further that the paper "Sarbahara" is no longer in existence. Regard being had to all these circumstances I am of opinion that the ends of justice would be satisfied if we reduce the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment to the term already undergone.

Penal Code (1860), S. 124-A—Article read as a whole referring to Indian Government is within mischief of S. 124-A.

When reading an article as a whole, it is clear that whatever may have been meant by the opening paragraph referred to British Government throughout the rest of the article, the Government established by law in British India is referred to; it can be held without evidence to that effect that the readers of the article would regard the whole as an attack upon the British Government in India; A I R 1930 Cal 244, Rel on. [P 142 C 1]

Santosh Kumar Basu and Ramdas Mukerji—for Appellant.

Khundukar and Anil Chandra Roy Choudhuri—for the Crown.

Jack, J.—The appellant has been convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and sentenced to nine months rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 in default rigorous imprisonment for three months on the ground that he was the Editor, Printer and Publisher of a Hindi weekly newspaper "Lokmanya" in which an article entitled "Kajal-ka-Pahar" was published in the issue of 28th September 1931, which is found to be seditious. The grounds of appeal were that the Court below was wrong in holding that the article exceeded the bounds of legitimate criticism and that on a consideration of the entire evidence, facts and the circumstances of the case the Court should have acquitted the appellant. Two points have been urged before us, in the first place, that the Government referred to in the article in question was the British Government and not the Government established by law in British India and secondly, that on reading the article as a whole the intention of the writer was, as he says, that he was grieved at the incident in the Hijli Camp, that he made an appeal for an impartial inquiry and that it was not his intention to create disaffection towards Government.

As regards the first point it is clear that the writer himself does not state that it was the British Government that he was attacking. He says that it was not his intention to create disaffection towards Government, meaning obviously the Government of India and not the British Government. But referring to the article itself para. 1 may be interpreted as referring to the British Government inasmuch as in the opening words it is stated that:

"British Government is one of the civilized Governments of the world."

The writer then goes on to say:

"But Britain is putting a slur on her name which she has earned in India."

On behalf of the Crown it is argued that whatever may have been in the mind of the writer of the article, it is certain that to the minds of those who read it, it would mean the Government established by law in British India. On the other hand for the appellant it is suggested that there is no evidence as to the effect the article had on the minds of the readers and that in the absence of any such evidence it cannot be assumed that the readers would have regarded it as an attack on the Government established by law in British India. Reading the article as a whole, however it is clear that whatever may have been meant by the opening paragraph, certainly throughout the rest of the article the Government established by law in British India is referred to: and in these circumstances there is very little doubt that the readers of the article would regard the whole as an attack upon the British Government in India, just as in the case In re India in Bondage (1), where the British Government is spoken of throughout and still the whole article was regarded as an attack upon the Government established by law in British India. In the present instance that this was the intention of the writer is borne out by the fact that the incidents with which the British Government have no direct concern are referred to such as the Jallianwala and the Hijli incidents:

"The Jallianwala incident was a big example of her pitilessness and Hijli incident is even a greater one than that,"

so that there is very little doubt that the readers of the article when they read the passages such as "Britain is putting a slur on her name which she has earned in India. She has not once but several times demonstrated her barbarity. She is very proud of brute force. This has been the cause of her humiliation. The Jallianwala incident was a big example of her pitilessness and Hijli incident is even a greater one than that. No civilized Government would put to shame, humiliate, distract and crush the unarmed as has been done under the aegis of the British rule," would regard this as an attack upon the Government established by law in this country. The writer also goes on to say:

"No Government has undergone the same moral degradation as the Government. To attack the unarmed is immoral. . . . It may be that the sentries fired on the unarmed political prisoners in Hijli possibly on their own responsibility but it would be understood that the responsibility for it lies on the Government. If they do not want to hold an impartial inquiry into the misconduct of the sentries then the civilized world would know that there is an accumulation of mental dirt in the mind of the British Government and that they approve of the action of the sentries. However much Government may try to be truthful, their helpers are not so."

The reference to helpers shows he cannot mean the British Government outside India. Next he goes on to say:

"It is futile to appeal to justice and equity in India under British rule. To all appearances it seems that the Government have no respect for the lives of the prisoners at Hijli."

There are other passages showing that he was anxious that Government should make an inquiry into the incident at Hijli e. g., he says:

"In regard to the incidents like those in Hijli the Government should not admit the fault of their agents but should hold an impartial inquiry."

and he does give the Government a fair name where he says that:

"They should ponder over this bitter thing about their welfare for a small blot puts a smudge on a fair name."

Still taking the article as a whole we think there is no doubt that it does come within the mischief of the S. 124-A, I. P. C. It is however not so extreme as some of the articles which have been referred to and we think that in the circumstances of the case the sentence should be reduced to one of six months rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 100 in default three months rigorous imprisonment. Let the appellant surrender to his bail and serve out the sentence. We have been asked to order for the classification of the appellant as A; and we think that he may be put in that class subject to any objection.

M. C. Ghose, J.—I agree.

Order.—An objection has been raised on behalf of the Government as to the classification of the appellant being A. In the circumstances we think this classification should be left to the jail authorities.

Penal Code (1860), S. 354—Per Jack, J.—Intention to outrage or knowledge that assault is likely to outrage modesty of girl is necessary under S. 354—Per M. C. Ghose, J.—Offence under S. 354 can be committed on girl of five and half years though she has not developed sense of modesty.

A little girl of five and half years was playing with a boy of her age and the accused put his finger into her private parts and caused a mark on them. After a few hours she complained to her mother of a burning pain in her private parts and the mother saw a red mark there.

1. A I R 1930 Cal 244=1930 Cr C 328=127 I C 78=31 Cr L J, 114.=57 Cal 1317 (F B).

When questioned the girl said that the accused poked her there with his finger.

Held, Per Jack, J.—Under S. 354 it must be shown that the assault was made intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely to outrage the modesty of the girl. The conduct of the girl showed that in fact her modesty was not outraged. There were no suggestion that she had any hesitation in telling her mother exactly what had happened. It was therefore doubtful whether in fact the modesty of the girl was outraged, and that therefore the conviction ought not to have been under S. 354. As a matter of fact the charge might have been under S. 323. Medical evidence showed that there was injury. In view of the nature of the offence the sentence should be maintained but it should be under S. 323, I. P. C. [P 143 C 2]

Per M. C. Ghose, J.—On the facts as found by the Magistrate S. 354 would apply. No authority has been shown for the contention that a man who puts his finger into the private parts of a girl of five and half years of age is not guilty under S. 354 but is guilty under S. 352, inasmuch as she has not developed a sense of modesty. Such action on the part of a man would tend to destroy the formation of a sense of modesty in the girl. [P 143 C 2]

Sudhansu Kumar Sen—for Petitioner.

Jack, J.—In this case the petitioner has been convicted under S. 354, I. P. C., and sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment on the ground that he outraged the modesty of a little girl of five and half years of age. This rule was granted on the ground that having regard to the age of the girl and the fact that she did not take any notice of the alleged assault and never complained to any one about the offence and she never cried or made any noise, the learned Magistrate should have held that the said girl had not developed the sense of modesty of a woman as contemplated by S. 354, I. P. C., and as such the conviction under S. 354, I. P. C., is illegal and should not be allowed to stand. The circumstances were that this little girl was playing with a boy of her own age and the accused aged about 50 put his finger into her private parts and caused a mark on them. This occurred in the afternoon and when her mother returned at about 5 o'clock and bathed the child, she complained of a burning pain in her private parts. The mother saw a red mark there and asked her how it had been caused and the child said that it was caused by the accused who was a servant of another family in the house. At the trial she said that Suku poked her there with his finger.

The police were then sent for and the accused was sent up on this charge.

When questioned the accused said that the girl scratched herself thereby causing the mark on her private parts. The girl admitted that she and the boy were playing foot ball but said that nothing had happened. Under S. 354 it must be shown that the assault was made intending to outrage or knowing it to be likely to outrage the modesty of the girl. It is urged for the petitioner that the conduct of the girl shows that in fact her modesty was not outraged. There is no suggestion that she had any hesitation in telling her mother exactly what had happened. In the circumstances I think that it is therefore doubtful whether in fact the modesty of the girl was outraged, and that therefore the conviction ought not to have been under S. 354, I. P. C. As a matter of fact the charge might have been under S. 323, I. P. C. Medical evidence was taken and it showed that there was injury, namely, slight excoriation (rubbing off epithelium) with redness on the lower parts of the labia such as might be caused by a finger being turned round and round at the entrance of the vagina. In view of the nature of the offence I think that the sentence should be maintained but it should be under S. 323, I. P. C. The rule is accordingly discharged with this modification of the offence found.

M. C. Ghose, J.—I am of opinion that on the facts as found by the Magistrate, S. 354, I. P. C., would apply. The learned advocate has been unable to show any authority for his contention that a man who puts his finger into the private parts of a girl of five and half years of age is not guilty under S. 354 but is guilty under S. 352, I. P. C., inasmuch as she has not developed a sense of modesty. I am of opinion that such action on the part of a man as has been committed here would tend to destroy the formation of a sense of modesty in the girl and for lack of any authority I cannot agree that the case does not come under S. 354, I. P. C. As my learned brother thinks otherwise, I do not wish to differ having regard to the circumstance that the sentence is maintained.

Judgment.—In this case the charge against the accused is that he has committed an offence punishable under S. 498, I. P. C., i. e. of having enticed away a married girl. The husband is not the complainant. It is said that at the time when the complaint was lodged, the husband was ill and that the girl's father, in whose house the girl had been residing, had therefore to be the complainant. The record does not bear any trace, whatsoever that at the time when the complaint was lodged the husband was really ill and therefore unable to lodge the complaint himself, or that there were any circumstances which would have justified the father of the girl in lodging the complaint instead of the husband. That being so, we are constrained to hold that the first point taken by Mr. Basu in support of this Rule must prevail, viz., that the complaint having been one which is in contravention of the terms of S. 199, Criminal P. C., the proceedings were without jurisdiction. The result, therefore is that the conviction and sentence are set aside. The Rule is made absolute. The petitioner will be discharged from his bail bond. But we desire to observe that nothing that we have said will debar in any way either the husband of the girl or the father of the girl, should such a necessity arise, from instituting a proper complaint against the accused after taking the leave of the Court under S. 199, if he is so advised.

Lalit Mohan Sanyal—for Respondents.

C. C. Ghose, J. —This is an appeal by the Local Government against an order made by the Third Presidency Magistrate Mr. Wajed Ali acquitting the accused Samiulla and five others in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by them on the high seas before the steamship in which they were employed as members of the crew had arrived in Calcutta. The steamship "City of Herford" arrived in Calcutta on 14th September 1929 and the accused were then on Board. On 17th September the commander laid a complaint before the Chief Presidency Magistrate against the accused charging them with having been guilty of rioting and causing grievous hurt to two engineer officers. Processes were issued and warrants ordered to be served. The warrants were not executed as the accused, it is said, were not to be found at the Kidderpore address which they had themselves supplied to the shipping office. Thereafter proclamations were issued against the accused. But the S. S. City of Herford left port towards the end of September 1929 after the evidence of Captain Baker and the two engineers were recorded under S. 512, Criminal P. C. It is said that all the accused subsequently surrendered before the Chief Presidency Magistrate who transferred the case to Mr. Wajed Ali for disposal. The Third Presidency Magistrate, as stated above, acquitted all the accused on the ground that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case on 17th September 1929 inasmuch as there was no evidence to show that the accused were in Calcutta on the said day. It is against that order of acquittal that the present appeal has been preferred.

After the admission of this appeal only one of the six accused, namely, Samiulla has been arrested and he is represented before us to-day by Mr. Lalit Mohan Sanyal. Mr. Sanyal's contention is that there was no evidence that on the date the processes were issued the accused was in Calcutta and therefore the Court had no jurisdiction whatsoever to entertain any complaint against the accused. A clear and sufficient answer to this contention will be found in Ss. 684 and 686, Merchants' Shipping Act 57 and 58, Victoria Chap. 60, and reference may also be made in this connexion to the case reported in Emperor v. Salimullah (1), which is on all fours with the present one. It does not appear from the record that on the date the processes were issued by the Chief Presidency Magistrate the accused were not in Calcutta. They might not have been found by the process server, but it does not follow that they were not in Calcutta, and having regard to the wide terms of Ss. 684 and 686, Merchant Shipping Act, I am not prepared to say that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction whatsoever in issuing the processes on the date the same were issued. Be that as it may all the accused obeyed the processes of the Court and surrendered before the Chief Presidency Magistrate and subsequently also before the Third Presidency Magistrate. That being so the Court of the Third Presidency Magistrate had abundant jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the accused. That not having been done and the acquittal being one which was wrong in law it must be set aside, and so far as the accused Samiulla is concerned being the only one who has been arrested in pursuance of the orders of this Court there must follow an order of retrial. The result therefore is that the accused Samiulla will be retried in accordance with law on charges under Ss. 148 and 324, I. P. C. The other accused have not been arrested and so far as they are concerned the present appeal will remain pending.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 133 — Where first statement requires corroboration from independent sources, such corroboration cannot be sought in accomplice's evidence recorded in Sessions Court—Criminal Trial.

Where the first statement required corroboration from an independent source, such corroboration could not be sought in the evidence of an accomplice recorded in the Sessions Court. Corroboration must be had from independent sources, and if such corroboration could not be had then the first statement was not corroborated at all and that being so, ordinarily it would be very unsafe to act on the first statement which was not corroborated. Statements made by the accused to the daroga showing the place in the jungle where the occurrence in question viz., taking away a female child and having sexual intercourse with her took place, cannot be admitted in evidence they being in the nature of a confession made to a police officer while in custody. S. 27 has no application and would not make the statements admissible. [P 147 C 1]

Judgment.—In this case the accused who is said to be a boy aged 13 years has been found guilty under S. 376, I. P. C., and has been ordered to be detained in a reformatory school for a period of six years in lieu of imprisonment. There was a charge under S. 304, I. P. C. But the jury acquitted the prisoner under that charge. The facts, shortly stated, are as follows: It is alleged that the accused Beni took a child named Hasi away on the afternoon of 18th April 1931, had sexual intercourse with her and afterwards removed the girl to his own house with the help of his mother, kept her there for the night and the next day also. The child, Hasi, was aged about six years. Some time in the afternoon or thereabouts on the last mentioned day, the girl died and the suggestion is that somebody belonging to Beni's house must have thrown away the dead body of the child into a pit in which it was found on the next day at about 10 or 11 a. m. Thereafter the matter was reported to the child's father and the dead body was taken home. Investigation followed and the accused was committed to take his trial in the Sessions Court. Evidence was led by the prosecution to prove that the deceased child was last seen alive with Beni and that the search for the child was at first infructuous and it was not until the third day, i. e., Monday the 21st April that a boy named Putul made certain statements to the police on which they were both arrested and sent up to Moulvibazar to have their confessions recorded by a Magistrate. The confessions made by the two boys Beni and Putul were recorded by the Magistrate on the same night and the accused were remanded to hajal. As stated above, there was a preliminary inquiry by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Moulvibazar who committed the present accused to stand his trial in the Sessions Court.

At the hearing of this appeal, the main point which has been argued is this that Beni's confession before the Magistrate having been retracted before the Subdivisional Officer, and also in the Sessions Court, before it could be used in evidence against Beni, it required corroboration. It is pointed out in the charge that such corroboration was to be found in the evidence of Putul recorded in the Sessions Court, Putul was an accomplice. Of that there cannot be any doubt and the learned Sessions Judge in an earlier part of his charge pointed out quite correctly that where a confession or statement, before it could safely be used against the confessor or the maker of the statement, required corroboration, such statement or confession could not be corroborated by the statements or the evidence of an accomplice. But in a later part of the learned Judge's charge he has apparently directed the jury to find for themselves whether the confession or statement of Beni did not derive corroboration from the evidence of Putul recorded in the Sessions Court. In other words, he has directed the jury to this effect that while the confessional statement of the accused could not be acted safely against the maker, i. e., the accused who made the confessional statement, the corroboration was to be sought in the evidence of accomplice recorded in the Sessions Court. This in our opinion, is wholly wrong and it is against the elementary rule that where the first statement required corroboration from an independent source, such corroboration could not be sought in the evidence of an accomplice recorded in the Sessions Court. Corroboration must be had from independent sources, and if such corroboration could not be had then the first statement was not corroborated at all and that being so, ordinarily it would be very unsafe to act on the first statement which was not corroborated.

In the second place, it has been argued that the statements made to the daroga by Beni showing the place in the jungle where the occurrence in question took place, could not be admitted in evidence, they being in the nature of a confession made to a police officer while in custody. It is said that under S. 27, Evidence Act, such statements are admissible in evidence. When one looks at the terms of S. 27, one realizes at once that S. 27 and the rule laid therein can have possibly no application whatsoever to the circumstances of this case and the statements made to the daroga must be treated as if they were statements made to a police officer in custody and in the nature of a confession. That being so, that statement must be ruled out and should not be treated as admissible in evidence against the accused. There is another circumstance to which we desire to call attention. It does not appear on the record that the retracted confession of Beni received any confirmation or support from the evidence of the medical gentleman who examined the child and who was called to give evidence. At the time when the medical gentleman examined the dead body of the child, the body was found to be in a state of decomposition and the medical gentleman was unable to say whether the offence of rape had been perpetrated by the accused on the child. In other words, there was no evidence to suggest that an offence punishable under S. 376, I. P. C., so far as the medical gentleman was concerned had been committed.

This being the state of the record, it follows from what has already been stated on the first two points concerned that the conviction by the jury on a charge of this description cannot be allowed to stand. The result is that in our opinion the conviction and sentence must be set aside and the case must be sent back for retrial in the light of the observations which follow. So far as S. 376 is concerned, having regard to the state of the record, we are of opinion that the accused should be acquitted under that charge. But the evidence on the record points to the fact that while the accused might not have committed the offence punishable under S. 376, he may have committed an offence punishable under S. 354. But this is a matter for inquiry and in sending the case back we desire that the District Magistrate should inquire whether or not the accused had been guilty of an offence punishable under S. 354, I. P. C., and we accordingly direct that he will take the necessary steps in this behalf. The accused who is on bail will remain on the same bail pending further orders of the District Magistrate.

Criminal Appeal No. 883 of 1930, Decided on 21st April 1932.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 476—Express finding that in interest of justice inquiry should be made into offence is essential.

In the absence of an express finding that it was expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into the offence, a complaint made under S. 476 is not maintainable : A I R 1928 Cal 862 and A I R 1930 Cal 352, Rel. on. [P 148 C 1]

Manindra Nath Mukerji—for the Crown.

Mallik, J.—This is an appeal under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. It has arisen in this way : One Nabani Nath Mukerji brought a case of cheating under S. 417, I. P. C., against Prafulla Chandra Ghose. Nabani's brother Aparnath Mukherji was a witness for Nabani. The case against Prafulla ended in acquittal. The trying Magistrate thereupon called upon Nabani and Aparnath to show cause why they should not be proceeded against under S. 211, I. P. C., and when they showed cause the Magistrate, after considering the cause shown by them, decided to make a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. Nabani and Aparnath thereupon came up to this Court and filed the present appeal. The hearing of the appeal was stayed in view of the fact that Nabani had filed a civil suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court relating to the facts on which he had instituted the criminal case of cheating. The civil suit has ended in the dismissal of Nabani's case.

The order made by the learned Magistrate under S. 476 cannot in our opinion be maintained. In the order made by him the learned Magistrate nowhere found that it was expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into the offence under S. 211, I. P. C. It has been held in the case of Keramat Ali v. Emperor (1), as also in the case of Surendra Nath Jana v. Kumuda Charan (2) that it is only when a Court is expressly of opinion that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made that an order under S. 476 can be made. As there was no such express finding in the present case the order of the Magistrate under S. 476 must be vacated. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the appellants will be discharged from the bail-bonds.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 885 of 1931, Decided on 11th January 1932.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 494—Trial—Magistrate permitting Public Prosecutor to withdraw one accused from prosecution so that his evidence might be available against other accused—Such person is competent witness in law.

The trial Magistrate has a wide discretion under S. 494 to permit the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution one of the accused in order that his evidence might be available for the charge against the other accused who is being tried jointly with him and such a person is a competent witness in law: A I R 1929 Cal 319, Foll. [R 149 G 1]

* (b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, Illus. (b)—Co-accused against whom charge is unconditionally withdrawn is more reliable witness than accomplice under conditional pardon.

The co-accused against whom the charge has been unconditionally withdrawn is a more reliable witness than the accomplice who is examined under conditional pardon, although proper corroboration is necessary in cases of both : 25 Bom 122, Rel. on. [P 149 C 2]

* (c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 27—Police officer interviewing person charged with offence of being in possession of cocaine and walking with him to place pointed out by him where cocaine was discovered—Accused held to be under police custody and statements held admissible under S. 27.

Where a police officer, although he arrested a person charged with being in possession of cocaine after the finding of the cocaine with him, interviewed the accused and was with him for a considerable time and walked with him to the place where the accused pointed out the spot where the cocaine might be found:

[T 149 C 1, 2.

S. K. Sen, Hiralal Ganguli and Arifalal Mukherji—for Petitioner.

Khondkar and Anilendra Nath Roy Chaudhury—for the Crown.

M. C. Ghose, J.—The petitioner Sudam Chandra Bag was convicted by a Magistrate under S. 14, Dangerous Drugs Act, for possession of a quantity of cocaine and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for nine months and a fine of Rs. 1,000. On appeal the learned Additional Sessions Judge upheld the conviction but reduced the imprisonment to six months and the fine to Rs. 500. It is urged in this Court that there is no legal evidence to connect the accused with the possession of the cocaine. It appears that one Suren Haldar was a co-accused with the petitioner. After some evidence was taken the Magistrate on the prayer of the Public Prosecutor discharged him under S. 494, Criminal P. C., and thereafter the Public Prosecutor examined him as a prosecution witness. The learned counsel has urged that Suren Haldar, in the circumstances, was not a competent witness.

After hearing the learned counsel who quoted many cases, and after hearing the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer I am of opinion that Suren Haldar was a witness competent in law. The trial Magistrate was within his discretion in permitting the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution of Suren Haldar in order that his evidence might be available for the charge against the other accused who was being tried jointly with him: see the case of G. V. Raman v. Emperor (1). It is also urged that even if Suren's evidence be competent in law his evidence was pointed and should not be accepted without proper corroboration. There is some force in this argument of the learned counsel though it is to be observed that the co-accused against whom the charge has been unconditionally withdrawn is a more reliable witness than the accomplice who is examined under conditional pardon: see the case of Queen-Empress v. Hussein Haji (2).

It is next urged that there was no evidence to connect the accused with the place where the cocaine was found. So that no presumption can be drawn that the accused was in possession of the same. The evidence is that the petitioner Sudam took a police officer to two separate places which upon his direction were dug out and the incriminating cocaine was found there. The learned counsel urges that the alleged statement of the accused was made at a time when he was not in police custody and therefore his statements are not evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act. I am of opinion that this argument is not correct upon the facts. Though the police officer deposed that he arrested the accused after the finding of the cocaine, it is clear upon the evidence that he had interviewed the petitioner and was with him for considerable time and walked with him to the two places where the petitioner pointed out the spot where the cocaine might be found. In the circumstances there is no doubt as to the fact that the accused was in police custody at the moment when he made the statement as to the spot where cocaine could be found. The Courts below were correct in finding, that the accused was in actual possession of the cocaine. In the circumstances I am of opinion that the petitioner was rightly convicted and that the sentence imposed by the Sessions Judge is not, in the circumstances of the case, too severe. The Rule is discharged. The petitioner, if on bail, must surrender to his bail and serve out the sentence.

A lorry was purchased on a hire purchase system—The owner some time after this forcibly removed the lorry from the purchaser's possession on an alleged breach of contract. The purchaser then filed a complaint against the owner and asked for a search warrant. The Magistrate dismissed the complaint under S. 203 but ordered that the lorry be handed over to the purchaser on taking a bond from him that he would produce it whenever required:

Corporation Ltd. This company let out motor lorries and cars on the hire purchase system, and in the present case the hirer was the opposite party to this rule. The hirers had made various payments in fulfilment of his contract, when some dispute arose between the parties and the petitioners managed to take forcible possession from the hirer and removed the car to their own premises. The hirer thereupon filed a complaint before the Presidency Magistrate and asked for a search warrant for the lorry. The Magistrate made the order, upon the complainant giving a bond to produce it whenever required. The present petitioners came in and alleged that the hirer had been guilty of various breaches of the contract and defaults in payment, and they had given notice more than once that the hire of the vehicle would be terminated and possession resumed by the hirers in terms of the agreement. The Magistrate passed orders dismissing the complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C., but maintaining the order making over the vehicle to the complainant. Against that order this rule is directed.

It is said that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make such an order and that the case is on all fours with the case of Brojendra v. K. S. Sama (1). The facts in that case were very different, though it has the similarity that the question arose over a motor bus taken on the hire purchase system. But there the position was that the owner had by some trick taken possession of the bus, and the hirer had recovered possession again by some other strategy or trick. Thereupon the owners had made a complaint of theft and obtained an order for delivery of the bus which order the High Court set aside. The present case is very different: the hirer has been forcibly dispossessed of his lorry and the Magistrate has ordered it to be restored to him. On the one side it is alleged that the party had a right to terminate the contract and resume possession: on the other side it is alleged that no such right existed. Very obviously this was a dispute of a civil nature, and if the right to recover possession had matured, the natural way for the owners to enforce that right is by proceedings in the civil Courts. Whether they had acquired that right depended upon facts which were in dispute between the parties. In the circumstances of this case I see no reason why on principle the Magistrate should not order the resumption of the status quo so that the determination of the rights of the parties might be properly sought before the civil Courts, as it should have been in the first instance. It appears to me that the language of the section is wide enough to cover an order such as this, and that there was no lack of jurisdiction in the learned Magistrate. It is unnecessary to comment on the Magistrate's view of the nature of the contract between the parties, because even assuming the petitioners here remained the owners, the question whether they were entitled to terminate the hire in the events that had happened was a matter for determination in the civil Courts. The rule is therefore discharged.

Radhicanranjan Guha—In support of the Reference.

Mallik, J.—This is a reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge of Rangpur. It arises out of a proceeding under S. 133, Criminal P. C. It appears that one Sonaulla Basunia purchased some brickfield land which was low-lying and into which surplus rain water from neighbouring lands used to flow during the rains. It appears also that Sonaulla has now raised the level of that low-lying land of his with the result, that it has prevented the flow of surplus rain water from the adjoining lands causing an overflow into other lands. The learned Judge has recommended that the proceeding should be cancelled on the ground that the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to deal under S. 133, Criminal P. C., with the present case.

The reference, which is not opposed before us, should in my opinion, be accepted. The facts of the present case seem to be on all fours with the facts of the case in Sagarnath Sahu v. Parmeswar Narain (1), where it was held that in a case like the present one, S. 133 would not be applicable and that if it is found that any injury has been caused by any tortious act of the man against whom proceedings under S. 133 are sought, then the persons who have been damaged may have their remedy by civil suits. For the reasons given above I would accept the reference and cancel the proceedings under S. 133, Criminal P. C.

Guha, J.—This appeal is directed against an order passed by the learned District Judge of the 24-Parganas, on 9th August 1930, exercising jurisdiction under the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920. The facts of the case giving rise to the appeal may be briefly stated: On an application of two creditors, Manmatho Nath Parkait and Sudhir Chandra Parkait filed on 26th November 1929, an order of adjudication was passed by the learned District Judge. In the application by the creditors it was stated that acts of insolvency had been committed by Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki carrying on a business in paddy as a partnership firm, and in the list of properties mentioned in the application it was stated that the firm styled Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki owned one rice mill standing on about 8 or 9 highas of lease-hold land on Bura Sihtala Road, Sahapore in the district of 24-Parganas. It appears that on 24th February 1930, one Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri put in a petition before the Court, stating that both Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki had brothers. Mahendra Chandra Sen, it was stated had three brothers, and Sris Chandra Chaki had four brothers; all these brothers, the Sen Brothers and the Chaki Brothers were members of two Hindu joint families, and all of them were interested in the rice business referred to in the petition for insolvency, who participated in the profits of the said business, and had share in the same. The petition for insolvency and the application of Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri that there are other partners in the firm were considered by the learned District Judge, on 24th February 1930, and it was ordered by consent of all parties that the firm of Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki and its partners Mohendra and Sris, who had appeared in Court after service of notice, be adjudged insolvents. It appears from the order sheet that on 25th March 1930, the alleged debtors, according to the application of Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri, Provas Chandra Sen, Prosanno Chandra Sen, and Surendra Chandra Sen, as also Kshitish Chandra Chaki, Satis Chandra Chaki, Kamakhya Chandra Chaki and Bhabesh Chandra Chaki filed their objections before the learned District Judge.

The objections raised by the Chaki Brothers on the one hand and by the Sen Brothers on the other controverted the allegations made in the application of Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri and the objectors prayed for the rejection of the said application. It was stated by the objectors that they were not jointly and severally liable for the debts incurred by Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki, and that neither the Sen Brothers nor the Chaki Brothers were members of joint Hindu families. On the objections raised by the persons named above sought to be impleaded in the proceedings as debtors, the learned District Judge raised the following issues: (1) Are the opposite party viz., Provas Chandra Sen, Surendra Nath Sen Prasanna Chandra Sen, Kshitish Chandra Chaki, Satis Chandra Chaki, Kamakhya Chandra Chaki and Bhabesh Chandra Chaki partners of the Insolvent Firm, Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki; and (2) Is the present petition made by Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri maintainable as against the opposite party? The material issue raised for determination in the case by the learned District Judge, was directed to the question whether the Sen Brothers and the Chaki Brothers mentioned above were or were not to be adjudged insolvents along with Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki, so that the properties belonging to the members of the two families, of the Sen on the one hand, and the Chakis on the other—might be added to the assets of the Firm of Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki.

On 23rd June 1930 petitions were filed by creditor Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri praying for reasons stated therein that the opposite parties, the three Sen Brothers and the four Chaki Brothers, as also the insolvents Mohendra and Sris might be directed to answer interrogatories set forth in the petitions filed in Court. Notices were issued on the parties to show cause why they should not be directed to answer the said interrogatories. On 30th June 1930 after hearing the parties concerned, the learned District Judge declined to allow the interrogatories. Thereupon the proceedings were allowed to continue. Witnesses in support of the cases of the parties were examined. From an order recorded on 28th July 1930 it appears that Jogendra Chandra Chackerbatty, the Managing Director of the Dinajpur Trading and Banking Co. Ltd., appeared by a pleader, and was allowed to intervene as a creditor in the proceeding pending before the learned District Judge. On the materials placed before the Court, consisting of oral and documentary evidence, the learned District Judge dismissed the application of the creditor Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri. The Dinajpur Trading and Banking Co. Ltd., has appealed to this Court.

A preliminary objection was taken to the hearing of the appeal by the learned advocate appearing for the respondents, the three Sen Brothers and the four Chaki Brothers. It was contended before us on behalf of these respondents, that the Dinajpur Trading and Banking Co. Ltd., had no right of appeal as the company was not in a position of a creditor whose debt had been proved. It was further contended that the order of the learned District Judge was not such an order which was made appealable by the Provincial Insolvency Act, in view of the provisions contained in S. 4 read with S. 75 and Sch. 1 of the Act. The Dinajpur Trading and Banking Co. Ltd., was allowed to appear in the proceedings in the Court below and intervened in the same, as a creditor. The debt of the company had not at the time been proved; but all the same it could not, in our judgment, be said that the company was not a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of the Provincial Insolvency Act: see in this connexion the decision of this Court in the case of Rustomje Dorabjee v. K. D. Brothers (1). We hold that the Dinajpur Trading and Banking Co. Ltd., was a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of the Provincial Insolvency Act and had therefore a right of appeal, although the debt of the company had not, till the time when it was allowed to intervene in the insolvency proceeding, been proved before the Court.

In regard to the second contention bearing upon the preliminary objection urged before us, it is to be noticed that S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, empowers the District Judge to decide all questions whether of title or priority or of any nature whatsoever and whether involving matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognisance of the Court of which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property. This section read with S. 75 and Sch. 1, Provincial Insolvency Act, does confer a right of appeal to the aggrieved party in a case in which an order of the present description has been made by the District Judge. Furthermore, it appears to us that even on the assumption that the provisions relating to appeal as contained in the Provincial Insolvency Act do not cover an order of the nature which we are considering in the present case, there could be no doubt that in view of S. 75, Cl. (3) the order was appealable with the leave of this Court. In the present case, the appeal having been admitted and allowed to be proceeded with, it was, in our judgment, tantamount to the granting of leave as contemplated by the Provincial Insolvency Act. The view we take of the matter is in consonance with the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Gopal Ram v. Magni Ram (2). The preliminary objection raised on behalf of the respondents must therefore be overruled.

On the merits, the learned advocate for the appellant has in the first place, urged before us that the refusal by the learned District Judge of the application of Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri for compelling the respondents before us, viz., the Sen Brothers and the Chaki Brothers to answer the interrogatories filed in Court, was wholly unjustifiable in law. The learned District Judge in refusing to allow the interrogatories, expressed the opinion that the creditors could not be allowed to prove their case by extracting information from the alleged partners of the insolvent, instead of proving their case by producing evidence; that the creditor Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri was fishing for information of facts which it was his business to prove. The interrogatories have been placed before us and we have given our best attention to the contents of the said interrogatories.

It appears to us to be clear that the learned Judge's view in the matter of his disallowing the interrogatories is correct. A party is not entitled to administer interrogatories for obtaining discovery of facts which constitute exclusively the evidence of his adversary's case. In our judgment therefore, there is nothing wrong in the learned District Judge's decision in disallowing the interrogatories as filed in Court. As it has been indicated already, the object of the creditor Nalini Mohan Rai Chaudhuri and that of the creditor, the Dinajpur Trading and Banking Co. Ltd., the appellant before us, were to have Mahendra Chandra Sen and his three brothers, as also Sris Chaki and his four brothers, adjudged insolvents, so that the properties owned by the Sen Brothers and the Chaki Brothers might be added to the assets of the Firm Mahendra Chandra Sen and Sris Chandra Chaki. We have been asked by the learned advocate for the appellant to proceed with the presumption against the respondents, the Sen Brothers on the one hand and the Chaki Brothers on the other, on the question of their being members of two joint Hindu families. Even on the supposition that there was any such presumption arising from the facts and circumstances of the case before us, from the mere fact that a person carrying on business is a coparcener in a joint Hindu family, it does not necessarily follow that all his coparceners are his partners in that business. The fact of partnership must be proved by evidence showing that the persons alleged to be partners have agreed to combine their property, labour and skill in the business and to share the profits and losses in the same : see in this connexion the decision of Chandavarkar, J., in the case of Vadital v. Shah Khushal (3) (His Lordship then considered evidence and concluded). On the whole, we have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned District Judge in his conclusion that the evidence in the case before us is quite inadequate for the finding that the Sen Brothers at Bogra and the Chaki Brothers at Pabna were partners of the rice-mill at Calcutta. In the result, the appeal fails, and is dismissed. The parties are to bear their own costs in this appeal.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a preliminary decree for sale. The appellants are Messrs. H. V. Low & Co., Ltd., who were defendants 3 (ka) in the suit. The following are the facts of the case: The plaintiffs are the landlords. Mauza Chalbapur belongs to them in zamindari right. The surface of the said mauza had been settled long ago with the proprietors of Searsole estate in mukarrari rights. On the assumption that the sub-soil was in the khas possession of the plaintiffs, one Kalikumar Misra, on 17th

October 1913, executed a kabuliyat, which was duly registered, in their favour, taking what is commonly known as a coal mining lease of the said mauza for a term of 499 years. It was stipulated that royalty at certain rates would have to be paid monthly for the coal taken and, in default of such payment, interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month would be charged; it was agreed that a minimum royalty of Rs. 600 would have to be paid for the first year, of Rs. 3,000 in the second and in the third years, and of Rs. 4,800 for the fourth year and yearly thereafter, and that, in case of default, interest at the rate aforesaid would also have to be paid; and there were other terms and conditions. The kabuliyat also contained the following stipulation:

"Further, the right I have got on the basis of this settlement, the machineries of the said kuthi, the engine and the boilers, etc., will all long remain under first charge for the said royalty and minimum royalty."

Disputes arose between Misra and the proprietors of the Searsole estate and litigation followed, but into the details thereof we need not enter. On 14th July 1915 a deed of anganama (partition, or specification of shares) was executed and duly registered between Misra on the one hand and Kumar Pramathanath Malia Bahadur of Searsole on the other, the two parties entering into a partnership for carrying on the coal business of the said mauza and, amongst other terms and conditions, it was provided that Misra shall have a six annas share and Malia shall have a ten annas share in the underground coal of Mauza Chalbapur and the business relating thereto. It was further provided in this deed that it would remain in force for 499 years and its terms would be binding upon the parties and their respective heirs and successors-in-interest. On 16th January 1919, Malia wrote to the plaintiffs thus:

"After having taken settlement from you of the subsoil right of Mauza Chalbapur, the late Kalikumar Misra made me a partner (cosharer) to the extent of 10 annas of the said property, and I am in separate possession of the same after partition Now his widow—Sreemati Basanti Debi—has written a letter to you for registering my name in respect of the said 10 annas share. Therefore, you shall register my name in respect of the 10 annas share. I shall continue to pay separately the minimum royalty and the royalty payable in respect of the said 10 annas share to you from the date of settlement."

A similar letter, as appears from the words of the letter just set out, had been written two days before by Misra's widow, Sreemati Basanti Debi, to the plaintiffs for mutation of her name in respect of six annas share in the property. The mutation asked for in both the letters was effected and in the plaintiffs' books two separate accounts were opened and royalties and other dues were charged and received separately from the parties in respect of their 10 annas and six annas shares respectively. While this state of things continued, the present suit was instituted on 15th April 1929. The claim in the suit was for recovery of amounts due for the period 1330 B. S. to 1335 B. S. with interest and costs after deduction of certain amounts paid and received on account of the 10 annas share of Malia on declaration:

"of a first and preferential charge on the 10 annas share of the principal defendant (i. e. Malia) in the subsoil right settled with him in respect of Mauza Chalbapur and the kuthi, pits, machineries, pumps, boiler, headgear, engine, trammelines, and the equipments and houses, etc., comprised therein."

The ten annas share of the mauza, in respect of which the claim was made as aforesaid, was described in the schedule to the plaint as consisting of underground coal in 1,067 specified bighas of land, some lying on the southern and some on the northern side of the mauza, which Malia had got by amicable partition with Misra. Raja Pramathanath Malia Bahadur and his two sons were the principal defendants, i. e., defendants 1 to 3. On 6th August 1929 the plaintiffs applied to the appellants, Messrs. H. V. Low & Co., be added as defendants. It was alleged that in 1925 the appellants had obtained against Malia a decree on consent for a large sum of money with declaration of a first charge for the decretal amount on the colliery and its appurtenances to the extent of the interest of the Malias therein. The plaintiffs alleged that they had come to know that the said appellants were about to have the property sold in execution of the said decree and they prayed that the appellants might be made party defendants. They were accordingly added as defendants 3ka. In the plaint as originally framed, Sreemati Basanti Debi was joined as pro forma defendant 4, but she was subsequently made a principal defendant by a petition, which the plaintiffs made on 4th August 1930, in which it was stated:

"She has been made a pro forma defendant as the plaintiffs have not prayed for any relief against the said defendant personally. The said defendant Basanti Debi has made a full payment for the period in suit, and no money is due. But she has right of redemption. Under the circumstances it is necessary to make the defendant a principal defendant and the plaint should be amended accordingly."

This prayer also was granted. Defendant 5 was added as a party on 5th March 1930, he being the receiver appointed by the Court, in respect of the interest of Malia in the aforesaid properties, in the suit in which the aforesaid consent decree had been passed. The Subordinate Judge made a preliminary decree on 5th August 1930 for the entire amount claimed together with interest at the stipulated rate from the date of institution of the suit till the expiry of the period of grace, and declaring the total amount as a first charge on the ten annas share of the leasehold and its fixtures, etc., belonging to defendants 1 to 3, and giving defendants 1 to 3, 3 ka and 5 three weeks' time to pay in the decretal money. From this decree the present appeal has been preferred on 20th September 1930. In the meantime on 27th August 1930, the period of grace having expired and there having been no redemption, a final decree for sale was passed.

The first contention urged on behalf of the appellants is that the charge created by the lease, on which the plaintiffs' claim is based is a "floating charge" whereas their own charge by virtue of the consent decree is a specific one and so the latter charge must have preference. To explain the true nature and characteristics of a "floating security" a large number of decisions has been cited. Wheatley v. Silkstone and Haigh Moor Coal Co. (1), Tailby v. Official Receiver (2), Driver v. Broad (3), Government's Stock and Other Securities Investment Co. v. Manila Ry. Co. (4), In re Yorkshire Woolcombers Association, Ltd., Houldsworth v. Yorkshire Woolcombers Association, Ltd. (5), Illingworth v.

Houldsworth (6), Evans v. Rival Granite Quarries, Ltd. (7), National Provincial Bank of England, Ltd. v. United Electric Theatres, Ltd. (8) and Hamer v. London, City and Midland Bank Ltd. (9). After the exhaustive review of the characteristics of a floating security by North, J., in Wheatley v. Silkstone and Haigh Moore Coal Co. (1), and the description of a floating security given by Lord Macnaghten in Tailby v. Official Receiver (2), which was criticized by Vaughan Williams, L. J., in Houldsworth v. Yorkshire Woolcombers Association, Ltd. (5), and then amplified by Lord Macnaghten himself in Illingworth v. Houldsworth (6), it would be futile to attempt to explain it further. For the purposes of the arguments, that have been addressed to us on behalf of the appellants, some observations from the cases cited will presently have to be referred to. It may however be conceded at once that debentures of companies, though they afford the most ordinary examples of floating security, are not the only instances of it: a floating security may be a security created by an individual and by means other than the issue of debentures. Its essential elements, so far as debentures issued by a company are concerned, were described by Romer, L. J., in the case of Houldsworth v. Yorkshire Woolcombers Association, Ltd. (5), at pp. 291, 295 and 298 in these words:

"The term 'floating' is one that until recently was a mere popular term. It certainly had no distinct legal meaning. It is not a legal term. It has recently been used in more than one statute, but when the Courts have to consider whether the charge is a floating one within the meaning of the term as used in the Acts of Parliament, and in particular within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1900, one must, I think, deal with the question of substance to be answered according to the circumstances of each particular case. I certainly do not intend to attempt to give an exact definition of the term 'floating charge,' nor am I prepared to say that there will not be a floating charge within the meaning of the Act, which does not contain all the three characteristics that I am about to mention, but I certainly think that if a charge has the three characteristics that I am about to mention it is a floating charge: (1) if it is a charge on a class of assets of a company present and future; (2) if that class is one which, in the ordinary course of the business of the company would be changing from time to time; and (3) if you find that by the charge it is contemplated that until some future step is taken by or on behalf of those interested in the charge the company may carry on its business in the ordinary way, as far as concerns the particular class of assets I am dealing with."

In the same case Cozens Hardy, L. J., gave what may be said to be a more positive description of a floating charge. He said :

"My view is that the floating charge need not be on the whole undertaking nor on the whole property of the company. It must, I think, embrace both present and future property and property of a particular class. It must, I think, contain expressly or by necessary implication a right to the company to deal with it for a certain time as though the charge had never been executed. When these conditions are found, I think you have a floating charge within the meaning of the Act."

These observations may be supplemented by what Buckley, L. J., said in Evans v. Rival Granite Quarries, Limited (7), summarizing the decisions on the point. He said

"A floating security is not a future security; it is a present security, which presently affects all the assets of the company expressed to be included in it. On the other hand, it is not a specific security; the holder cannot affirm that the assets are specifically mortgaged to him. The assets are mortgaged in such a way that the mortgagor can deal with them without the concurrence of the mortgagee. A floating security is not a specific mortgage of the assets, plus a licence to the mortgagor to dispose of them in the course of his business, but is a floating mortgage applying to every item comprised in the security, but not specifically affecting any item until some event occurs or some act on the part of the mortgagee is done, which causes it to crystallize into a fixed security."

Bearing those observations in mind, if one examines the character of the charge created in the present case, one finds certain elements present or absent. In the case of debentures, it is the company's undertaking that is charged, but the company may deal with any of the assets in the ordinary course of business until the charge crystallizes or becomes a fixed charge, and this happens when there is winding up or when the debenture-holder takes some steps to enforce his security. Mortgages by tradesmen of their stock-in-trade and effects belong to the same class of securities, in so far as the securities attach to the subjects charged by them in the varying condition in which they happen to be from time to time. It may be conceded that for a floating charge, it is not necessary that the entire book-debts or the entire assets of the business should be charged, but it is nevertheless apparent that the governing idea is to allow a going concern to carry on its business in the ordinary course, the effect of which would be to make the assets liable to constant fluctuation. This element is entirely absent in the present case; what is charged being the leasehold and the machineries, engines, boilers, etc., that is to say, the moveables that would be brought on to the premises. With the charge on them, not a single screw could be removed except perhaps for the purpose of being replaced; and neither the moveables nor any parts of them could be disposed of by the lessee. The element of fluctuation due to ordinary wear, and fear that is present here is widely different from what would be consequent on the power of disposal in the ordinary course of business, which marks the outstanding feature of property subject to a floating charge. Then, as Lord Macnaghten observed in Tailey v. Official Receiver (2) at p. 541 :

"It belongs to a class of securities of which perhaps the most familiar example is to be found in the debentures of trading companies. It is a floating security reaching over all the trade assets of the mortgagor for the time being and intended to fasten upon and bind the assets in existence at the time when the mortgagee intervenes. In other words, the mortgagor makes himself trustee of his business for the purpose of the security. But the trust is to remain dormant until the mortgagee calls it into operation."

And as Buckley, L. J., pointed out in Evans v. Rival Granite Quarries, Limited (7) :

"It is a floating mortgage applying to every item comprised in the security, but not specifically affecting any item until some event occurs or some act on the part of the mortgagee is done which causes it to crystallize into a fixed security."

Now what is the event, on the happening of which, or what is the act or the nature of intervention of the mortgagee, which is required to crystallize the security in the present case? Clearly no act or intervention on the part of the mortgagee is necessary. What however is said is that, until royalty or minimum royalty is due or is in default, the charge will not fasten on the property. This, in our opinion, is not the kind of event contemplated; as soon as the royalty or minimum royalty accrues due, it forms a charge on the assets specified, and no extraneous event is necessary for the charge to fasten itself. This element too is wanting in the present case. It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that there are certain elements of uncertainty which make the charge created of the nature of a floating charge, namely, that it cannot be predicated of a given time as to what the amount of the charge or what the object charged would be. These elements of uncertainty can hardly suffice to satisfy the requirements of a floating charge such as the expression means in law. Were it otherwise, it would be easy to defeat a charge as regards an annuity periodically payable, or a charge as regards interest—simple or compound—accruing in future, by regarding it as a floating charge and creating a specific charge for a fixed amount upon the subject-matter in the meantime. In our judgment, the charge created in the present case is not of the nature of a floating charge, if the expression is to be understood in its recognized meaning

"ambulatory and shifting in its nature, hovering over and so to speak floating with the property which it is intended to affect until some event occurs or some act is done which causes it to settle and fasten on the subject of the charge within its reach and grasp,"

as Lord Macnaghten observed in Illingworth v. Houldsworth (6). In the case of J. D. Jones & Co., Ltd. v. Ranjit Roy (10), in which the facts were that the restriction put upon the borrower company in disposing of their stock-in-trade in the ordinary way of business was not very great to all appearances and the articles comprised in the security were not entirely the stock-in-trade, but there were plant, machinery, implements, utensils, furniture and so forth, and the lender company was to continue in possession, but his representative would not prevent the business being carried on in the usual way, Rankin, C. J. observed:

"Although in this case the security may not be in the fullest sense a specific security, it is not also entitled to be described as coming within the proper definition of a floating security. It is possible to hold that anything may be regarded as a floating security until the full rights of the mortgagee settle or fasten on or bind the subject-matter finally; but it seems to me that the element of possession which is contemplated by the deed and which according to the evidence was actually given at the time prevents our holding that we have before us a purely equitable charge of the character coming within the description of a floating charge."

Merely variability of the amount or the subject of the charge is not the element, the presence of which would make the security a floating security. The first charge created by the kabuliyat attached to the property immediately as the lease began to run, and, though the amount as well as the subject of the charge varied from time to time, it never detached itself and on the other hand always retained its priority over any charge however specific subsequently created. The contention next urged on behalf of the appellants was that the kabuliyat did not in fact create a charge, but merely recorded the possibility of a charge being created in future; and, in support of this contention, reference was made to the decision in the case of Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyu (11). The relevancy of this case, in which, by the terms of the document concerned, no charge was in fact created but it was only provided that on a certain contingency happening certain consequences would follow, from which it might be inferred that, in that event, a charge would arise on the land involved, is not apparent. It may be pointed out that even a floating security, which the appellants contend is all that the kabuliyat creates, is, as observed by Buckley, L. J., in Erans v. Ilirul Granite Quarries, Ltd. (7) (at p. 999), "not a future security; it is a present security, which presently affects all the assets of the company expressed to be included in it."

So far as the leasehold is concerned it was in existence at the date of the kabuliyat. As regards the machineries, etc., there was an element of "possibility" in the sense that the security would attach to them as and when they would be brought on to the premises. If, on this element of futurity, the charge created by the kabuliyat is to be condemned, then the contention, in order to be effective, must be a contention questioning the validity of a charge in respect of moveables not in existence at the date of the kabuliyat and maintaining that the true effect of the transaction was merely to create a lien which, in certain events, may have to give precedence to a specific charge subsequently created. But such a contention has not been definitely urged, and, obviously, for a very good reason. In most modern systems of law, the hypothecation of moveables is either not permitted at all or is fenced in by a multitude of rules, which are absolutely necessary for prevention of fraud: Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 5th Edn., p. 115. Though not accompanied by delivery of possession, the validity of such hypothecation has been recognized in India, and it has sometimes been enforced even against bona fide purchasers without notice: see Deans v. Richardson (12), Shyam Sundar v. Chaita (13), Ko Kywetnee v. Ko Koung Bane (14), Shirram v. Dhau (15), Srish Chandra Roy v. Mungri Bewa (16), Damodar Lakshmidas v. Atmaram Narayan (17), In the matter of Ambrose Summers (18) and Punithavelu Mudaliar v. Bhaskygn Ayyangar (19). The charge having been not merely of the moveables existing on the premises at the time, but also in respect of moveables which might be subsequently acquired and brought there, may be said to have been in respect of property which had not yet come into being. Though a transaction of this character is not governed by the Transfer of Property Act or by the Contract Act, its validity can hardly be disputed. In the case of Misri Lal v. Mozhar Hossein (2) it was held that a mortgage of indigo crops that may be grown upon a certain plot of land is a valid transaction and is in the nature of an agreement to mortgage moveable property that was to come into existence in future. That such a transaction creates a lien which may be enforced by a suit was held long ago in the case of Tilakdhari Lal v. Furlong (21). In the case of Collyer v. Isaacs (22) Sir George Jessel, M. R., observed:

"The creditor had a mortgage security on existing chattels and also the benefit of what was in form an assignment of non-existing chattels which might be afterwards brought on the premises. That assignment, in fact, constituted only a contract to give him the after-acquired chattels. A man cannot in equity, any more at law, assign what has no existence. A man can contract to assign property which is to come into existence in future, and when it has come into existence, equity, treating as done that which ought to be done, fastens upon that property, and the contract to assign thus becomes a complete assignment."

"It has long been settled," said Lord Macnaghten in Tailby v. Official Receiver (2),

"that future property, possibilities and expectancies are assignable in equity for value. The mode or form of assignment is absolutely immaterial provided the intention of the parties is clear. To effectuate that intention an assignment for value, in terms present and immediate, has always been regarded in equity as a contract binding on the conscience of the assignor and so binding the subject-matter of the contract when it comes into existence, if it is of such a nature and so described as to be capable of being ascertained and identified."

In Holroyd v. Marshall (23) the occupier of certain mill premises had covenanted with his landlord to assign to him all machinery which might thereafter be brought by him (the occupier) into the mill, and the sheriff seized the machinery which he had so brought in and Lord Westbury in one of his classical judgments observed thus:

"It is quite true that a deed which professes to convey property which is not in existence at the time is as a conveyance void at law, simply because there is nothing to convey. So in equity a contract which engages to transfer property, which is not in existence, cannot operate as an immediate alienation merely because there is nothing to transfer. But if a vendor or mortgagor agrees to sell or mortgage property, real or personal, of which he is not possessed at the time, and he receives the consideration for the contract, and afterwards becomes possessed of property answering the description in the contract, there is no doubt that a Court of equity would compel him to perform the contract, and that the contract would, in equity, transfer the beneficial interest to the mortgagee or purchaser immediately on the property being acquired. This of course assumes that the supposed contract is one of the class of which a Court of equity would decree the specific performance. . . . It follows that immediately on the new machinery and effects being fixed or placed in the mill, they became subject to the operation of the contract, and passed in equity to the mortgagees, to whom Taylor was bound to make a legal conveyance, and for whom he in the meantime was a trustee of the property in question."

The principle has been adopted in this country in numerous cases amongst which may be mentioned Bansidhar v. Sant Lal (24), Palaniappa v. Lakshma- nan (25), Baldeo Parshad Sahu v. Miller (26), Ram Sarap v. Mohan Lal (27) and Babu Ram v. Ram Sarup (28). In many of the cases just cited it has been held, following Joseph v. Lyons (29) and Hal-las v. Robinson (30), that the equitable title arising in a transaction of this kind would not avail against a subsequent transferee without notice of that title. Even assuming that a distinction between equitable and legal titles can or, in any event, should be made in this country, the appellants would, in order to be entitled to preference, have to show that they took the charge created in their favour bona fide and without notice of the charge which accrued in favour of the plaintiffs under the terms of the kabuliyat. The kabuliyat itself having dealt with the leasehold as well as the moveables, it would be impossible for the appellants to establish such a position and it is not a matter of surprise therefore that this precise contention has not been expressly put forward.

Nextly, it was argued on behalf of the appellants that the terms of the kabuliyat which created the lease could not be varied by the letters of the 14th and 16th January 1929 to which reference has already been made and which to have such an effect required registration and reliance in this behalf was placed upon the cases of Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi (31) and Lalit Mohun Ghosh v. Gopali Chuk Coal Co. Ltd. (32). This proposition is not disputed on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents who however do not rely on the letters as varying the terms of the kabuliyat or as creating new leases in respect of 10 annas and six annas respectively of the property, with new conditions as to payment of royalty and other dues in proportion. Their case is that the original lease stood good, but that, by the request contained in the letters, which was complied with a new arrangement came into being, under which the proportionate dues of the two sets of cosharers were to be realized separately. It is not necessary to read the letters as containing more than what they actually purported to say; in our opinion, the true view to take of them is to hold that they purported to intimate to the plaintiffs the fact that there had been a division of the leasehold between Misra and Malia and that they had, as between themselves, agreed to pay the royalty, etc., due on their respective shares separately, and asking the plaintiffs to have that fact recorded in their books and to receive their dues separately from them in accordance with those shares. It was an arrangement, which it was not obligatory on the plaintiffs to agree to, but to which they might as well agree for the sake of convenience of realization, keeping all the essential terms of the lease intact.

Similarly, it was also contended, on behalf of the appellants, that the charge that was created by the kabuliyat which was a registered document, would not be varied except by a registered document. Two decisions were cited, one of which is an authority for the proposition that the terms of a registered mortgage bond—the particular term in that case was as regards interest—cannot be varied except by an instrument duly registered, so as to fetter the equity of redemption: Tika Ram v. Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki (33) and the other which has laid down that an express and unambiguous stipulation in a mortgage-deed cannot be varied or contradicted by reference to preliminary negotiations: Abdullah Khan v. Basharat Husain (34). These cases have no application here. Under the Transfer of Property Act, charges are not required to be created in writing, but under S. 17, Registration Act, if a charge involving an interest of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards in immovable property is created by an instrument at all, that instrument must be a registered one. If the appellants argue that the charge, having been created by a registered instrument and proved by the document itself, its terms could not be varied by proof of any oral agreement or statement in view of S. 92, Evidence Act, and its proviso (4), that argument has to be regarded as well founded. And whatever diversity there may have been amongst the Courts in this country on the question whether the words "oral agreement or statement" in S. 92 include evidence of acts and conduct of the parties from which an agreement may be inferred—it being remembered that, under S. 100, T. P. Act, a charge may be created by act of parties as well—after the decision of the Judicial Committee in Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (35), it is very difficult to support the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, which went in favour of admitting evidence as to acts and conduct of parties in such circumstances. But it is unnecessary to discuss the matter further, because it has been conceded on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, that it is on no other charge than what the kabuliyat created on which the plaintiffs rely. In para. 5 of the plaint there is a passage, not very well expressed, which may perhaps suggest what has been contended for on behalf of the appellants, namely, that it was the plaintiffs' case there that when jamas were separately recorded in the plaintiffs' books there was a first charge created afresh for the amounts payable for each of the two shares in respect of the properties respectively appertaining thereto. But even so, no such thing has been attempted to be proved and that is not the plaintiffs' case now.

The case of the plaintiffs-respondents thus is that under the lease and the charge which were created by the kabuliyat, and notwithstanding that the lease related to the entire property and the charge also extended to the entire property for the entire amount of royalty, etc., payable for it, they are entitled to sue for the 10 annas share of the leasehold which belonged to Malia and to enforce the charge to that extent on the said share only. Their case is that they are entitled to do so by reason of an estoppel which arises in their favour. Now, it cannot be denied that, as observed by Subramania Ayyar, J., in Huthasanan Nambudri v. Parmaswaran Nambudri (36) at pp. 211 and 212 "a mortgage for an entire sum is from its very purpose indivisible" and that : reference to the mortgagee, but also to the mortgagor. And save as a matter of special arrangement and bargain entered into between all the persons interested, neither the mortgagor nor mortgagee, nor persons acquiring through either a partial interest in the subject, can under the mortgage get relief except in consonance with the principle of indivisibility."

It is true therefore that it is not competent to a mortgagee to release the share of an individual mortgagor by receiving from him what he may conceive to be his rateable share, and that any payment made by an individual mortgagor can only be properly treated as made for the whole body of mortgagors and should be credited in reduction of their joint debt. But this rule has its exception in cases where there has been a severance of interest of the mortgagees or of the mortgagors. S. 67, T. P. Act, in its exception (d), provides for a case where :

"the mortgagees have, with the consent of the mortgagor severed their interests under the mortgage."

Section 60 of the Act, last paragraph, affords another instance :

"where a mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor."

The effect of the word "only" introduced into this paragraph by the Amending Act of 1929 need not be considered here, as the amendment came into force after this suit was commenced. But these are not the only instances of severance that may be conceived or allowed. It is true that the provisions of the Act are to be primarily looked to. But the Act does not contain the whole law on the subject of transfer of property : Satyabadi Behara v. Harabati (37), Shafikul Huq Chowdhry v. Krishna Golinda Dutt (38). It certainly does not profess to codify the whole law as to mortgages. There are other exceptions to the rule as to indivisibility of mortgages, which have been recognized in numerous cases, e. g., where the mortgagee recognizes a partition of the mortgaged property amongst the co-mortgagors, or where there has been a severance of the interest of the mortgagors with the consent of the mortgagee, as for example, where a part has been previously redeemed. In the cases to be found in the books, a divergence of opinion appears on the question whether under the Transfer of Property Act in a suit for enforcement of the mortgage on the residue all the owners, in whose hands the equity of redemption was, were to be made parties or not, or in other words, whether the suit would be maintainable without the equity of redemption being fully represented. This question does not arise in the present case in which all interested parties have been made parties to the suit. Another question, on which considerable diversity of judicial opinion is noticeable, is whether as between the mortgagors and the mortgagee the mortgagee is entitled to release a portion of the hypothecated property and impose the whole lien on the residue or whether the whole of the debt being secured by the whole of the property each parcel of the property, as between the different parcels, is equitably subject only to so much of the debt as corresponds to the proportion between its value and the value of the entire property. This question also does not concern us here, because it cannot be urged that what is sought to be charged on the 10 annas share is anything more than 10 annas of the entire debt.

If neither of these two special considerations arises, the weight of authority is overwhelming that the debt and the lien can always be split up by consent and in no case has it been held that, where, on such splitting up, a mortgagor has been sued for recovery of nothing more than a proportionate share of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee is not to have relief. In the case of Lakshuman Giriraya Naik v. Mudhab Krishna (39), after a mortgage executed by three mortgagors there was a partition by them of their equity of redemption, by which each became entitled to an undivided one-third in the same; two of the mortgagors then redeemed their two shares on the basis of paying two-thirds of the principal and interest due and two-thirds of a sum said to be due on account of excess assessment and took possession of their shares; and the other mortgagor was allowed to redeem his one-third share on the footing that one-third of the mortgage debt was payable by him, it being said:

"The parties had severed their interests, and the mortgagee has chosen to recognize that partition as shown by his allowing two of them to redeem their two-third shares by giving them possession."

39. (1890) 15 Bom 186.

In Mahadaji Hari v. Ganpatshet (40) certain mortgagors (cosharers) having after the mortgage transaction effected a division among themselves and apportioned their liability under the mortgage debt according to their shares with the acquiescence of the mortgagee, it was held that though the mortgagee was not bound to recognize the arrangement made by the mortgagors among themselves, still, as he appropriated the amounts paid by some of the mortgagors in paying off their respective shares of the mortgage debt without there being a special direction to that effect from the mortgagors, he was entitled to recover the remainder of that debt from the share of the mortgagor (cosharer) by whom it was due. And in Venkatachella Chetty v. Srinivasa Varada Chariar (41) it was held that where a division of a joint family is effected by consent, an arrangement by some of the members with a mortgagee of the joint family property, by which their shares were to be released on payment of their share of the debt, is binding on members who are not parties to the arrangement, so long as they are not called upon to pay more than their share of the debt as settled by partition. There are cases in which it has been recognized that, if a plaintiff (mortgagee), suing on the basis of his mortgage for either sale or foreclosure, thinks fit to exempt from his suit some portion of the mortgaged property and to sell or to foreclose the mortgage in respect of the remainder, there is nothing in law to prevent his doing so, and that the only thing in such a case is to see that the burden on the mortgagors sued does not increase by the course adopted: Sheo Tahal Ojha v. Sheo dan Rai (42). Amongst the cases of this Court, which may be cited in this connexion, it would be sufficient to refer to only one, namely, that of Hari Kissen v. Veliat Hossein (43) which has been frequently followed ever since and never dissented from.

As already observed, this is not a case in which any question arises as regards the burden having increased in any way. It is a perfectly simple case, in which the two cosharers effecting a division amongst themselves apportioned their liability under the lease, which was the subject of the charge, with the consent or acquiescence of the plaintiffs, the holders of that charge. The liability was originally a joint one, but by severance separate liabilities were created, and the result of this severance was that each item of debt, as it accrued, was to be discharged in two parts by the two cosharers separately. It was at the request of the cosharers themselves, that the debts were allowed to be separately discharged. So far as the liability for the period in suit is concerned the plaintiffs, acting under the aforesaid arrangement, received the entire amount of the dues of defendant 4 and appropriated it in discharge of her liability (vide plaintiffs' petition of 4th August 1930) and thus placed themselves in a position, in which it became impossible for them to proceed against the two cosharers conjointly on the basis of their original undivided security. The Malias, therefore cannot be heard to say either that the amount claimed is not recoverable from them or that their share of the property should not be sold for its recovery.

But it is not enough to deal with the question as one between the mortgagors on the one hand and the mortgagee on the other, because the case before us is one in which the rights of a third party, namely, the appellants, have intervened and these rights would certainly require protection. The matters which have to be considered in this connexion are: firstly, whether the splitting up, to which the appellants were not parties, can be regarded as valid as against them; and secondly, whether the appellants' right to redeem has been prejudiced by the mode in which the charge has been sought to be enforced. So far as these matters are concerned there is again some divergence of judicial opinion, but upon a question which does not arise in the present case. This conflict has been pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in the case of Mir Eusuff Ali Haji v. Panchanan Chatterjee (44) at pp. 805-6 in the following words:

"To put the matter in another way, as between the mortgagor and mortgagee, the latter is entitled to release a portion of the hypothecated property and diminish his own security to that extent. It is not obligatory upon him to proceed against all the properties rateably or to exhaust them for the satisfaction of his debt. This principle is recognized in the cases of Raghu Nath Pershad v. Harlal Sadhu (45), Hara Kumari v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. Ltd. (46) and Krishna Ayyar v. Muthukumarasawmiya Pillai (47). While therefore we adhere to the view taken in the cases of Imam Ali v. Baij Nath (48) and Hakim Lal v. Ram Lal (49), namely, that a mortgagor who has a security upon two or more properties, which he knows belong to different persons, cannot release his lien upon one so as to increase the burden upon the others without the privity and consent of the persons affected: Kettlewell v. Watson (50), we are of opinion that this doctrine has no application to the present case, where the release took place at a time when the appellants had not purchased any interest in the mortgaged premises, and the mortgagors alone were the persons affected by the release. We must not however be assumed to adopt the rule laid down by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court that such release may be granted even to the prejudice of persons, who had previously acquired an interest in the mortgaged properties. That view is clearly opposed to principles of equity, justice and good conscience, and though recognized in Sheo Prasad v. Behari Lal (51), Sheo Tahal Oja v. Sheodan Rai (52), Ghafur Hasan Khan v. Muhammad Kifayatullah Khan (53) and Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Amir Singh (54), was not adopted in Ram Ranjan v. Indra Narain (54) and the case of Krishna Ayyar v. Muthukumarasawmiya Pillai (55), if it lays down a similar principle, cannot to that extent be supported. The contrary view, which accords with the rule adopted by this Court, was followed in Ponnusami Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Naicken (56).

In the present case, this diversity of judicial opinion does not matter, for it cannot be said that the burden has in any way been increased. The burden imposed is exactly proportionate in view of the terms of the lease. There may be difficulty in regarding the appellants as subsequent transferees, so as to treat them as standing in the shoes of the mortgagor and to bind them by the estoppel, which arises against their transferor, Malia, because, although at the request of the two cosharers, royalties, etc., were being separately received from them, the debt for the period sued for in the present suit was not split up until after the appellants came on the field and took a second charge. The position is that at the date of the suit the plaintiffs had not received their dues for the period in suit from any of the two parties (vide para. 6 of the plaint), but they chose to split up the debt in conformity with the arrangement which the parties had entered into inter se and, acquiescing in it instituted the suit, to which they made the appellants party defendants, on 6th August 1929 and thereafter accepted the six annas share of the dues from defendant 4 (vide the plaintiffs' petition of 4th August 1930). The splitting up, having been subsequent to the charge created in appellants' favour, the general rule which has been applied to many similar cases will apply, namely, that the rights of persons who have acquired an interest in the mortgaged estate, since the making of the mortgage, of which the mortgagee has notice, cannot be defeated or impaired by any subsequent arrangement to which they are not parties; in other words, if a mortgagee with notice that the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property has been conveyed, releases any part of the mortgaged estate, he must abate a proportionate part of the mortgage debt against such purchaser. Amongst the cases, that may be referred to in this connexion, may be cited the following: Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Veliat Hossein (43), Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (57), Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (58), Imam Ali v. Baij Nath Ram Sahu (48), Hakim Lal v. Ram Lal (49) and Venkatachella Chetty v. Srinivasa Varada Chariar (41).

But then, it was contended, on behalf of the appellants, that, though they are entitled to a part only of the equity of redemption, they have an absolute right to redeem the whole estate. It was argued that, though they are owners of the equity of redemption of only a share in the mortgaged estate, they cannot be compelled to redeem their share only, their right and obligation being to redeem the whole. In support of this proposition, passages from text-books have been cited and reliance has been placed on several cases, amongst which it is necessary to refer to three. One of these cases is Pearce v. Morris (59), in which it was said that it cannot be disputed that the owner of the equity of redemption of one of two estates comprised in the same mortgage cannot insist on redeeming the estate separately, and cannot be compelled to redeem it separately his right being to redeem the whole subject to the equities of other persons interested. Another case is Hall v. Heward (60), in which it was observed further that such partial redemption cannot be allowed except as a matter of arrangement or unless there is a special bargain. The third case is that of Huthasanan Nambudri v. Parameswaran Nambudri (36), in which it was held that a person entitled to a part only of the equity of redemption had the right to redeem the whole, notwithstanding the mortgagee's objection that he should not be permitted to redeem more than his share of the equity.

The last mentioned decision has been adversely commented on in Rathna Mudali v. Perumal Reddy (61), and was not considered to be supported by Pearce v. Morris (59) and Hall v. Heward (60), upon which it purported to be based. The decision has been followed in two cases of this Court, namely, Baikantha Nath Dey v. Mohesh Chandra Dey (62) and Protap Chandra v. Peary Mohan (63), in which it was held that, in an ordinary case, the partial owner of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the whole mortgage and there was no question in these cases of the other partial owner or owners having discharged their liability under the mortgage. So far as the English law on the point is concerned, it is not necessary to consider it at any length, because there is a pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in the case of Yadalli Beg v. Tukaram (64), which states what that law is. In that case 16 fields had been mortgaged, of which one was subsequently sold to the respondents and later on, under a consent decree passed between the mortgagee and the mortgagor, it was provided that, unless within a year certain payments were made, 9 out of the 16 fields including the one sold to the respondents should be given to the possession of the mortgagee; the respondents were no parties to the consent decree or the suit, in which it was passed and they sued, claiming to redeem the 9 fields. Their Lordships said:

"The only question that arises is whether they (i. e., the respondents) are entitled to redeem the whole of the 9 fields, or only the field conveyed to them subject to the mortgage over the whole. According to the English law the respondents would have been entitled to redeem the mortgage in its entirety subject only to the safeguarding of the equal title to redeem if any other person who had a right of redemption, a point which has not arisen so far in the present case. The respondents, being transferees of part of the security by English law, if it applied, would on the one hand be entitled to redeem the entire mortgage on the properties generally, and correlative could not compel the mortgagee to allow them to redeem their part by itself. This would be as the result of principle unless something had happened which extinguished the mortgage whole or in part, such as an exercise of a power of sale originally conferred on the mortgagee by his security or such conduct on the part of the transferees as would estop them from asserting what normally would have been their right."

There being nothing in the Transfer of Property Act to the contrary, the right of the appellants, ordinarily, no doubt, would be to redeem the whole, but that would only be so, subject to the equities of the persons interested. The position being that the owner of the six annas share had satisfied her dues in respect of her share, the practical effect of which was to extinguish the charge to that extent, and the plaintiffs having, in effect, released that share from the burden of the charge and kept it out of the suit, the appellants cannot, in our judgment, ask for liberty to redeem that share. We think we should agree in the view expressed in case of Rathna Mudali v. Perumal Reddy (61), in which it was said that the question whether the Court will allow redemption on the whole of the mortgage, at the instance of a person entitled to a part only of the equity of redemption, must depend on the circumstances of each case and the rights acquired by the mortgagee or by third parties subsequent to the mortgage and we must respectfully dissent from those cases in which it has been suggested that in all circumstances and irrespective of any considerations, the right as well as the liability of the owner of a part of the equity of redemption is to redeem the whole. And we agree with the observations of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in that case to this extent: that, in our opinion, no distinction in this respect need necessarily be made between cases where the mortgage is split up: (a) by the mortgagee releasing certain of the properties or a certain share of the properties comprised in the mortgage; (b) by himself purchasing a portion of the joint property; and (c) by the joint owners of the equity of redemption effecting a partition of their properties either by mores and bounds or by agreeing to hold the property in common in definite shares instead of jointly.

Lastly, it has been contended that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a personal decree against the appellants. The judgment of the Court below is explicit that the plaintiffs did not claim such a decree and we do not see that any such decree has been passed. But the Subordinate Judge appears to have made defendants 1 to 3, 3 ka, i. e., the appellants and No. 5, liable for Rs. 2,010-2-0 as costs payable to the plaintiffs. We see no justification for this order in so far as it is against the appellants and defendant 5. This portion of the decree therefore will be set aside. The result is that the appeal will succeed only to the extent indicated above and the rest of the decree passed by the Court below will stand. The appellants will get their costs from the plaintiffs-respondents, the whole of their costs for the paper book and a hearing-fee as on the amount of their success, the same being assessed at 10 gold mohurs. Other parties will bear their own costs in the appeal.

B. N. Ry. Co. Ltd.—Defendant—Respondent.

Appeal No. 36 of 1929, Decided on 18th February 1932, against original decree of Sub-Judge, 4th Court, 24-Parganas, D/- 15th November 1928.

(a) Damages—Suit for—Work done against railway company—Defendant not producing relevant material for ascertaining measure— ment—Plaintiff's claim will not fail for mere non-proof.

The rule that in a suit for work done by a contractor against his employer it is for the plaintiff to prove his claim and if the evidence he has called for the purpose is not reliable he can get nothing beyond what the defendants have admitted can hardly be applied to a case where the defendant is a railway company and the defendant's measurements were not properly made and the defendants have not been able to produce all relevant materials in connexion with the measurements they made. [P 167 C 1]

(b) Damages—Suit for — Claims for work done and reimbursement for expenses incurred for being ready for other promised work are maintainable—Contract Act (1872), S. 73—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 3.

In a suit by a contractor against a railway company, the claim was based on two distinct causes of action; one was founded on the original contract for which the claim was for price of work done and the other founded on a promise for other work and a requisition in connexion therewith under which the plaintiff was to maintain an efficient staff in order to comply with which he had to incur expenses and for which expenses he claimed to be reimbursed by way of compensation.

Held: that so long as the damages claimed are not regarded as damages for breach of the original contract, but as compensation for loss incurred by reason of the plaintiff having had to arrange for the new work that was promised, the said claim would not be obnoxious to the claim for the price of the work done under the original contract. [P 168 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 22—Decree for damages—Only one party appealing—Damages regarding one item liable to be enhanced may be set off against another liable to reduction if items arise out of same cause of action.

In an appeal against a decree for damages, even though some particular item or items in an account may be found by the Court of appeal against the non-appealing respondent, and on that footing the amount for which a decree has been granted by the lower Court may have to be enhanced, still the decree might be supported by showing that in respect of some other item the Court below made a mistake. But this rule does not apply to decisions founded upon different rights or causes of action: A I R 1927 Mad 801, Rel on. [P 169 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 33—Applicability and scope.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff whose suit for price of work done and for damages, together with interest, has been decreed in a modified form against the defendants, the B. N.

Ry. Co. Ltd. The plaint is not quite artistically drawn, but the plaintiff's case, put quite shortly, was as follows: in February 1920 the defendant company gave the plaintiff contract work in connexion with the construction of the Tal-char Coal Field Railway for a portion designated as from chainage 314 to 330; that the plaintiff commenced work under the contract and continued to do so till 11th September 1924; that before the date last mentioned the work from chainage 324 to 330 was suspended pending decision of a proposed change in the plan; that by that date the earthwork in chainage 314 to 315 had been almost completed, while that from chainage 315 to 321 had been partially completed, the total work done in chainages 314 to 324 being two-thirds of what had been proposed; that on the said 11th September 1924 the defendants stopped the work which the plaintiff was doing, but at the same time required him to maintain an efficient arrangement so that, when necessary, he might resume the work or take up any other work that might be given him in substitution; and that by the end of December 1924 the defendants asked the plaintiff to discontinue the arrangement and thereafter finally cancelled the contract. The suit was instituted on 18th August 1926. The claim was laid at Rs. 42,000 odd after deduction of payments which the plaintiff had received. The work which the plaintiff did, fell under three categories, viz. earthwork, bridgework, and buildings and miscellaneous work. The rates for the different items of these works were scheduled in three contracts, viz. Ex. A, Ex. A (1) and Ex. A (2) respectively, and the plaintiff also claimed that in respect of certain matters there were modifications or variations made subsequently on his representation.

In the written statement filed on behalf of the defendants many of the allegations in the plaint on which the defendant's liability was founded were denied, and appended thereto were three schedules which show at a glance on what points the parties differed on the question of measurements, rates or accounts. Some of the statements contained in the written statement are not quite accurate: the Subordinate Judge has pointed out in what way they are wrong, and nothing has been said before us to challenge the correctness of these findings. It was pleaded that the plaintiff could legitimately get Rs. 2,221 as his dues for works done. A further amount of Rs. 2,074-4-0 was afforded on the ground of alleged loss due to stoppage of work, etc., but without prejudice. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to these two amounts, viz. Rs. 2,221 + Rs. 2,074-4-0 = Rs. 4,295-4-0, and allowing a further amount of Rs. 3,172-13-0 on certain heads gave the plaintiff decree for Rs. 7,468-1-0 with costs in proportion to his success.

The contentions urged on behalf of the appellants fall under certain specific heads and it will be convenient to deal with them separately item by item. We first of all take up the main item of work, i. e., earth work in Sch. A to the plaint. (The judgment after considering the evidence on record and finding that no reliance could be placed on the measurements produced by either party proceeded.) In this unsatisfactory state of things it is not quite easy to determine how the case is to be decided. Here we cannot follow the rule which Mr. Tulloch suggested in Ex. 8, to which reference has already been made, and say that the quantity claimed by the contractor should be paid, because we are of opinion that the plaintiff's claim is not a genuine one. One view that may be taken is that it was for the plaintiff to prove his claim, and if the evidence he has called for the purpose is not reliable he can get nothing beyond what the defendants have admitted. But this rule can hardly be applied to a case where, as here, the defendants' measurements were not properly made and the defendants have not been able to produce all relevant materials in connexion with the measurements they made. Mr. Austin's evidence makes it perfectly plain that the Railway Engineers have a double duty to discharge: they have to see to the interest of their employers and they have a further duty to the contractor and see that the latter is satisfied that his just dues are paid. Consequently once the measurements made by the defendants are considered unsatisfactory the contractor's claim acquires a good deal of strength. The question is to what extent can we or should we accept the plaintiff's case.

There are two facts established upon the evidence about which there can hardly be any doubt or dispute. One such fact is that the plaintiff was not satisfied with the measurements as regards the banks, while he readily agreed to those as regards most of the cuttings. His conduct in referring to sign the measurements, his complaint to Mr. Tulloch and to the Agent [vide Ex. B and Ex. H (12)], his insistence in getting Mr. Tulloch and the other high officials to the spot to look into his complaint, are matters which point unmistakeably to his having entertained a genuine grievance. On the other hand there is not the faintest doubt that his allegation that he had completed two-thirds of the entire work and that is a myth. The correspondence to which reference has already been made establishes beyond doubt that he was not particularly anxious to have his works measured and that, in fact, it was with some difficulty that the defendants could get him to dress up the banks and make them ready for measurement. The story of so large a quantity of work having been washed away was in our judgment an invention resorted to because the plaintiff knew that he would not be able to support his claim on the spot at least to that extent. From the claim he put forward that quantity must be excluded. As regards the rest it is not possible to arrive at any conclusion with any degree of mathematical precision. But regard being had to the fact that the defendants in whom the duty lay of making a proper measurement have not been able to place before us such first-hand materials as would have satisfied us that these measurements were right, and as it is not possible at this distance of time to re-measure the work we think we ought to allow the rest of the plaintiff's claim. (The judgment then considered the plaintiff's claim with regard to rates, classification, rates and stores recruiting and fuel charges and cost of building cooly sheds and proceeded.) So far we have dealt with the part of the plaintiff's claim under Sch. A to the plaint which relates to prices for work done. We have now to turn to the plaintiff's claim under Sch. B to the plaint,

i. e., under the head of damages. Mr. Bagram, appearing on behalf of the respondents has complained, and in our opinion rightly, that from a perusal of the plaint it is not easy to ascertain what is the contract or whether it is one contract or more, or whether the plaintiff has sued on their basis or for their breach. He has contended that if an employer prevents completion of the work given to a contractor, and if the work is only partially completed the contractor may sue for damages or he may treat the contract as at an end and may sue for price of the work done, but that these are only alternative remedies and he cannot have both. He has cited the following passage, in support of his contention, from Hudson on Building Contracts, Edn. 4, Vol. 1, p. 495 :

"Where the employer prevents completion, e. g., in the case of wrongful forfeiture, or of the builder being ejected from the site the builder may sue for breach of contract. If the builder has done nothing the measure of damages is the loss which he would otherwise have earned on the principle involved in Inchbold v. Western Neilyherry Coffee Co. (1) and see Masterton v. Brooklyn Corporation (2). If the work is partially completed the measure of damages is the contract price, deducting therefrom what it would have cost to complete the work when it was stopped. But instead of suing for damages the builder may, at his option, treat the special contract as at an end, and sue for the value of the work actually done and of the material supplied, or he may sue alternatively for damages or for the value of the work and materials : Mayne on Damage, Ilanche v. Colburn (3), Trickett v. Badger (4) and Lodder v. Stowey (5), p. 453."

It seems to us that the plaint, though very clumsily drawn, need not necessarily be read as laying a claim for price of work done and also for damages under one and the same contract. The contract in the present case was only a contract as regards the rates having regard to the kinds of work that were to be done and did not fix the work itself as lying within particular chainages ; it gave the defendant the right to stop the work with 10 days' notice ; and it was open to the defendants to call upon the plaintiff to do any substituted work in the place of the original one. The true view to take of the plaint is that it combines two distinct causes of action ; one founded on the original contract for which the claim was price of work done, and the other founded on a promise for other work and a requisition in connexion therewith under which the plaintiff was to maintain an efficient staff in order to comply with which he had to incur expenses and for which expenses he claimed to be reimbursed by way of compensation. So long as the damages claimed are not regarded as damages for breach of the original contract, but may be treated as compensation for loss incurred by reason of the plaintiff having had to arrange for the new work that was promised, the said claim would not be obnoxious to the claim for the price of work done under the original contract. Judged by this test the first alternative claim for Rs. 3,000 for "loss of profit over remaining work" can not possibly stand, and it has not been pressed before us. As regards Rs. 400 for costs of implements and Rs. 200 for cost of building shed that too have been abandoned, obviously because such a claim has no legs to stand upon. The remaining items canvassed before us are the following :

|---|---------|
| 1. Advance lost upon labour : | |
| 8 Masons at site. | Rs. 800 |
| 150 coolies at site. | " 1,600 |
| 100 coolies abroad (being recruited). | " 1,000 |
| 2. Costs of Staff : | |
| 2 agents at Rs. 50 for 4 months from September 1924 to December 1924. | " 400 |
| 2 servants at Rs. 15 for Ditto. | " 120 |
| 3. Damages for unemployment. | |
| Of the plaintiff as he had to wait for six months at Rs. 500 per month. | " 3,000 |

All these items in 1, 2 and 3 are, according to the plaint, claims for damages on the footing of the men concerned being detained at the spot by reason of the alleged requisition of the defendants that the plaintiff was to remain in readiness for the work that was promised in substitution. Regarded as a claim for damages on the ground of the defendants not having given him the substituted work which they promised we do not think the plaintiff has really any case. The promise was a purely gratuitous one, made only for the plaintiff's benefit, and Mr. Mitter who has placed the plaintiff's case before us with great ability and care has not been able to lay his finger on any material which would go to suggest that the plaintiff was called upon to maintain any staff or incur any expenses. Such a claim in our judgment, is entirely unsustainable. But the Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiff a decree for a certain amount on these heads and we have therefore to examine his grounds for his doing so.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge on the question of damages is faulty. He has treated the question of damages as if it arose both on account of breach of the original contract and also on account of nonfulfilment of the promise for substituted work that was made. He held that so far as keeping masons, recruiting coolies and maintaining a staff was concerned, the story was in the main untrue and on the weekly statements, Ex. J series, he held that the men who were there were not sufficient to complete the dressing of the banks in order to get them ready for measurement. He found however that the defendants had offered to pay Rs. 559-7-0 as damages for sudden stoppage of work, and being thus misled into thinking that a claim for damages on that ground was maintainable he went into the question as to what should be the measure of such damages. He found that the plaintiff's accounts showed that the plaintiff had advanced Rs. 3,000 or a little less which he had not been able to recover. It would appear from what he has said in his judgment that if the old work had not been stopped or if any substituted work had been given the plaintiff could have recovered the advances. He seems further to have been of the opinion that if this loss was taken into consideration in making the classification and Rs. 10-8-0 had been allowed as the initial rate for the chainages for which the said rate was claimed, the plaintiff would have got an additional sum of Rs. 2,887-12-0 which is very nearly what the plaintiff alleged he had lost upon advances on account of labour. He therefore allowed Rs. 2,887-12-0 on the ground of damages in the place of Rupees 559-7-0 which the defendants had offered. As already observed this part of the Subordinate Judge's judgment cannot be supported, at least not on the ground on which it was based. But we have already said that the learned Judge was not entirely to blame for it; because it does not appear to have been urged before him that an alternative claim for damages for stoppage of work was not maintainable along with a claim for price of work done, and also because an offer to the extent of Rs. 559-7-0 on account of such damages was made by the defendants themselves. We have been asked by Mr. Bagram to hold that this claim for damages has been wrongly allowed.

The defendants have not filed any appeal from the decree of the Court below and have not even preferred any cross-objections to the plaintiff's appeal. Mr. Bagram has relied upon the words of O. 41, R. 22 and O. 41, R. 33 for his contention that it is open to us to consider the validity of the judgment in so far as it has dealt with the question of damages. His contention in substance is that even though some particular item or items in an account may be found by the Court of appeal against the respondent and on that footing the amount for which a decree has been granted by the lower Court may have to be enhanced, still the decree might be supported by showing that in respect of some other item the Court below made a mistake. We think this contention is sound subject to the qualification that the rule does not apply to decisions founded upon different rights or causes of action. We are in agreement with the interpretation put upon O. 41, R. 22 by Srinivasa Ayyangar, J., in the case of Sriranga Thathacharia v. Srinivasa Thathacharia (6) in which he held that under R. 22 it is not open to a respondent to have adjudicated by the appellate Court rights or causes of action which have been decided against him in the Court below and in respect of which he has filed no appeal or memorandum of objections. As regards O. 41, R. 33 we think it would be enough for us to say that though the terms of the rule are very wide, the rule should be cautiously applied and only in cases where but for recourse to it the ends of justice would be defeated: Shib Chandra v. A. C. Dulcken (7).

In the present case the claim for damages that has been allowed by the Subordinate Judge, though it is unsupportable in law as a claim for damages for breach of a contract, cannot be regarded as unjust on its merits, seeing that in the opinion of the learned Judge the plaintiff was put to loss and this loss was not sufficiently taken into account in making the classification. Though we are not prepared to rely on the account filed by the plaintiff it is more than clear to our minds that the plaintiff had made a bad bargain in going in for this contract. The insistence with which he clamoured for higher rates for the hard soil before all the superior authorities concerned is a clear indication that he had incurred some loss, no matter through whose fault or in whatever way it may have happened. He had worked well and was in the good books of the defendants as appears from the letters already referred to. He did not hesitate to forgo all his prospects by taking recourse to a devise to hoodwink Mr. Bennett, if only to get a better classification in order to be able to recoup himself as appears from the letter Ex. 4 (b). In his letter Ex. 4 (m) to the Deputy Chief Engineer he complained that he had made advances to coolies to the extent of Rupees 2,000 but that the coolies had absconded. The railway authorities themselves considered him as somewhat hard hit or else they would scarcely have offered him some compensation for stoppage of work. We are therefore unable to regard the decree for damages which the Subordinate Judge has made as calling for our interference even though such interference would be warranted by R. 33, O. 41 of the Code. There remains now only the question of interest, which is the claim under Sch. C to the plaint to be considered.

Interest.—We see no reason to differ from the view which the Subordinate Judge has taken of this matter. The result is that in our opinion the appeal should be allowed in part, the decree passed by the Court below being enhanced by Rs. 1,912-8-0 + Rs. 131-12-0 = 2,044-4-0. As regards the costs of this appeal in view of the highly inflated claim which the appellant made, we would allow him only the paper-book costs and Rs. 100 as hearing-fee.

Century Insurance Co. Ltd.—Defendants—Respondents.

Appeal No. 30 of 1932, Decided on 13th July 1932, against original decree of Buckland, J., D/- 15th January 1932.

 Insurance—Fire—Renewal is fresh contract—Property burnt between date of expiry and date of renewal—Company is not liable.

A term of a fire insurance policy was as follows : " The company hereby agrees with the insured that if, after payment of the premium, the property above described shall be destroyed or damaged by fire, or lightning at any time between 3rd November 1927 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon of 3rd November 1928, or during any subsequent period for which the insured shall pay to the company and the company shall accept the sum required for the renewal of the policy, the company will pay or make good all such loss or damage." The policy was renewable but was not renewed before its expiry. Premium for renewal was sent on 18th November and was received and accepted on 26th November. The property was destroyed by fire on 20th November. Claim was sent on 22nd November and received on 28th November when the company intimated that it cancelled the renewal. In a suit by the insured :

Held : that the renewal of a policy is a fresh contract dating back to the date of the expiry of the original contract and the acceptance of the premium on the 26th being under a mistake as the property was non-existent on that date the transaction of renewal was void and the company was not liable: *Pritchard v. L. P. E. Pugh and Shekar Bose—for Appellant.

S. N. Banerjee and J. C. Sett—for Respondents.

Buckland, J.—The plaintiff in this suit claims to recover the sum of Rupees 20,000 together with interest and costs under a policy of insurance against loss by fire being No. 1260486 issued by the defendant company on 26th November 1927 in respect of building No. 57, Abbotabad Cantonment, which was destroyed on 20th November 1928. The policy, as stated, was issued on 26th November 1927 and insured the plaintiff in the sum of Rs. 20,000 against fire in respect of the building owned by him at Abbotabad for one year from 3rd November 1927 to 3rd November 1928, upon which date the policy is stated to be renewable. On 20th November 1928 the premises insured were completely destroyed by fire, but on the 18th the plaintiff had posted to the defendant company a cheque for Rs. 85 on account of the renewal premium. Actually the amount of the renewal premium was Rs. 100, but he was allowed a discount amounting to Rs. 15 by reason of which the company, on receipt of the cheque on 26th November 1928, sent him two receipts, one for Rs. 85 and another for Rs. 100 formally renewing the policy. At that time the company had no knowledge of the fire, and a letter informing them as to the fire was despatched on 22nd and received on 28th November. This appears from a letter written by the company bearing the latter date in which they confirmed as follows a telegram sent to the plaintiff on the same day :

"Renewal receipt No. 88 under policy No. 1260486 for Rs. 20,000 covering 57 cantonment hereby withdrawn and cancelled stop premium of Rs. 85 being returned to you stop our letter of 26th November and enclosures are also hereby withdrawn and cancelled stop letter follows."

Summarizing the position the insured sent his cheque in renewal of the policy before the fire ; the company formally renewed the policy in ignorance of the fire ; subsequently on learning of the fire they purported to withdraw and cancel the renewal receipt. For the present purpose it is not suggested that the plaintiff ought to have informed the company of the fire before the company could post the renewal receipt, nor for the present purpose has it been suggested that everything was otherwise than perfectly bona fide. I say "for the present purpose" because though three issues were submitted and accepted I have been invited by learned counsel on both sides first to try issue 1 as it may determine the whole suit. The issues are as follows : (1) Was the policy in force on 20th November by reason of the payment and acceptance of the renewal premium on 26th November ? (2) Was the renewal of the policy, if any, procured by fraudulent concealment of the fact of the destruction of the risk by the plaintiff ? (3) Did the plaintiff commit any breach of condition of the policy as alleged in para. 6 of the written statement. At the hearing Mr. Banerjee for the company stated in relation to issue 3 that he would confine himself to the particulars given in paras. 6 (i), 6 (ii) b, 6 (iii) and 6 (v) of the written statement. Before considering the question to be determined I should state that neither side wished to call any oral evidence nor has the evidence taken on commission been referred to and I gave every opportunity to tender any documentary evidence which it was desired to use. I have been informed that all material documentary evidence has been exhibited and it consists exclusively of the very few documents to which I shall have to refer. I further wish to draw attention to the letter of 28th November 1928 from the company to the plaintiff which says :

"As the fire is stated to have taken place on the 20th instant we are not liable as we had clearly intimated to you in our letter of the 14th idem that we would not cover the risk until we receive your further instructions which did not reach us until the 26th instant."

On my drawing Mr. Banerjee's attention to this passage, he said that nothing turned upon it, and he did not desire to go into any question which that paragraph might be considered to have foreshadowed. The contention advanced on behalf of the plaintiff which purports to be expressed in issue 1 and to which no objection has been taken, even if the point has not been expressly pleaded, is that actually there was no renewal; that the word "renewal" is really misused in the policies, that under the policy itself the plaintiff was continuously insured until and by reason of the renewal. This is based upon the clause of the policy which runs as follows :

"The company hereby agrees with the insured (but subject to the conditions printed on the back of this policy, and to any other conditions thereon otherwise expressed) that if, after payment of the premium, the property above-described or any part thereof, shall be destroyed or damaged by fire or lightning at any time between 3rd November 1927 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon of 3rd November 1928, or during any subsequent period for which the insured shall pay to the company, and the company shall accept the sum required for the renewal of this policy, the company will pay or make good all such loss or damage etc."

It is submitted that though the policy might lapse, and indeed would have lapsed and come to an end on 3rd November 1928, if either the insured had declined to renew or the company had refused to accept his premium nevertheless it continued to have effect until the matter of the renewal was determined one way or another and that, in that view the policy was for a year or a "subsequent period." If that is the correct construction of the document it is contended that the plaintiff was insured at the time of the fire, and that it was not open to the defendant company, on learning of the fire after the policy had been renewed, to withdraw and to return the premium. On the other side it has been argued for the company that the policy was for one year, but that it could be revived upon payment and acceptance of the renewal premium which must be taken to be subject to the continued existence of the subject-matter of the policy, and that the company was entitled to withdraw and cancel the renewal, the property having been destroyed before it received the premium and issued the receipt. I have been referred to passages in several text-books including Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 17, 526, in which the learned author sets out the following passage :

"When the policy provides that there shall be no insurance until the renewal premium has been accepted by the insurance office, and a loss accrues during the 15 days and before payment of the premium it seems that in the absence of any condition so framed as to show a contrary intention, the insured is not entitled to recover."

The policy with which this suit is concerned does not provide totis in verbis that there shall be no insurance until the renewal premium has been accepted by the insurance office as Mr. Pugh has been careful to point out, for such a provision would cut the ground from beneath his feet. But it is a matter for consideration whether the terms of this policy do not come to the same thing in that, the word "or" being used disjunctively, the clause contemplates not a continuing period indefinite in length, but two periods of which the first ends on 3rd November 1928 after which the next period begins during which the policy holder will not be insured until the renewal premium has been paid and accepted. Two cases are referred to under the passage quoted and indeed a considerable number are cited in the text-books quoted. I have invited learned counsel for the company to cite the authorities themselves, but he has assured me that after having read them all, none would furnish any assistance except one to which I shall refer presently. I am also referred to a well-known authority on the law of fire insurance (Bunyan's Law of Fire Insurance 6th Edn., 241) where the following occurs:

"If the premium is not paid within 15 days and the fire occurs, the acceptance of the premium by the office in ignorance of the disaster will not revive the policy. If neither party were aware of the fire unless there was express agreement that the insurance should date back by the insertion of some words equivalent to "lost" or "not lost," it would be open to the office to contend that the acceptance of the premium being for the renewal of the insurance assumed that the subject-matter of the insurance continued to exist."

Passages have also been read from a recent edition of the well-known book on fire insurance by Welford and Otter Barry, 3rd Edn., 181, where among others occurs the following:

"The effect of the revival is not to continue the contract formerly existing, but to establish an entirely new one. If therefore a loss has already happened without the knowledge either of the insured or the insurers the revived policy will not, even if ante-dated to the date at which the former policy expired, be treated as applying to such loss unless it is clearly the intention of the parties that it shall do so."

I observe that earlier the learned author discusses two opposite views expressed as to the renewal of a policy, whether it is a fresh contract or whether it is a continuing contract relating back to the original policy, and not a fresh one, and writes that the view as to the renewal of a fire policy being a fresh contract appears to be correct, and if this is so it should dispose of Mr. Pugh's point, but obviously the terms of the policy should be considered in each case. I will now consider Pritchard v. Merchants and Tradesmen Mutual Life Insurance Society (1), the only authority cited in the course of the argument and one to which constant reference is to be found in the text-books. That was a Life Insurance case and by the policy the premium had to be paid on or before the 13th October in every year during the life insured. It was provided that the policy should be void if the premium was not paid within 30 days after it became due, but it might be revived within three calendar months on satisfactory proof of the health of the insured. It appears that the person whose life was insured died on 12th November 1855, and on 15th November 1855, that is, more than 30 days from the due date for payment of the premium, but within three months the annual premium was paid and the company gave a renewal receipt, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant being aware of the fact that the person insured was already dead.

1. (1858) 27 L J O P 169=3 C B (n.s.) 622=4 Jur (n.s.) 207=6 W R 340.

The question was whether in such circumstances the sum assured was recoverable from the insurance company. The learned Judges all agreed that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Williams, J., observed that the payment was void and ineffectual as it was made and received on the implied understanding on both sides that the insured was then alive. Crowder, J., said that the premium was accepted under mistake, and the transaction was altogether void. It is contended that the case is materially different because the policy was to be void if the premiums were not paid by the due date though it could be revived within a certain period, whereas in this particular case the policy continued to be operative. That appears to me to beg the question. If this policy does run on, as Mr. Pugh expressed it, then the matter is not open to further argument, but it appears to me the more correct to say that the renewal of a policy is a fresh contract dating back to the date of the expiry of the original contract. Pitchard v. Merchants Insurance Society (1) is not on all fours with the case, but it appears to me that there are principles underlying it which make it applicable. The passage which makes most appeal to me is that to be found at the conclusion of the judgment of Crowder, J., where he observes that:

"the common sense of the matter is entirely in favour of the defendant. They accepted the premium under a mistake, and the transaction is altogether void."

There is no question in this case of mistake in the technical sense, but the common sense of the matter must be that the company would not have accepted the premium had they known that the loss had already occurred. They would have been entitled to decline it in any case, and can it therefore be said that having accepted it in ignorance of the fire they are bound by the terms of the policy to pay on a loss which had already occurred when they accepted it? I find it impossible to accept this view on any reasonable basis and, for the reasons stated, it appears to me that the contention of the defendant company is correct and that the suit must be dismissed with costs.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of my learned brother Buckland, J., who dismissed the suit of the plaintiff whereby he claimed Rs. 20,000 upon an Insurance Policy issued by the defendant company against risk of fire in respect of certain premises of plaintiff No. 57 Abbotabad Cantonment in the North-western Provinces. The policy was originally issued on 3rd November 1927. The number of the particular policy with which we are concerned is 1260486. We have been referred to the terms of the policy which for the present purposes are as follows:

"The company hereby agrees with the insured that if, after payment of the premium, the property above described, shall be destroyed or damaged by fire or lightning at any time between 3rd November 1927 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon of 3rd November 1928 or during any subsequent period for which the insured shall pay to the company, and the company shall accept the sum required for the renewal of the policy, the company will pay or make good all such loss or damage."

The policy extends, to begin with, till 4 o'clock on 3rd November 1928 and unless something had been done by that time, the effect of the policy had been expended. On 27th October accordingly, some time before 3rd November the company issued a reminder asking for its premium. There was correspondence upon the question whether or not on this and certain other policies the plaintiff could get 15 per cent commission. The company was minded to allow 15 per cent commission. By its letter of the 31st October it wrote to the plaintiff asking him to send a remittance for the renewal premium less 15 per cent discount when the necessary renewal receipt would be issued. The company pointed out to the plaintiff that as the policy had already expired they had wired him accepting his terms as to discount. On 8th November the plaintiff sent a cheque for premiums on two other policies and asked the company to renew them. With reference to the policy now in question they said:

"as regards the renewal of the policy No. 1260486 for Rs. 20,000, we beg to say that we will get it renewed during next month."

On the 14th November the company wrote to the plaintiff to say:

"you state in the last paragraph of your letter that you wish to renew the policy some time next month, i.e. December. In this connexion I have to inform you that the policy in question has already expired on the 3rd instant and you are therefore not covered in the meantime. Should you desire to take out a fresh policy at any later date, please let us know when we shall hold the risk covered."

It is reasonably clear therefore that until the company received the request and had an opportunity to decide upon the matter, the plaintiff was not covered at all. On the 18th November the plaintiff sent a cheque for Rs. 85 in payment of the renewal premium for the above policy and he said: "kindly send us the renewal receipt and oblige." It was quite open to the plaintiff, particularly in view of the language of the company's letter of the 14th November to write to the company to say:

"we want some sort of credit for the time since the 3rd November until the time when you receive this letter because we never pay money for nothing," and I daresay that had they so done the company would have been equally pleased to give them either a new policy altogether dating from the date of the receipt of the plaintiff's letter or would have been equally pleased to extend the period for a corresponding number of days in November 1929. The plaintiff asked for nothing of the sort. He knew that until his letter reached the company he would not be covered. He did not think it necessary, apparently, to haggle about the short period during which, as he knew, he was not being covered. He did not make any particular stipulation for any concession of that kind. It may be that such a matter was not worth troubling about. The letter having been sent with the premium on 18th November, a fire occurred on the 20th. The plaintiff's letter was not received in Calcutta at the branch to which it was addressed until the 26th. It is quite true that the plaintiff had in the meantime, namely on the 22nd, written to the company to say that a fire had occurred, and making a claim. What would have happened if he had telegraphed to the company to say that a fire had occurred we may imagine for ourselves; but he sent a letter which did not arrive in Calcutta until the 28th. The company immediately repudiated their liability and withdrew their acceptance of the premium. The question is whether in these circumstances when this fire occurred on 20th November 1928 the plaintiff was or was not covered. It is not contended that mere posting of the letter of 18th November effected an insurance in itself. It is not contended that the company on 26th November, when they accepted the policy, had any knowledge of the fire; but it is said that as a matter of construction of the clause which I have read from the policy, the company when it accepted the premium in ignorance of the fire on 26th November entered into a contract to the effect that if between the 3rd November and the 27th a fire had occurred, they would indemnify the plaintiff in respect thereof. Mr. Pugh has put this contention in two ways—in one way, as a matter of construction of the contract; and in view of the terms of the renewal of the receipt—he says that the plaintiff with retrospective effect became on 26th November covered as from the 3rd. Another way he puts it is that the plaintiff at least became covered from the date when he despatched the money, namely, the 18th November.

In my judgment both the conventions are equally unfounded. It is not usual when stipulating for fire insurance to stipulate with reference to the past. The risk to be guarded against is a risk in the future. The language of this policy is plain and intelligible enough if that primary condition be considered. Speaking of the future it is sensible enough to say that the plaintiff will be covered during the year or during any subsequent period for which he should pay the premium to the company and the company accepts it. The idea is that the ordinary course of business will be that the insurance for the year will be fixed up before that year begins. The language of the policy which is not a matter for any wonder is adapted to the ordinary condition. We are to consider whether it is the intention of this language to put a case in which the company is accepting the insurance premium in respect of a fire taking place in a house on the footing that the fire may or may not have taken place and that if it has taken place the company is going to pay for the damage. If that is so we will have found something unusual in the way of fire insurance contracts. I see in the clause no foundation for an argument that such an unusual contract is contemplated by the clause.

Mr. Pugh argues that if the defendant company can say that they are not liable for any risk that eventuated before the 26th, then they have taken some of his money for nothing; that they have no business to take his money for the period between the 3rd and the 26th and that for this reason we must hold that when the insurance company accepts the renewal policy out of time it takes the risk of an accident having happened in the meantime unknown to itself. In my judgment the position is very clear. The plaintiff might well have stipulated for a reduction in his premium of a few rupees or he might quite well have stipulated that the year should be reckoned to run from the 26th. He did nothing of the sort. He asked for the policy to be renewed. He did not in any way put himself to the trouble of taking care that he lost no sum of money however trivial. That does not mean that the company when it accepted the premium on the 26th had undertaken to insure a building which might or might not have been consumed by fire at the time. It appears to me that the judgment of the learned Judge has very fully and carefully examined the relevant principles and that the learned Judge has arrived at a conclusion which is entirely correct. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 52—Claim for enhancement for excess area—Assessment on measured area must be proved.

Where there is nothing to show when a tenancy was created, whether there was any measurement of the lands comprised in the tenancy either at the first, any intermediate or the last assessment or adjustment of rent, it is necessary for the landlord to base his claim for enhanced rent for excess area upon some measurement either actual or agreed upon on the basis of which rent was assessed or adjusted : A I R 1928 Cal 553, Foll.; A I R 1924 Cal 374, Rel. on; A I R 1926 Pat 197, Disc.; A I R 1921 Cal 345 and 5 C L J 588, Ref.

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 35—Limit of enhancement is to be finally settled by first appellate Court on facts of each case.

The facts and circumstances in each case have to be taken into consideration in determining the limit of enhancement so that it may not be unfair or inequitable to the parties concerned. The discretion so exercised in the matter of enhancement of rent should not be interfered with in second appeal, but it would not be right to say that discretion in the matter of enhancement of rent, on the ground of its being fair and equitable, could be exercised by the trial Court only and that it was not open to the final Court of facts to use its own discretion, based upon facts and circumstances of the case before it.

Guha, J.—These appeals have arisen out of suits for realization of arrears of rent, brought by Raja Jagat Kishore Acharyya Chowdhury. The claim was made by the plaintiff in the suits for additional rent for excess area in the possession of the tenant defendants in the suits, on the basis of area recorded in the last cadastral survey, under Ch. 10, Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff also claimed enhancement of rent on the grounds of a rise in the average prices of staple food crops, as also on the ground that the productive powers of the land held by the tenants have been increased by fluvial action. The points raised for determination in the suits, on the averments made in the pleadings of the parties, so far as the main controversy between the parties was concerned, were the following: "Are the defendants holding any land for which they do not pay rent, and are they liable to pay additional rent for the same? What was the standard of measurement when the lands in suit were settled? What amount of increase, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover under S. 30 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act? Has there been any increase in the productive power of the lands due to fluvial action? If so, to what increase of rent is the plaintiff entitled therefor?"

The Munsif of Bajitpur gave his decision allowing the plaintiff's claim in the suits in a modified form. There were decrees passed for arrears of rent at as. 12-6 per kani of '65 acre per kani, as per area ascertained in the settlement operations. The plaintiff was also allowed enhancement of rent at the rate of 8 as. in the rupee, from 1333 B. S. It is to be noticed that the decision and decrees passed by the Munsif were based on the findings arrived at by him, that the unit of linear measure was to be taken to be $24\frac{1}{2}$ inches a cubit (hath), and not 18 inches as asserted by the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any additional rent for excess area as contemplated by S. 52, Bengal Tenancy Act. The enhancement of rent under S. 32 was allowed by the Munsif, after comparison of prices as contemplated by that section, and after negating the contention of the defendants that the lands comprised in the tenancies could not bear enhancement for reasons stated by them. On appeal the District Judge of Mymensingh has affirmed the decision of the trial Court, so far as the plaintiff's claim for additional rent for excess land was concerned, but has reduced the enhancement allowed by the trial Court to 4 annas in the rupee. It may be mentioned that the learned District Judge accepted the plaintiff's case that the standard cubit prevailing in the pargana was one of 18 inches; but observed that whether a cubit of that length was actually used in working out the present areas was quite a different matter. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The main question in controversy between the parties centred round the plaintiff's assertion that in the year 1891 there was a compromise arrived at as between the landlord and the tenants, by which rents were fixed at a certain rate per kani; so that if the plaintiff could show that any tenant defendant was in possession of more lands than he was paying rent for, the plaintiff was entitled to get additional rent for excess area, in view of the provisions of S. 52, Ben. Ten. Act. Reference is necessary in this connexion to the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge, hearing upon this part of the plaintiff's case. The learned Judge has in the first place mentioned that the plaintiff has really made no attempt to prove that there has been any actual increase: no evidence was given to show that any of the defendants had obtained lands by encroachment or otherwise, and has then found that no actual increase had been proved. The defendants knew that areas were entered in the plaintiff's papers, but they did not accept any measurement with reference to which the areas were stated. The lower appellate Court accepted the defendant's case that no actual measurement was made at the time when the compromise was effected in the year 1891, which was a compromise of a dispute in regard to existing rent, and not merely one relating to the rate per kani, and that the tenants never agreed that they would be liable to pay additional rents for the same land as the result of any future measurement. The Cadastral Survey measurements showed increase in areas, but did not necessarily show that the tenants were in possession of any land in addition to the land shown in plaintiff's papers, the identical land appearing to be greater in quantity on account of proper measurement. If there was no measurement at any time, or if there was no measurement which was accepted by the defendants, the rate per kani mentioned in the plaintiff's papers, standing by itself, could not be of any avail to the plaintiff, if the area was never ascertained on proper measurement, and accepted by the defendants. The learned District Judge has observed:

"a mere rate tells you nothing: in order to find out what the rent is, it is also necessary to know the area."

In this view of the case, resting upon definite findings of fact arrived at by the Court of appeal below the plaintiff cannot upon the plain reading of S. 52, Ben. Ten. Act, succeed in his claim for additional rent for excess area, as made in the suits. The conclusion thus arrived at is amply supported by the authority of decisions of this Court. In the case of Gocool Chunder v. Jamal Hismas (1), the learned Sir George Rankin, C. J., has restated the settled rule of this Court, that where there was nothing to show when a tenancy was created, whether there was any measurement of the lands comprised in the tenancy either at the first, any intermediate or the last assessment or adjustment of rent, it was necessary for the landlord to base his claim upon some measurement, on the basis of which rent was assessed or adjusted. In view of some comment made on a previous decision of the learned Chief Justice in the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Kaulat Sheikh (2), by the learned Judges of the Patna High Court in the case of Shib Sahai v. Bejoy Chand (3), it is necessary to examine the decision of this Court in the case of Durga Priya v. Nazra Gain (4), which according to the learned Judges of the Patna High Court laid down a rule different from the one which was taken to be the settled rule in this Court in Manindra Chandra Nandi's case (2), referred to above. In Durga Priya's case (4), Mookerjee, Ag. C. J., in delivering his judgment referred to his own decision in Raj Kumar v. Ram Lal (5), laying down the rule that the landlord was entitled to additional rent for excess land only when he showed what the quantity of land was at the inception of the tenancy, that the rent was settled with reference to area, that no consolidated rent for the entire area let out was settled, and that the quantity of land at the time of suit was in excess of that originally let out. The learned Judge in remanding the case to the lower Court gave this direction among others: that it was to be considered whether the rent was assessed on an area fixed by estimate or determined by measurement.

1. A I R 1928 Cal 559=111 I C 107=55 Cal 680.

2. A I R 1924 Cal 374=79 I C 852=50 Cal 957.

The learned Judges of the Patna High Court considered that the mention of an area fixed by estimate, in the judgment of Mookerjee, Ag. C. J., made the statement of the learned Sir George Rankin, C. J., as to the settled rule of this Court, inaccurate. It is somewhat difficult to appreciate the observation of the learned Judges of the Patna High Court in this behalf in view of the fact that Mookerjee, Ag. C. J., had not departed from the view already expressed by him in Raj Kumar's case (5), noticed above, and also because the expression "an area fixed by estimate" does not militate against the view taken by this Court in Manindra Chandra Nandi's case (2). The area fixed by estimate must be such as has been accepted by the tenant, which might very well take place of an area on the basis of or determined by measurement, and approved by the tenant, as mentioned in all the decisions of this Court bearing upon the question. It may be noticed in this connexion that Mullick, Ag. C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Patna so that there was no difference made by that Court between an area ascertained by measurement and an estimated area accepted by parties concerned. It is difficult therefore to appreciate how the comment of Mullick, Ag. C. J., in Shib Sahai Lal's case (3), as to the settled rule of this Court, obviously indicating that Mookerjee, Ag. C. J., laid down a different rule in Durga Priya's case (4), was justifiable.

High Court in Sib Sahai Lal's case (3), has specifically mentioned that

"in determining the area demised, the parties may either resort to measurement or they may agree to accept an assumed figure"

In the cases before us, no evidence was given by the plaintiff to show that there was any excess land; no attempt was made to prove that the defendants had got possession of any additional lands. If there was no actual measurement in the year 1891 or thereabouts, when the last assessment or adjustment of rent was made; if the areas mentioned in the plaintiff's papers were not based on measurement; and if the tenants never agreed that they would be liable to pay additional rent for the same land as the result of any future measurement as has been found by the Court of appeal below, and to which findings reference has been made above, the plaintiff could not succeed in his claim for additional rent for excess lands as made in the suits. On the question of enhancement of rent as claimed by the plaintiff in the suit, it has been urged before us, that the learned District Judge having found that upon a comparison of prices of two decennial periods, the plaintiff was entitled to an enhancement of about 8 annas in the rupee, he was in error in reducing the enhancement to 4 annas in the rupee. It was contended that the discretion exercised by the trial Court in the matter of enhancement should not have been interfered with by the Court of appeal below. In view of the provisions contained in S. 35, Ben. Ten. Act, the facts and circumstances in each case have to be taken into consideration in determining the limit of enhancement so that it may not be unfair or inequitable to the parties concerned. The learned Judge in the lower appellate Court, after taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration, has come to the conclusion that although on a comparison of prices of staple food crops the increase in rent might be taken to be at the rate of about 8 annas in the rupee, a rate of 4 annas would be fair to the landlord and the tenants. The discretion so exercised in the matter of enhancement of rent should not be interfered with in second appeal; and it would not be right to say that discretion in the matter of enhancement of rent, on the ground of its being fair and equitable could be exercised by the trial Court only, and that it was not open to the final Court of facts to use its own discretion, based upon facts and circumstances of the case before it.

In the result the appeals are dismissed with costs. We allow one hearing-fee in the appeals in which Mr. Najim Ali has appeared for the respondents: the hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs. The costs for the appearance of the Deputy Registrar as guardian of the minor respondents in some of these appeals have already been paid by the appellant.

Corporation of Calcutta — Plaintiff—Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No. 497 of 1932, Decided on 18th July 1932, against order of Small Cause Court Judge, Sealdah, D/- 4th February 1932.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 77—Proof of entry in public document should be either by producing the document or certified copy—Proof of ownership of car is by producing register.

The right way of proving an entry in a public document would be either that the document itself should be produced by a proper official or a duly authenticated copy of the material part of the document placed before the Court. It is irregular for the Court to accept in proof of the ownership of a car a mere statement made in answer to a letter written by the plaintiff, without the person who made the statement being called or a certified copy of the Official Register of Motor Vehicles produced. [P 179 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 77—Register of Motor Vehicles showing name and address of owner if conclusive against person having same name and address (Quære)—Motor Vehicles Act (8 of 1914)—Rules under.

It is more than a little doubtful as to whether it can rightly be said that the mere fact that the Register of Motor Vehicles shows that a person of a particular name is the owner of a particular car and lives at a certain address as given in the register necessarily for all purposes decides that any person of the same name who happened to be found in that address must be the owner of the particular car. [P 180 C 1]

(c) Tort—Negligence—Running down cases—Burden on plaintiff—Vehicle under management of defendant or his servant—Accident not ordinarily possible—Burden is shifted.

In running down cases the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed unless he gives affirmative proof of negligence on the part of the defendant or his servant. Persons who base a claim on negligence must prove negligence.

Where a vehicle is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servant and an accident occurs such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if he who has the management uses proper care, the onus rests on the defendant to disprove that the accident arose from want of care: *Isac Walton & Co. v. Judgment. — This rule is directed against a judgment passed by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Sealdah, in a suit brought by the Corporation of Calcutta against one Bajinath Shaw for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 69-1-6 for damage caused to a lamp post belonging to the plaintiff Corporation by a motor car alleged to be the property of the defendant. The suit in short was an action for damages for negligence. The defendant denied that he was the owner of the motor car in question. The registered number of the car was 10670 and the registered owner was Bajinath Shaw of No. 225-1, Cornwallis Street, Calcutta. It seems that the accident occurred at night. The witnesses of the occurrence were able to take the number of the car which struck the lamp-post but they apparently had no opportunity of ascertaining the name of the person driving the car at the time or of making any inquiries on the spot as to the ownership of the car. By way of defence to the plaintiff's claim the defendant, as I have stated, denied that he was the owner of the Motor Car No. 10670 or indeed of any other motor car. It is obvious that the defendant was in no wise responsible for the accident or liable for the damage caused.

The main issue and indeed the only issue which seems to have been dealt with by the learned Judge at the trial was the plain and simple question of whether the defendant was the owner of the motor car concerned in the occurrence. It appears that there was considerable delay between the date of the accident and the institution of the suit. The occurrence took place on 3rd April 1930 and the plaintiff's suit was not filed until 27th March 1931. I am informed that in the meantime the Corporation having ascertained from their own records, that the defendant appeared to be the owner of the car entered into correspondence with him as to the question of his liability. It appears that from the very outset this Baijnath Shaw denied that he was the owner of the Car No. 10670. On 13th October 1931, when presumably the plaintiff Corporation of Calcutta, were making ready for the trial of the suit a letter was sent from the Corporation to the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Motor Vehicles Department, in these terms :

" Re-damage to lamp post No. 10, Moyerpur, Road.

Dear Sir,

The above lamp-post was damaged by a passing Motor Car No. 10670 on 3rd April 1930. I beg to request you to let me know in whose name the above car was registered on the date of the occurrence.

An early reply will be very much appreciated."

An answer to that letter was written upon the letter itself by the Deputy Commissioner of Police, Motor Vehicles Department, in the terms :

" The Memo No. 12034, dated 29th October 1931. Returned in original with the intimation that the Motor Car No. 10670 is owned by Baijnath Shaw of 225-1, Cornwallis Street, since 17th August 1928."

This memo was signed by E. A. Hartley for Deputy Commissioner of Police, Motor Vehicles Department. The suit came on for trial on 4th February 1932, and the plaintiff in support of their case called certain witnesses who testified that they had seen the Motor Car No. 10670 strike a lamp-post on the Moyerpur Road. No evidence of negligence on the part of the person driving the car was given beyond the mere fact that the car struck the lamp-post. In order to affect the defendant with responsibility for what happened, the plaintiffs put in evidence the letter of 13th October with the reply of 29th October 1931, endorsed upon it in the way I have described and they called a subordinate clerk from the Motor Vehicles Department to testify that the signature "E. A. Hartley" as appeared on the document was that of the officer acting for the Deputy Commissioner of Police. Beyond that no evidence whatever was given to connect the defendant Baijnath Shaw with the motor car which damaged the lamp-post on 3rd April 1930. It appears however that the summons in the suit was served on the Baijnath Shaw who appeared in the suit and he in fact made no protest against acceptance of the summons. But he, in his written statement denied that he was the owner of the car and at the trial he himself gave evidence to the same effect, and apparently he put forward the suggestion that a mistake had occurred because he himself resides at No. 225, Cornwallis Street, whereas the address of the Baijnath Shaw who is said to be the owner of the car, appears in the Register as 225-1 Cornwallis Street. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had sufficiently established that the defendant was in fact the owner of the motor car. He said :

" Defendant denied that he was the owner of the motor car. But it appears from the report of the Deputy Commissioner of Police that this Car No. 10670 is owned by Baijnath Shaw of 225-1 Cornwallis Street and it appears that he is the defendant in this suit. In the plaint his address was given as above and summons was served on him in that address and he appeared and raised no objection that he did not reside there. Hence his identity has been well established."

The learned Judge proceeded to say :
" I find that the defendant is the owner and is liable."

This rule was issued on the ground that the memorandum on the letter of 13th October 1931, was not properly admissible in evidence in proof of the ownership of the motor car. I am bound to say that there is some substance in that contention. The right way of proving an entry in the Register of Motor Vehicles would be either that the register itself should be produced by a proper official or a duly authenticated copy of the material part of the register placed before the Court. It is obviously somewhat irregular for the Court to have accepted in proof of the ownership of the car a mere statement made in answer to a letter written by the plaintiff corporation without the person who made the statement being called or a certified copy of the official register produced. In any event it seems more than a little doubtful as to whether it can rightly be said that the mere fact that the register shows that a person of a particular name lives at a certain address as given in the register necessarily, for all purposes, decides that any person of the same name who happened to be found in that address, must be the owner of the particular car in question, especially having regard to the fact that it is quite possible that there might be another person of the same name living in the same house, particularly having regard to the frequent occurrence of similar names in this country and to the fact that in a large city like Calcutta often a number of families live in a cluster of dwellings which are described under one denomination. However, as regards that point, the learned Judge seems to have thought that because the defendant lived or appeared to live at 225-1, Cornwallis Street, it had been satisfactorily established that he was the owner of this particular car. The learned Judge came to a finding of fact upon that and in the ordinary way a finding of fact ought not to be disturbed.

I cannot however help expressing considerable doubt as to whether it was properly established that the Baijnath Shaw who appeared as defendant in the suit was in fact the Baijnath Shaw in whose name the car was registered. The defendant gave a categorical denial that he was the owner of this car. For the sole purpose of ascertaining whether there was any good reason for supposing, as was suggested on behalf of the Corporation, that the defendant had wilfully committed perjury, when he made that statement before the trial Court. I thought it right to have the defendant before me and in this Court he has reiterated his denial of ownership. The defendant impressed me as telling the truth. He stated definitely that he had never possessed this or any other motor car at all. But apart from that aspect of the matter, the learned Judge clearly misdirected himself by acting upon the assumption that because he had found the defendant to be the owner of the motor car, that of itself was sufficient to fix him with liability for the accident which happened some 18 months before. Generally speaking in running down cases or as they are now sometimes called collision on land cases the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed unless he gives affirmative proof of negligence on the part of the defendant or his servant. Persons who base a claim on negligence must prove negligence and in the present case, as I have already indicated, the plaintiff gave no evidence whatever of negligence on the part of the defendant or his servant.

It is true that this is one of the class of cases where the ordinary rule does not apply in its entirety. The law provides that when a vehicle is shown to be under management of the defendant or his servant and an accident occurs such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if he who has management uses proper care, the onus exceptionally rests on the defendant to disprove that the accident arose from want of care. The authority for that proposition is the case of Isaac Walton & Co. v. Vanguard Motor Bus Co. (1): see also the case of Barnes Urban District Council v. London General Omnibus Co. (2). In the first-mentioned case a standard lamp erected on the footpath in front of the plaintiffs' premises was damaged by a motor-omnibus of the defendants colliding with it. The motor omnibus had in fact skidded into the lamp-post, and the Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) in his judgment at p. 14 said that there was evidence upon which the jury might come to the conclusion that there was negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle. It may be taken therefore where there is a lamp-post on the pavement and a vehicle collides with it, that of itself is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle. It is in fact a case where the principle of res ipsa loquitur applies and when there is prima facie negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle in that way the onus then shifts on the defendant to show either he was not the driver, or if the driver is the defendant's servant then that there was in fact no negligence on the part of the driver. Before however a case is taken out of the ordinary rule that the plaintiff must prove negligence in order to succeed it must first of all be positively demonstrated.

toed that the vehicle causing the damage was at the time of the accident, as a matter of fact, under the management of the defendant or his servant.

In the present case the plaintiffs made no attempt to show and indeed were not in a position to show who in fact was the driver of the vehicle and whether it was the defendant himself or a person for whose acts he would be responsible. There was in point of fact nothing whatever before the Court to indicate that even if the defendant was really the owner of the motor car No. 10670 at the time of the occurrence on 3rd April 1930, such motor car was under the management of the defendant or his servant at the material time. I am therefore of opinion that even upon the assumption that the car did belong to the defendant, the plaintiffs had not succeeded in establishing their case according to law. I think that on the whole it is extremely dubious whether the defendant Buijuath Shaw had any connexion whatever with the motor car No. 10670 and it is certain that even if he were the owner, the plaintiffs did not establish negligence against him either by affirmative evidence on their part or by shifting the onus of proof on the defendant and his failing to discharge that onus. This rule is accordingly made absolute and the order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Sealdah, is set aside and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

Judgment.—This appeal deals with a question of competition between two mortgages. Plaintiffs rely upon the first mortgage which was executed on 9th May 1908. There was a decree and in execution of that decree they purchased on 11th November 1916 and obtained possession through Court on 3rd June 1917. Defendants took the second mortgage in January or February 1911, obtained a decree thereon, and in execution of it purchased the property on 13th June 1922, and took possession on 18th July 1923. In neither of the two mortgage suits was the other mortgagee made a party. Plaintiffs allege that they were wrongfully dispossessed by the defendants on 18th July 1923 and so they sue to recover possession. The defence is that the plaintiffs' decree is a nullity as against the defendants who were no parties to it. Then arose the question as to which of the parties was entitled to possession and further, which was entitled to the first right to redeem. This latter question also was definitely raised. The trial Court found in favour of the plaintiffs and declared that they were entitled to get khas possession by redeeming within a certain date. On appeal the learned Judge of the Court below took the same view. Hence this second appeal by the defendants. Before the learned Judge the decision turned upon the question whether the plaintiff had the preferential right to redeem the subsequent mortgage in favour of the defendants. In discussing the point the learned Judge quotes relevant authorities and gives a summary of the law on the subject. The learned advocate in support of the second appeal has sought to distinguish the cases which are referred to in the judgment by saying that these cases did not decide that the right of the subsequent mortgagee who was not a party to the prior mortgage-decree was lost.

In the case of Nanack Chand v. Taluckdye Koor (1) the second mortgagee purchased first. In the case of Ram Narayan v. Bandi Pershad (2) the first mortgagee purchased first. What these cases decide was that, quite apart from the question of the right to redeem the right to possess the property was with the prior purchaser and it did not make any difference whether he was the first for the subsequent mortgagee. It was also decided by the Full Bench in the case of Debendra Narayan v. Ramtaran Banerjee (3), that a puisne mortgagee is entitled to a sale of the property, subject to the rights of the first mortgagee, even after the property has been sold in execution of a decree obtained by the first mortgagee in a suit to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party. In the present case the plaintiffs were the first purchasers and therefore it has been correctly held that they are entitled to possess. But the parties have gone further and raised the question as to which of them has the preferential right to redeem. This depends on who had acquired the equity of redemption from the mortgagor. There is no doubt that as between the two purchasers the title to the outstanding equity of redemption is determined by priority, not of respective mortgages but of respective sales, and the person who first buys the equity of redemption, whether he be the mortgagee himself or a stranger would be entitled to redeem all the subsisting mortgages on the property and thus acquire an absolute title: see Ghose on Mortgage, Edn. 4, p. 623. This is supported by the decision in the case of Parar Ram Singh v. Pandohi (4) which was followed in the case of Ram Baran v. Bhagwati Pande (5). With regard to the position of a second mortgagee the latest Calcutta decision that I know of is in the case Kalipada Mukherji v. Basanta Kumar (6): see the remarks of Mukherji, J., at p. 882 (of 35 C W N). Since the question was raised, and in view of the equities of the case, I consider that the judgment of the lower appellate Court is right, that the plaintiffs have the preferential right to redeem. The second appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—These two appeals have arisen out of two suits for recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the plaintiffs' ten annas share in two howlas for the years 1330 to 1333 B.S. The suits have been decreed for the amount claimed. In these appeals it is urged that as there has been diluvion of portions of the holdings, the defendants are entitled to abatement of rent. It is urged that the case of Rishee Case Law v. Golam Ali (1) which was followed by the learned Subordinate Judge was not binding upon the appellants, inasmuch as it can be distinguished from the present suit. The point that arises in these appeals is whether inasmuch as it has been found that all the tenants were not impleaded, a plea of abatement can be put forward by the tenants who are on the record. The case referred to was one under the Bengal Tenancy Act, whereas the present cases being cases brought by some of the landlords, against tenants co-sharers only, they are not under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and therefore S. 52 of the Act has no application. But it was held in that case that even if the general law applies, the co-sharer tenants are not entitled to any abatement, as the principles laid down in the case of Bhupendra Narain Dutt v. Ramon Krishna Dutt (2) are still applicable. The case of Kesho Prasad Singh v. Ram Deni Singh (3) was also referred to. The principle on which these decisions are based is that where two or more persons have a joint right to land, they cannot assert it except jointly. Both these cases referred to S. 188, Ben. Ten. Act, and it was argued here that S. 188 was enacted in order to protect the tenants and the considerations of that kind do not apply to a case like the present where tenants are seeking remission on account of abatement.

But there can be no doubt that the principle is still applicable. It is certainly advisable that where a joint right is claimed by joint tenants, they should all be made parties to the suit, otherwise there is likely to be an additional litigation and confusion in respect of the rights of the tenants, so that although the decisions in the cases which have been relied upon are not binding inasmuch as they were cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, I think the Court below is right in deciding that the claim of abatement cannot be established in the absence of all the tenants as parties. The new S. 38 (C), Ben. Ten. Act, has been referred to. But that relates to rai-yati holdings and moreover it refers to a suit which has been properly framed which may very well mean that all the co-tenants should be made parties. In the case of Khettermani Dasi v. Jiban Krishna Kundoo (4) that has been referred to in support of this appeal it was held that S. 188, Ben. Ten. Act, cannot be applied by analogy to a co-sharer tenant who brings a suit authorized by the Act. But this decision appears to have been arrived at without reference to the principle referred to above and has not been followed in a later decision in Rishee Case Law's case (1) already referred to. These appeals are dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

Appeals Nos. 357, 358 and 359 of 1930, Decided on 14th April 1932, against original orders of Small Cause Court Judge, Sealdah, D/- 2nd April 1930.

Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 159 (2)
—Consolidated rate to be paid by owner of bustee land.

The owner of bustee lands was assessed under the Act. He contended that he was not the owner of bustee but the real owners of bustee were certain tenants to whom he sublet the premises in question, and they paid small rents to him and he had to pay more to Corporation by way of assessment than he got from his tenants as rents.

Held: that there was no case of hardship or prejudice in view of the provisions of S. 159 (2). The Act does not really recognize the existence of a middle man between the owner of the lands in which the bustee is situated and the owners of huts in the bustee. [P 184 C 1]

Khitish Chandra Chuckerbutty, Panchanon Ghosal and Benoy Krishna Ghosh—for Appellant.

Judgment.—These three appeals have been preferred by one Akhoy Kumar Sur, who is said to be the owner of three bustee lands situate in Nos. 11, 12 and 43 Old Ballygunge 1st Lane, against the order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Sealdah, by which he dismissed the appellant's objection regarding the assessment of the bustee lands. The appeals are preferred to this Court under the provisions of S. 142, Cl. (3), Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923). The contention which has been put forward in appeal before us is that the appellant is not the owner of the bustee, but that the real owners of the bustee are certain tenants to whom he has sublet the premises in question. As they pay very small rents to him the result of the assessment in these cases has been that he (the appellant) has to pay more to the Corporation by way of assessment than he gets from his tenants. It seems however that in no stage of the proceedings before this the appellant in these three appeals ever discriminated between the position of the owner of a bustee and the owner of the land in which the bustee is situate. On the other hand he admitted in his deposition on commission that he was the malik of the bustee lands of Nos. 11, 12 and 43, Old Ballygunge 1st Lane. He nowhere said that some other person is the owner of the bustee as distinguished from the owner of the bustee lands. There is really no case of hardship or prejudice if we look to the provisions of S. 159, Cl. (2), Calcutta Municipal Act, which distinctly provided that "whenever the consolidated rate is leviable upon a bustee the owner of the land contained within such bustee may recover from the owner of each hut standing thereon one half of the consolidated rate payable in respect of the land on which the hut stands, and (ii) the entire consolidated rate payable in respect of the hut."

The Calcutta Municipal Act does not really recognize the existence of a middle man between the owner of the lands in which the bustee is situate and the owners of huts in the bustee. In these circumstances it seems to us that there is no real substance in the objection which has been taken in these three appeals. The result accordingly is that the appeals fail and must be dismissed. Having regard however to all the circumstances there will be no order as to costs..

Khondkar and Monindra Nath Mukerji—for the Crown.

Mallik, J.—This Rule arises out of an application for the transfer of a case or in the alternative for an order on the Magistrate directing production of two police diaries. It appears that the petitioners who were prosecuted under Ss. 307, 326 and 120-B, I. P. C., applied to the Magistrate under S. 208, Criminal P. C., for calling for two police diaries. This was on 18th December 1931 and the learned Magistrate on the petitioner's application passed an order: "Call for the record." When on 7th January 1932, the next day for the hearing of the case the diaries were found not to have arrived, the petitioners again put in a petition before the Magistrate by which they renewed their prayer adding that the two Sub-Inspectors (one of whom was mentioned by name in the petition) who had been in charge of the thanas might be summoned as witnesses to produce the diaries. The learned Magistrate rejected this prayer on the ground that the petitioners had not prayed before for issue of summons on the Sub-Inspector who was named in that petition.

The order of the learned Magistrate whereby he refused the petitioner's prayer for having the two diaries called for and produced in Court cannot in our opinion be supported. The petition was evidently made under S. 208, Criminal P. C. and the learned Magistrate was under that section bound to take steps for the production of the documents wanted by the accused unless he deemed it unnecessary to do so. Here as it would appear from what I have said above the learned Magistrate never considered that it was unnecessary to call for those records. As a matter of fact he on 18th December actually passed an order calling for the records in question. The learned Magistrate in his explanation says that the petitioners in their petition had not given sufficient information to trace the two diaries in question. But it nowhere ap-appears in the record that it was on that ground that the learned Magistrate rejected the prayer of the petitioners. The informations that are to be found in the petition filed by the petitioners before the Magistrate are sufficient for the tracing of the two documents if a little care be taken to trace them. The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the learned Magistrate is directed to have produced before him the two documents if they are in existence, as alleged by the petitioners.

Penal Code (1860), S. 499 Pleader asking question under instructions in cross-examination cannot be convicted under S. 500 especially when no malice is admitted to have existed.

The presumption in the case of pleaders asking questions in cross-examination is that such questions are put in good faith for the protection of his client's interests within the exception to S. 499. Where therefore a pleader asks a question in cross-examination in his client's interest under instructions, he cannot be convicted under S. 500 especially when the complainant admits that the pleader has no malice or grudge against him. [P 185 C 2]

S. K. Sen and Apurba Charan Mukherjee—for Petitioner.

Dinesh Chandra Roy—for Opposite Party.

Pearson, J.—The petitioner is a pleader who was charged with defamation under S. 500, I. P. C. The Magistrate found that no case had been made out and dismissed the case under S. 203, Criminal P. C. The Sessions Judge however has set aside that order and has directed a further inquiry. This Rule was obtained on the ground that there being admittedly no malice or grudge or want of good faith, etc., the order for further inquiry was wholly illegal. The petitioner was a pleader for the defendant in a certain Title Suit No. 59 of 1930 in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Howrah and it appears that during the cross-examination of one of the witnesses named Kshiroda Moyee Dasi, the present accused, asked the following question: "Is there any rumour of scandal in the name of Hari's wife." It is conceded for the purposes of the present case that that was an imputation of unchastity against the woman in question. It appears further that that particular question was asked in the course of a commission the actual date of which is in some doubt, but it was either 7th December 1930 or more probably 21st December 1930.

It appears that on 22nd December the petitioner was called upon in a letter from the pleader on the other side to disclose the source of his instructions regarding the asking of that question. His reply was a refusal to do so because the instructions were in the nature of privileged communications. In answer to that the pleader on the other side wrote a letter saying that in consequence of this refusal there remained no other alternative for him except to take such legal steps as his client might be advised. Nothing however was done and no complaint was made at that time at all. Subsequently on 7th April 1931 there was a further commission during which the evidence was taken of defendant 1 in course of her cross-examination it was elicited that the instructions for this particular question in the previous December had been given by herself or by her tadbirkar. Even then nothing was done by way of complaint until 21st May 1931 when the present complaint was made before the Magistrate, directed not against the client but against the pleader. It has been conceded by Mr. Roy that if as a matter of fact the pleader was acting under instructions in putting the question he would be protected from a charge under S. 500. It is quite clear from all the cases both in this and other Courts that the presumption in the case of pleaders asking questions in cross-examination is that such questions are put in good faith for the protection of his client's interests within the exception to S. 499; and further than that there is a definite finding of the Magistrate in so far as he says that he supports the report of the President of the Bar Association, that the complainant admitted that the accused had no malice or grudge against him or his family. The presumption is not rebutted or impugned by the letters that had passed at the end of December.

The letters do not say that he did not put the question under instructions but merely say that he was not prepared to divulge the source of his instructions; and what happened in the following April after the cross-examination of defendant 1 only lends further strength to the fact that that question was asked on instructions. It is difficult, in these circumstances, to understand why the pleader should be brought to Court at all on this charge once the source of the instructions had been divulged, and yet it was not before five weeks had passed or later that the complaint was made. It appears to me that there is no real foundation for the order of the learned Judge and that the fact is that there was no malice or grudge or want of good faith shown in this case at all. The presumption that the question was put upon proper instructions far from being rebutted has been corroborated. If there was any want of good faith arising in this case it is rather to be attributed to the other side implicating the pleader in such circumstances as these. The client was the source of his instructions as regards the objectionable question. It need only further be said that it does in my opinion appear that the question is one which was not irrelevant to the issues in the case and cannot be held to be objectionable on that ground. The question was one of adoption and the answer to the question, if in the affirmative, would have gone to support the probabilities of the case which was being made by defendant 1. In my opinion this Rule must be made absolute. The order of the Sessions Judge is set aside and that of the Magistrate restored. The accused will be discharged from his bail bonds.

Ordinance (2 of 1932), Ss. 28 and 47—Conviction under, is not illegal for want of finding whether act is done in furtherance of movement prejudicial to public safety.

Section 28 does not require any finding that the conviction was for an act prejudicial to the public safety or peace; but it does require that the offence is one which in the opinion of the Court has been committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. A Magistrate can convict an accused person of an offence committed under the ordinance without actually recording a finding whether the act was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to public safety or peace, and such conviction is not illegal for want of such a finding in view of S. 47. Judgment.—This Rule has been issued upon the District Magistrate of Rajshahi to show cause why an order directing the petitioner to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under S. 28, Ordinance 2 of 1932, should not be set aside on the ground that there being no finding that the conviction of Paresh under S. 4, Ordinance 5 of 1932, was for an act prejudicial to the public safety or peace, S. 28, Ordinance 2 of 1932, has no application and that the learned Magistrate erred in law in holding otherwise. In the first place it may be pointed out that the section itself does not require any finding that the conviction was for an act prejudicial to the public safety or peace; but it does require that the offence is one which in the opinion of the Court has been committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. The question is whether on the ground that there is no finding that the offence was in the opinion of the Court committed in furtherance of a movement which is prejudicial to the public safety or peace, the Magistrate erred in law in imposing a fine upon the guardian of the accused.

A preliminary point was raised as to whether inasmuch as under S. 51, Ordinance 2 of 1930, there is a provision that no Court shall have authority to revise any order or sentence passed under this Ordinance this Court has any jurisdiction to interfere with that order or sentence. It has been argued that under S. 107, Government of India Act, read with S. 65 this provision of the Ordinance is ultra vires; but in view of the opinion we are inclined to take on the merits, it is not necessary to come to any decision on the point. On the merits we find that under S. 47 of the Ordinance no Court constituted under this Ordinance shall try any offence unless it is an offence punishable under this Ordinance or has been committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. The very fact that the Court passed this order shows that the Court was of opinion that the act constituting the offence was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace as otherwise the Court would have had no jurisdiction.

Under Cl. (2), S. 47, we find that the question whether or not the offence tried by the Court constituted under the Ordinance was of the nature described in sub-S. (1), that is to say, was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace shall not be raised in any Court other than the Court trying the offence. The present case is a case of peaceful picketing and was tried by a Special Magistrate empowered under the Notification in the Calcutta Gazette dated 7th January 1932. This Notification empowers such Magistrates to try offences under the Prevention of Molestation and Boycotting Ordinance which are committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. This again shows that unless the act complained of was one committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace, the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction; and inasmuch as this point was not raised either in the Court in which the boy was convicted or in the Court in which the father was fined under S. 28 of the Ordinance, this is a point which we should not allow the petitioner to raise in this Court.

It is true that there was no express finding of the Magistrate that the act was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace; but the very fact that he tried the matter and imposed the fine on the petitioner shows that he must have been of the opinion that it was such an act otherwise he had no jurisdiction to try the case. The accused's plea of guilty in that Court to the offence charged, involves an admission that the act was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. In the petition also some of the statements made seem to show that the act was such an act. We find in para. (6) of the petition that the petitioner tried his level best to keep his son Paresh out of the influence of the present political movement and that the son was led away without his knowledge to picket at a ganja shop in spite of his advice to his children not to join the political movement. We were asked to take judicial notice of the fact that what is described in the petition as "the present political movement" was in fact a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace and we think that we are entitled to do so. The result therefore is that the Rule is discharged.

Criminal Appeal No. 779 of 1931, Decided on 16th March 1932.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 24—Confession of accused caused by inducement, threat or promise—Judge has to decide admissibility of such confession—If he considers it admissible, he must point out to jury that admissibility of evidence does not mean that it is true and that it is for jury to accept or reject it—Criminal P. C., S. 297.

It is for the Judge to decide for himself whether prima facie the confession of the accused appears to him to have been induced by threat or promise and for that reason to be inadmissible. If he comes to the conclusion that it is inadmissible, he must exclude it from the consideration of the jury. It is not the province of jury to decide the question of admissibility of evidence. On the other hand, if the Judge considers the confession admissible, it is his duty to point out to the jury that the fact that he considers the evidence as admissible does not necessarily mean that it is true and it is for jury to make up their minds whether they should accept the confession, and in doing so they should naturally be guided to a large extent by their opinion on the question whether the confession was voluntary or not. [P 188 C 2]

(b) Criminal P.C. (1898), S. 342—Statement of accused under S. 342—Judge omitting to put such statement specifically to jury, but fully explaining to them defence of accused and his reasons why jury should disregard his retracted confession—Judge's omission held not harmful—Criminal P. C., S. 297.

The statement of accused under S. 342 amounted only to an assertion of innocence and an explanation of how he had made the retracted confession. The Judge omitted to put this statement to the jury, but the language used by the Judge was such that the jury must have throughout appreciated perfectly well what the accused's defence was and the reasons for which he maintained that the jury should disregard the confession made by him.

Held: that no harm was done by the Judge's omission to deal specifically with the statement of the accused. [P 188 C 2; P 199 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Irregularity in search does not affect admissibility of property found.

Irregular conducting of search would affect the weight to be attached by jury to the finding of property but would not make such property inadmissible in evidence. [P 189 C 1]

Dhirendra Nath Ghose—for Appellant.

Khundkar and Monindra Nath Mukherji—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—The appellant in this case has been convicted of the offence of dacoity and having had a previous conviction he has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of seven years. He was tried together with a co-accused. The jury found the appellant guilty by a majority of 3 to 2 and unanimously found the other accused not guilty.

Various points have been taken on behalf of the appellant. It is first of all stated that the learned Judge was in error in failing to draw the attention of the jury to certain portions of the evidence which tended to show that the number of persons present at the occurrence was less than what the Penal Code requires to constitute an offence of dacoity. After perusing the evidence we have come to the conclusion that there is no justification for this argument. Nearly all the witnesses placed the number of the dacoits at some figure between 8 and 12. It is true that a female witness stated that she could not tell by guess how many were there. But even if she had spoken the truth it was hardly possible that there were less than five. We do not think that this point was improperly dealt with by the learned Judge.

Then it is said that the learned Judge failed to draw the attention of the jury to the weakness of the prosecution case as regards identification. The appellant was identified by two witnesses who professed to have recognized him at the dacoity. The Deputy Magistrate who superintended the test identification was called as a witness and he described the procedure which was followed at the identification parade. We consider that the learned Judge summarized the evidence as to the identification parade in a satisfactory manner and left to the jury to say whether they felt justified in giving any weight to this sort of evidence as to identification. Another part of the prosecution case consisted of a confession made by the appellant to the Deputy Magistrate and subsequently retracted. It was the case of the appellant that this confession was untrue and was induced by threat and persuasion on the part of the police. The learned Judge in discussing the confession drew the attention of the jury to the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act, and observed that the appellant's confession would be irrelevant:

"If you believe that it was caused by inducement, threat or promise by the police as stated by Baldeo Bin, it is for you to consider whether or not the confession was caused by such inducement, threat or promise."

Strictly speaking, the learned Judge did not state the law accurately on the point. It was for the learned Judge to decide for himself whether prima facie the confession appeared to him to have been induced by threat or promise and for that reason to be inadmissible. If he comes to the conclusion that it is inadmissible he must exclude it from the consideration of the jury. The learned Judge appears to have thought that it was the province of the jury to decide this question of admissibility of evidence. In that he was wrong. But even if he had stated the law accurately on this point it would have still been his duty to point out to the jury that the fact that he considered the evidence as admissible did not necessarily mean that it was true and it was for the jury to make up their mind whether they should accept the confession and in doing so they should naturally be guided to a large extent by their opinion on the question whether the confession was voluntary or the reverse. In the circumstances of the particular case there were no materials on which the learned Judge would have been justified in excluding the confession and so we do not think that even if he misdirected the jury with regard to the confession it has occasioned a failure of justice.

A complaint is made that the statement of the accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C., was not put to the jury. When we examine this statement under S. 342, we find that it only amounts to an assertion of innocence and an explanation of how the appellant had made the retracted confession. Having regard to the language used by the learned Judge the jury must have throughout appreciated perfectly well what the appellant's defence was and the reasons for which he maintained that the jury should disregard the confession made by him. We do not think that any harm has been done by the omission of the learned Judge to deal specifically with the statement of the accused in the Sessions Court.

Finally, it is said that the search in which it is alleged that certain booty of the dacoity was discovered was irregularly conducted. The learned Judge called the attention of the jury to the suspicious circumstances connected with the search. But even if it was irregularly conducted that would merely go to the weight which the jury would attach to the finding of the property in question and would not make such property inadmissible in evidence. We think that the jury were adequately warned with regard to this. The learned Judge seems to have had misgivings as to the guilt of the appellant. But he did not think it justified to refer the case under S. 307, Criminal P. C. Although the charge of the learned Judge is not very satisfactory we do not think that there is such a serious error in it as would justify our disturbing the appellant's conviction. Having regard to the previous record of the appellant the sentence imposed upon him by the learned Judge is not too severe. The appeal is dismissed.

 Evidence Act (1872), S. 135—Right of defence to cross-examine prosecution witnesses in the order it wishes—Discretion of Court—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 256.

Where the defence wants to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in a particular order by being allowed to postpone the cross-examination of the complainant on the ground that the cross-examination of the complainant before some other witnesses will embarrass and prejudice the defence case, the mere fact that the complainant, a sickly man, is present in Court and may not come on some other day due to his bad health, is not sufficient to justify the Court in refusing to accede to the request of the defence; but the Court should exercise the discretion in favour of the defence. [P 190 C 2]

A. K. Basu and Satindra Nath Mukherjee—for Petitioner.

Nirman Chandra Chakrabarty—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J. — In this case we granted a Rule upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why an order of the Additional Presidency Magistrate refusing the prayer of the accused to be permitted through his counsel to cross-examine certain prosecution witnesses then present in Court before cross-examination of the complainant should not be set aside.

The petitioner is charged with an offence punishable under S. 406, I. P. C. The stage which had been reached when the incidents which are the subject-matter of this application occurred was that the prosecution witnesses had been examined in chief and charges had been framed. It appears that the learned Magistrate on 27th September directed the petitioner's pleader to give to the prosecution pleader the names of the prosecution witnesses who had already been examined in chief and whose attendance he required for cross-examination on 31st October. The petitioner's pleader gave the names of 11 out of 14 prosecution witnesses, but the complainant was one of the three witnesses whose name was given. On 31st October some of the witnesses whose names had been given by the defence pleader were present in Court as was also the complainant. The Magistrate on that occasion, for reasons which he has given, was not disposed to permit the witnesses to be cross-examined in the order in which the accused desired. On the contrary, he insisted on the cross-examination of the complainant being taken first. The learned counsel appearing for the petitioner was willing to cross-examine the complainant on that date, provided he was allowed to cross-examine the other witnesses then present before cross-examining the complainant. This proposed arrangement however was not allowed by the Magistrate. The learned counsel stated that he had good reasons for wishing to postpone the cross-examination of the complainant until the other witnesses had been cross-examined but that if he informed the Court what those reasons were he would prejudice his client's case. Learned counsel appearing for the petitioner maintains that the defence has an absolute right to insist that the prosecution witnesses in a warrant case should be cross-examined in the order which the defence counsel desires. The learned advocate who appears for the Crown has directed our attention to S. 135, Evidence Act, which states:

"The order in which witnesses are produced and examined shall be regulated by the law and practice for the time being relating to civil and criminal procedure respectively, and in the absence of any such law by the discretion of the Court."

He has further pointed out that S. 256, Criminal P. C., which deals with the procedure to be followed by the defence in a warrant case contains no provisions as to the order in which the prosecution witnesses are to be cross-examined and does not confer any such right upon the defence as is claimed by Mr. Basu. Mr. Basu states that he is able to say from his own experience and from information given him by counsel of extensive experience in the Presidency Magistrates' Courts that it is the practice of the Court always to permit the defence to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in the order it wishes. We do not feel called upon to decide whether in fact there is a practice having the force of law by which the discretion of the Court which is prima facie conferred by S. 135, is controlled in the Presidency Magistrates' Courts or in the Courts of Magistrates generally. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case if we deal with the application on its merits.

We have read the explanations submitted to this Court by both the trying and the Chief Presidency Magistrates. It is to be noted that on 27th October it clearly did not appear to the learned trying Magistrate that there was anything in the circumstances of the case which rendered it undesirable for defence to cross-examine certain prosecution witnesses before the cross-examination of the complainant. We therefore are not disposed to attach much importance to the statement of the trying Magistrate in his explanation to the Chief Presidency Magistrate that the cross-examination of the complainant before the others was necessary for a clear and definite understanding of the defence case. What apparently weighed with the learned Magistrate was the fact that on 19th August it was found necessary to adjourn the case until the 16th September owing to the fact that the complainant was suffering from angina pectoris. It appears that the Magistrate not unnaturally thought on 31st October that as the complainant was present it was desirable to take the opportunity of having him cross-examined at once thereby avoiding the risk of the proceedings being again held up owing to the complainant's state of health. In our opinion, this reason was not sufficient to justify the Magistrate in refusing to accede to the request of the defence counsel who asserted that the defence would be embarrassed unless the cross-examination of the other witnesses preceded that of the complainant. We have made inquiry of Mr. Basu who tells us that out of 11 witnesses there are eight whom he wishes to cross-examine before he cross-examines the complainant, and that after these eight witnesses have been cross-examined he will have no objection to cross-examining the complainant. He also assures us that the cross-examination of these eight witnesses will not take more than two and a half hours. On this assurance we think that if, as is not admitted by the petitioner, the Magistrate has a discretion in the matter, he should exercise it in the petitioner's favour.

We therefore set aside the order complained of, and direct that the defence be permitted to cross-examine the witnesses in the order that they desire subject to the undertaking by Mr. Basu that he will have no objection to cross-examine the complainant after 8 other prosecution witnesses have been cross-examined.

The Rule is made absolute.

Criminal Appeal No. 685 of 1931, Decided on 1st February 1932.

(a) Criminal Trial — Objection to admissibility of evidence cannot be taken in appeal.

Courts do not entertain objections on the ground of admissibility of evidence which are taken for the first time in appeal. A person was prosecuted under S. 193, Penal Code. He did not challenge the fact that he did say in the civil Court that he had paid the money to the plaintiff and reiterated that statement in criminal Court. No objection was taken to the admissibility of his deposition on the ground that it was not one taken according to law as O. 18, R. 5, Civil P. C., had been disregarded, inasmuch as the statement had not been read out to the accused :

Held : that the objection could not prevail in appeal. [P 192 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 80 — Depositions can be proved only under S. 80 and only when taken according to law.

Depositions are matters required by law to be reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of S. 91, Evidence Act, and the only way they can be proved is under the provisions of S. 80 of the same Act, and this is only when they are taken in accordance with law.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297 — Judge can express his opinion if he warns jury that it is not binding on them.

A Judge has a perfect right to express his opinion to the jury provided he makes it clear that his opinion on the facts is not binding on them. Where therefore a Judge in charging the jury expresses his opinion but warns them that they were not bound to accept his opinion if it did not sit in with their own valid objection can be taken to the charge and there is no misdirection in his doing so. [P 192 C 1]

Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Mahendra Kumar Ghose—for Appellant.

Khundkar and Nirmal Chandra Chakrabarti—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J. — In this case the appellant has been convicted of offences punishable under Ss. 193 and 471, I. P. C. In respect of the offence under S. 193 he has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of 18 months. No separate sentence has been passed under S. 471.

It appears that the appellant was a defendant in a money suit before the third Additional Subordinate Judge of Noakhali. His defence was an allegation that the money in respect of which the suit was brought had been paid. He filed a written statement to that effect and he also filed in Court a certain document purporting to be a receipt granted by the plaintiff for the sum which, he alleged, had been paid by him. In due course the suit came on for hearing and the appellant gave oral evidence in which he reiterated that the money had been paid to the plaintiff in the plaintiff's shop. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the defendant's story and decreed the suit. Thereafter a complaint was made under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and these proceedings were started. The accused was charged with user of a forged document, the user being the filing by him of the receipt in the circumstances we have mentioned and also with giving false evidence, the false evidence being a statement made orally by him in Court that he had paid the sum mentioned in the receipt to the plaintiff. In the Sessions Court the defence of the accused was that the document was a genuine document and that the evidence he gave as to the payment of the money was true. The jury unanimously found him guilty on both the charges. Various points have been raised before us.

It is first of all stated that there should have been an inquiry by the learned Subordinate Judge before the complaint was made and also that the complaint does not state that in the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be held. I do not think that there is any substance in these contentions, and in any event we should be reluctant on grounds such as these to set aside the conviction seeing that the appellant had a remedy open to him under S. 476-B by way of an appeal of which he did not choose to avail himself. A more important point has been raised with regard to the admission of certain evidence. It is stated that the appellant's deposition is inadmissible. The learned advocate for the appellant has drawn our attention to O. 18, R. 5, Civil P. C., which provides that a witness' evidence shall be taken down in writing in narrative form and when completed shall be read over in the presence of the Judge and the witness. It appears from the record that the appellant gave his evidence in chief and in cross-examination on three days and that at the conclusion of each day it was read over to him. At a subsequent stage, on another day he was recalled and some questions were put to him. It does not appear whether on the fourth day the evidence he then gave was read over to him; undoubtedly that part of his evidence in respect of which he was prosecuted was read over but it does not appear that the evidence was read over to him when completed as required by O. 18, R. 5.

There is authority for saying that depositions are matters required by law to be reduced to the form of a document within the meaning of S. 91, Evidence Act, and the only way they can be proved is under the provisions of S. 80 of the same Act, and this is only when they are taken in accordance with law. It is suggested that the result of the disregard in this case of the provisions of R. 5, Q. 18 is that the deposition in question has not been taken down according to law and therefore is not admissible in evidence. As I pointed out, there are no merits at all in these points because the appellant has never challenged the fact that he did say in the civil Court that he had paid the money to the plaintiff. On the contrary, in the criminal proceedings he has reiterated this statement and he claims to be acquitted not because he did not make the statement alleged but because it was a true statement. We think that it is sufficient to dispose of this point if we only say that in this case, at any rate, we see no reason to make any exception to the salutary rule whereby the Courts do not entertain objections on the ground of admissibility of evidence which are taken for the first time in appeal. There was no objection to the evidence when it was tendered in the Court below and we do not think that even if the objection is sound as to which we express no opinion the appellant should be allowed to take it at this stage.

The only other points that have been raised are certain criticisms on the language of the learned Judge in charging the jury. He certainly has expressed his opinion on more than one occasion, but that he has a perfect right to do if he makes it clear to the jury that the opinion he expresses on the facts is not binding on them; and in fact at the end of his charge to the jury we find him warning the jury in this words:

"I shall once again warn you that you are not bound to accept my opinion if it does not fit in with yours."

In our opinion it was perfectly clear to the jury that the responsibility for the decision was theirs and that they had to make up their minds themselves and not to rely on any opinion as to facts expressed by the Judge. We do not think that the sentence is at all too severe. In the circumstances the appeal is dismissed.

The appellant must surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of the sentence.

S. K. Basu, Debabrata Mukherji and Parimal Mukherji—for Petitioner.

B. M. Sen—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—This is a Rule obtained by the petitioner calling upon the District Magistrate of Burdwan to show cause why an order made by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan who allowed an appeal against an order of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Burdwan and directed under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., a complaint to be lodged to the effect that the petitioner had committed offences punishable under certain of those sections of the Indian Penal Code to which S. 195, sub-S. (1), para. (c), Criminal P. C., applies should not be set aside. It appears that an application was made to the Assistant Sessions Judge of Burdwan who was the successor of the Assistant Sessions Judge who tried the case in connexion with which the offences are said to have been committed to make a complaint under S. 476. This the learned Assistant Sessions Judge refused to do. An appeal was made to the Sessions Judge under S. 476-B with the result that the order refusing to make a complaint was set aside and the learned Sessions Judge expressed his intention of lodging a formal complaint before the Subdivisional Officer. We are not concerned with the merits of the Sessions Judge's decision because the Rule has been granted on two grounds alone which raise a question of jurisdiction.

It is said on behalf of the petitioner that in the circumstances of the case no appeal under S. 476-B lies to the Sessions Judge and that if the applicant before the Assistant Sessions Judge desired to question the propriety of the Assistant Sessions Judge's refusal to lodge a complaint his remedy was by way of an appeal to the High Court. To decide this question it is necessary to examine the relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. S. 476-B provides that in a case where the Court has refused to make a complaint under S. 476 the person whose application has been rejected may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of S. 195, sub-S. (3). S. 195, sub-S. (3) enacts that a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the decisions of such former Court. In the case of Assistant Sessions Judges S. 108, Criminal P. C., provides that an appeal shall lie to the Court of Sessions subject to the proviso that when an Assistant Sessions Judge passes a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years or any sentence of transportation an appeal shall lie to the High Court. I do not think it necessary to discuss what meaning is to be attached to the word "ordinarily" in S. 195 or to come to any decision whether appeals from Assistant Sessions Judges ordinarily lie to the Court of Session rather than to the High Court or to the High Court rather than to the Court of Session. It is clear that appeals do lie from convictions by Assistant Sessions Judges some of which are to be dealt with by Courts of Session and some by the High Court. When we turn to the proviso of S. 195, sub-S. (3) we find that when appeals lie to more than one Court the appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which the trial Court shall be deemed to be subordinate.

It is clear that these words cover the case, to which the learned advocate for the petitioner has referred, of the Court of Subordinate Judge from whom an appeal lies either to the Court of the District Judge or to the High Court according to the value of the subject-matter of the suit. The question is whether the proviso gives us any indication to what Court an appeal lies from an order made by an Assistant Sessions Judge under S. 476. Mr. Basu contends that sub-S. (3) cannot apply to Assistant Sessions Judges and Courts of Session for he says that the subordinate Court must be a different Court from the one to which it is subordinate and the proviso contemplates a Court which is subordinate to two different Courts in the sense that appeals lie from it to both those Courts and lays down that in such a case the Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which the original Courts shall be held to be subordinate for the purpose of the section. He also points out that Assistant Sessions Judges, Additional Sessions Judges and Sessions Judges are all Judges of the same Court, namely, the Court of Session. That would appear to be the case both from the language of S. 6, Criminal P. C., which only contemplates besides High Courts, Courts of Session and various Magistrates' Courts and also from the language of S. 9 which contemplates the establishment by the Local Government of a Court of Session for every Sessions Division and the appointment of a Judge of such Court and also of Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges, all of whom are members of the same Court.

In addition to the Code there is also a case of The Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Ij-jatull Paikar (1). In that case it was held that when an offence under S. 193, I. P. C., had been committed in a proceeding before an Additional Sessions Judge and the Additional Sessions Judge had been transferred, the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to make a complaint under S. 476 because he was the Judge of the same Court, namely, the Court of Session, as the Additional Sessions Judge. I think that there is considerable force in Mr. Basu's argument, but if it is sound it must follow that no appeal can lie under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., against an order of a Judge of the High Court sitting singly on the original side to a Division Bench of the Court because if it is necessary for the Court from which an appeal is to lie under S. 476-B to be a Court different from the Court making the order under S. 476, that condition will not be satisfied because the High Court exercising its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is the same Court as the High Court exercising its appellate jurisdiction. This very point has been considered and decided in the case of Ranjanali v. Moolji Sheikh & Co. (2) where Rankin, C. J., and Buckland, J., held that not only did an appeal lie from a single Judge of the High Court exercising original civil jurisdiction to a Division Bench where a single Judge has made a complaint under S. 476 but also that such an appeal lay by virtue of the provisions of S. 476-B. In taking this view the learned Judges relied upon two decisions: one a Full Bench decision of the Madras Court High Court and the other a decision of the Bombay High Court.

It appears to me that the same considerations apply in the present case. Although, as I have said, Mr. Basu's argument is attractive and the language of the Code is not altogether happily chosen we are of opinion that an appeal from the sentence of an Assistant Sessions Judge does ordinarily lie to a Court of Session even though an Assistant Sessions Judge is a member of that Court. If it cannot be said also ordinarily to lie to the High Court no question arises. But if it can be said "ordinarily to lie to the High Court" proviso (a), sub-S. (3), S. 195, applies and the appeal under S. 176-B must be held to lie to the Court of inferior jurisdiction, namely, Court of Session. These considerations dispose of the matter and since we are of opinion that the grounds on which the Rule was granted have not been shown to be sustainable the Rule must be discharged.

Mahomed Ali and others—Appellants,
v.

Criminal Admitted Appeal No. 573 of 1931, Decided on 14th January 1932.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 221—Charge under S. 366, Penal Code, must make clear to what exactly the charge relates—Charge held offended against principles of criminal pleadings.

It must be made plain to the accused charged under S. 366, I. P. C., whether he is charged with kidnapping or with abduction, and whether it was with intent to compel the victim to marry against her wish or with knowledge that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. Otherwise it may not be possible to know the exact view of the jury. Separate charges may be framed and the verdict of the jury may be taken on each charge. [P 195 C 1]

Charge under S. 365 ran as follows: "That you on or about 31st August 1930 at N kidnapped M B from the lawful guardianship of her father, M or abducted her with intent that she might be compelled to marry H against her will or knowing it to be likely that she would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse."

S. K. Basu and Parimal Mukherji—for Appellants.

Khondkar—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—This is an appeal by five persons who were charged of offences punishable under Ss. 366, 366-A and 368, I. P. C. They were convicted of the charge under S. 366, but acquitted on the charges under Ss. 366-A and 368. Another man was charged under Ss. 366-A and 368, but was acquitted on both those charges. In respect of offences punishable under S. 366 the present appellants have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

The case for the prosecution appears to have been that a certain young girl who was living in the same bari with her father was forcibly seized by a party of whom some of the accused persons are members and was taken to the house of accused 1. While she was there an attempt was made to force her into marriage with accused 3. She did not consent and she was thereafter taken from place to place and she was finally discovered in the house of a woman who is said to be a woman of the town. The charge under S. 366 is concerned with the original forcible seizure of the girl. The other charges were based upon incidents subsequent to that seizure. The accused have been acquitted of the charges under Ss. 366-A and 368 and I need not deal with them further. But I am by no means convinced that it was convenient or proper to try the accused on those charges at the same time as they were being tried on the charges under S. 366. I now turn to the actual charge under S. 366. It runs as follows:

"That you on or about 31st August 1930 at Nijkuranahi kidnapped Mastura Bibi from the lawful guardianship of her father Majidulla or abducted her with intent that she might be compelled to marry Husnutulla against her will or knowing it to be likely that she would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse."

This is the charge upon which the accused were tried and upon which they have been found guilty and in respect of which they have been sentenced. To my mind the charge in this form offends against all the principles of criminal pleading. It seems to me elementary that it should appear plain whether the accused persons are being charged with kidnapping or are being charged with abduction and similarly whether they have been charged with kidnapping or whether they have been charged with abduction it should appear clearly whether the intent alleged was an intent to compel the victim to marry against her will or whether the kidnapping or abduction was with the knowledge that it was likely that the girl would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. If one looks to this charge one will find that various combinations of possible circumstances which can be covered by it are numerous. It is perfectly true that the prosecution may be in some doubt in certain cases whether the offence disclosed is that of kidnapping or that of abduction. If this is so, nothing is easier than to frame two charges and take the verdict of the jury upon them both. What has happened in this case is a good example of the mischief that can arise if that rule is not observed. Evidence was called and presumably reliance was sought to be placed by the prosecution on that evidence as to the age of the girl. The jury have brought in a verdict of guilty under S. 366, but whether they have brought in that verdict because they considered the accused guilty of the offence of kidnapping or of the offence of abduction no one is able to say. As I have pointed out in the course of the argument it might well be that the importance of an alleged misdirection in the charge would depend entirely upon which view of the facts the jury had taken. I see that a view similar to my own was taken by this Court in the case of Mafizaddi v. Emperor (1) where Cuming and Graham, JJ., laid down that the ingredients of the two offences are different and that the accused is entitled to know which of the charges he is asked to meet. They add that the two offences are distinct offences and that separate charges should have been framed if it was desired to charge the accused with both the offences. I entirely agree with this view. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has drawn our attention to the case of Prafulla Kumar v. Emperor (2). In that case it was argued that it was illegal to frame one count or charge setting out both the offences in the alternative and the Court observed :

"We are not prepared to say that a charge of the latter character contravenes the requirements of the law, far less that there was the least prejudice caused to the appellant thereby."

That was doubtless because the learned Judge specifically ascertained whether the jury considered the accused guilty of kidnapping or guilty of abduction. Having ascertained that the jury were of opinion that he should be convicted of kidnapping, but acquitted of abduction the Court proceeded to deal with the accused on that basis. Therefore whatever the defect in the charge may have been steps were taken to cure it. There the difficulty under which we labour as to the nature of the offence of the accused did not arise. In the circumstances we are of opinion that this case must go back for a retrial and we direct that the accused be tried on a charge framed in accordance with the principles I have enunciated, that is to say, if it is desired to charge him with both kidnapping and abduction, those offences must be made a subject in separate charges. Similarly if it is desired to charge him with abduction either with intent that the girl might be compelled to marry against her will or forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, separate charges must be framed contemplating both sets of circumstances. But, in my opinion, having regard to the unsatisfactory state of the evidence as to the girl's age and having regard to the fact that the accused persons have already been acquitted of charges under Ss. 366-A and 368 the best course will be for the accused to be retried on the simple charge of abducting Mastura Bibi with intent that she might be compelled to marry Husnutulla against her will.

We therefore allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct retrial in the manner I have indicated. The recommendation that I have made with regard to limiting the number of charges to one is in no sense mandatory, but merely the result of a first impression of the evidence. If the Public Prosecutor or the Court thinks fit in the interest of justice to try the case on a specific charge of abduction knowing it to be likely that the girl would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse he will use his own discretion in the matter. Pending the retrial the appellants will be released on bail to the satisfaction of the Deputy Commissioner.

Plaintiff's mistress filed a suit against the defendant and it was decreed. Plaintiff acted as agent and conducted the suit. The defendant stood a great chance of being prosecuted for the defences raised. He appealed and the appeal was allowed by consent on the defendant executing a bond in plaintiff's favour for an amount larger than the sum decreed. The purpose being partly to stifle the institution of criminal proceedings, the compromise petition was drafted and filed in plaintiff's presence.

Held: that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief by way of enforcing registration of the bond.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this appeal arises purports to be one for registration of usufructuary mortgage bond, but certain other alternative reliefs were also prayed for, namely, that the defendant should be directed to execute and cause to be registered a bond identical with the bond in suit, or to refund the money said to have been advanced by the appellant together with interest. The main facts admitted and found in the course of these proceedings are as follows:

The plaintiff's mistress, Probashi Baishnabi sued the defendant for recovery of a certain sum of money said to have been advanced on a mortgage bond. In that suit the bond was said to have been lost. In fact it was alleged by Probashi that it had been stolen from her by the defendant's son. The defendant denied liability and produced the bond before the Court, bearing endorsements of payments, but in spite of these endorsements and in spite of the fact that the bond was produced from the defendant's custody, the trial Court decreed Probashi's suit, from which it may be inferred that the trial Court believed Probashi's allegation that the bond had been stolen from her possession and that the endorsements were forgeries. It was therefore clear that unless that decree was set aside, the defendant and her witnesses ran a very great risk of criminal proceedings being instituted against them. Against that decree the defendant preferred an appeal, but when the appeal came on for hearing, a compromise petition was filed in which it was prayed that the appeal be allowed and the suit dismissed on a declaration that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything on the basis of the bond in suit. It appears that throughout the proceedings referred to above, the plaintiff was present both in the trial Court and in the Court of appeal, that he looked after the suit on behalf of his mistress Probashi, and that the compromise petition was drafted and filed in his presence.

The decree in that suit was for Rupees 300, together with interest and costs, and the present proceedings relate to a sum of Rs. 425 which the defendant borrowed from the plaintiff for payment to Probashi as consideration for the compromise as a result of which the decree in the aforesaid suit was set aside. In the present proceedings both the Courts below have in effect held that this sum of Rs. 425 was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant and paid by the defendant to the plaintiff's mistress Probashi, partly in satisfaction of Probashi's decree and partly for the purpose of preventing the institution of the criminal proceedings to which the defendant and her witnesses had exposed themselves in connexion with the former suit. In the circumstances, and having regard to the fact that as the present plaintiff is Probashi's paramour and that he acted as her tadbirkar throughout the proceedings in the former suit and in connexion with the drafting and filing of the petition of compromise, it must, I think, be held that the object of the consideration for the bond in suit was an unlawful one, and that the plaintiff having been a party to a conspiracy for stifling a criminal proceeding is not entitled to any relief. The above finding is sufficient by itself for the disposal of this appeal, but certain other points have been urged on behalf of the appellant which may perhaps be briefly alluded to.

In the first place it is, I think, clear from certain recent decisions of this Court: [vide for example Dwijendra Narayan v. Jogesh Chandra (1)] that although there may have been some difference of opinion in the past, it is now well settled that no other claim can be coupled with the prayer to enforce registration of a document under S. 77, Registration Act. Then again it is the plaintiff's own case that the bond in suit had been tampered with, that the second page of the document as it now stands is not the same as the second page of the document as it stood at the time of the execution, (though the wording is said to be identical) and that some other thumb impression has been substituted for the thumb impression of the defendant. The trial Court was of opinion that the document had been tampered with while it was in the possession of the defendant's son, but the lower appellate Court, while differing from the trial Court on this point, has not recorded any clear finding as to whether the document was tampered with while it was in the defendant's custody or at some other time. It may further be said that the findings of the lower appellate Court do not altogether exclude the possibility of the document not having been tampered with at all, as is now alleged by the plaintiff, the allegation of its having been tampered with not having been made until after the expert who was examined before the District Sub-Registrar had expressed his opinion that the thumb impression on the second page was not the thumb impression of the defendant. Be that as it may, the document before the Court is, on the plaintiff's own showing, not the document which is said to have been executed by the defendant. The latter document has according to the plaintiff, ceased to exist in the form in which it was executed, and no suit can therefore be based upon the document now before the Court.

It may further be remarked that even apart from the consideration referred to above, it is very doubtful whether in the circumstances of the present case and in view of the fact that the bond has admittedly been tampered with, the plaintiff "could on a case properly alleged and proved recover back the actual money lent as money had and received to his use: vide the concluding portion of the judgment of Rankin, J., in the case of Dula Meah v. Abdul Rahman (2)."

In this connexion reference may also be made to the case of Goor Chandra Das v. Prasanna Kumar (3). Lastly it is clear that even if the bond in suit had not been tampered with, it ought not to have been received in evidence for the purpose of proving the existence of an agreement between the parties, or of proving that the said agreement was of the nature set forth therein, James Skinner v. R. H. Skinner (4). It is moreover extremely doubtful whether in the circumstances of the present case, and having regard to the provisions of Ss. 91 and 65, Evidence Act, it would have been proper to allow any secondary evidence regarding the nature of the alleged agreement to have been given in these proceedings. In any view of the matter therefore this appeal must be and accordingly is, allowed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed. In view of the dishonest nature of the defences raised by Appeal No 2531 of 1930, Decided on 15th March 1932, against appellate decree of Sub.Judge, Zillah, Pabna and Bogra, D/- 23rd June 1930.

Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (2) (ii)—Receipt for payment of mortgage debt requires registration if it purports to extinguish mortgage—Mortgagee in receipt given by him stating that he received Rs. 555, nothing more remained to be paid, and that mortgage bond would be returned when received back from pleader—Receipt not registered—Receipt was inadmissible either to prove extinction of mortgage liability or to prove admission that mortgage bond would be returned when received back from his pleader.

The receipt for payment of money under a mortgage does not require registration under S. 17 (2) (ii) if it does not purport to extinguish the mortgage. But it requires registration if it purports to extinguish it.

Mortgagee gave a receipt to the mortgagor in which he stated "I have received from you Rs. 555; nothing more remains due upon the bond. I cannot return the bond to you now as it is with my pleader. After getting back from my pleader I shall return it to you." The receipt was not registered.

Held: that the receipt purported to extinguish the mortgage and therefore required registration. As it was not registered it was inadmissible either as extinguishing liability or as showing admission of mortgagee that he would return bond after getting it back from pleader.

Abul Chandra Gupta and Nimal Kumar Sen—for Appellant.

P. K. Sanyal for Probodh Nath Sanyal—for Respondent.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises in a suit to enforce a mortgage bond which was executed in his favour by the defendant in Ashar 1332 B. S. by which the mortgagor hypothecated certain immovable properties and promised to pay interest at the rate of 30 per cent per annum. The defence of the defendant was that the mortgage had been paid off by the plaintiff agreeing to take Rs. 555 out of the money due under the mortgage and remitting

Rs. 111 due on the mortgage on a particular date, and in proof of that fact the defendant produced a receipt purporting to have been given by the plaintiff the material terms of which are as follows:

"Rupees 666 is due to me upon the mortgage bond of which I have received from you Rs. 555 after remission of the balance. Nothing more remains due upon the bond. I cannot return the bond to you now as it is with my pleader. After getting it back from my pleader I shall enter the endorsement of this payment upon the bond and return it to you."

A question was raised before the Court of first instance that this document was inadmissible for want of registration having regard to the provisions of S. 17, Cl. 2 (ii), Registration Act, as it purported to extinguish the liability in respect of immovable property. The suit was accordingly decreed on contest and the usual preliminary mortgage decree for sale was passed. Against this decision an appeal was taken to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bogra and the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the receipt the material terms of which we have already recited did not require registration as it merely purported to be a receipt in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt. In this view the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, the admission contained in the receipt should be taken into account along with the deposition of two witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant for the purpose of proving this payment, and the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the evidence of these witnesses coupled with that afforded by the receipt established beyond doubt the allegation of satisfaction of the mortgage bond made by the defendants. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Against this decision the present appeal has been brought by the plaintiff and the contention which has been raised before us is that the lower appellate Court has committed an error in law in admitting in evidence this document which was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that it required registration. Certain authorities have been cited in favour of this contention of the appellant. Reference has been made to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the recent case of Jwala Prasad v. Mohan Lal (1), where the view contended for by the appellant had been taken. Of course the Allahabad High Court in an earlier decision, namely, in the case of Piari Lal v. Makhan (2), took a different view. The learned advocate for the appellant has also relied upon a decision of the Madras Court. It seems to us that the result of the authorities is that the receipt for payment of money due under a mortgage does not require registration under S. 17, Cl. 2 (ii) if it does not purport to extinguish the mortgage. A large number of cases which are quoted by Sir Dinshah Mulla in his Commentary of the Registration Act at p. 97 of the second edition support this view. But the authorities show that it does require registration if it purports to extinguish the mortgage. Reference may be made in this connexion to the Allahabad case just referred to and to the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Neelmani Pattnaik v. Sukadeu Behara (3) at p. 806 (of 13 Mad).

There can be no doubt on the statement contained in the receipt that the mortgage exonerated the mortgagor from any liability under the mortgage and this document purported to extinguish the liability under the mortgage. It has however been sought to be argued by the learned advocate for the respondent that if it is not receivable in evidence as extinguishing the liability it can be received in evidence for a collateral purpose, namely, for the purpose of showing the admission of the plaintiff that he would return the mortgage bond after endorsement of payment and that he could not return it because the mortgage bond was with his pleader. It is difficult to split up the document in this way. The question with regard to the return of the mortgage bond to the defendants was only introduced because the plaintiff exonerated the defendant from liability under the mortgage bond. No question of the return of the bond can arise unless the mortgage debt was satisfied. It appears clear that on that date the mortgage bond would have been satisfied by the payment of Rs. 555 for the document shows that there was a much larger sum due, and we do not think we can hold that this document can be used for the purpose of proving this payment. We think the Subordinate Judge has not taken the correct view of the law in this behalf.

The result therefore is that the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court must be set aside and the case sent back to it in order that it may rehear the appeal after excluding from evidence the receipt in question which was admitted by him at the appellate stage. It will be open to the Subordinate Judge to decide the matter on such oral evidence as to payment which the respondent might offer and on such evidence as has already been tendered as also on such further evidence which the lower appellate Court may take in the exercise of its powers under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C. The Subordinate Judge will rehear the appeal in the light of these observations. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

(a) Alluvion and Diluvion—Suit for newly formed chur lands—Pleadings should not be strictly construed—Practice—Pleadings.

The pleadings in a suit for newly formed chur lands should not be construed too strictly, unless one must do so for some very good reason. In the case of chur lands which are constantly going under water and re-forming it is very difficult, until a full investigation based on a proper survey and comparison of maps is made, to premise with any degree of certainty whether a claim would really lie on the ground of a new formation as being re-formation in situ or a contiguous accretion. which he is the proprietor. This mauza is situate immediately on the north-west of Mauza Khetab Khan of which the proprietors are defendants 1 and 2. At the time of the thak survey of 1856 which is the earliest point of time at which we know anything about the situation of the two mauzas, the river Teesta flowed by their west and south-west. In the plaint the case put forward was as follows: Since the thak the river Teesta gradually shifted its course, and on two or three occasions the lands of Mauza Gatiasham were diluviated and again re-formed in situ; that for the last time diluviation began in 1323 or 1324 and continued till 1327, after which re-formation commenced, the river receding towards the west and throwing up the chur which is the subject-matter of the suit; that in 1329, when the chur became fit for cultivation, the plaintiff attempted to possess it, but defendants 1 and 2 kept him out of possession. Defendants 3 to 37 (with the exception of No. 27 who is dead) were impleaded as persons with whose help this dispossession was continued. The area of the lands in suit was stated as 450 highas and claim was made for declaration of title, recovery of possession and mesne profits, on the ground that the lands were re-formation in situ and accretion to Mauza Gatiasham.

Defendants 1 and 2 in their written statement alleged that the disputed lands had re-formed more than 25 or 30 years ago and that thereafter the river had gradually shifted towards the west and never towards the east, so that the disputed lands had never again diluviated since then; that the area of the disputed lands is not 450 highas but approximately 247 highas, and that they have all along been owned and possessed by them and their father, having been obtained under a decree between him and the plaintiff's predecessor in 1862. The Subordinate Judge made a decree on the footing that a part of the disputed lands fell within the area which the defendants were entitled to under the decree of 1862. The defendants have then preferred this appeal. There is a cross-objection on behalf of the plaintiff. Before proceeding to deal with the appeal and the cross-objection a few more facts required to be stated in order that the precise nature of the decree that has been passed may be rightly understood. It has already been stated that at the time of the thak survey in 1856 the river Teesta flowed by the west and south-west of Mauzas Gatiasham and Khetab Khan. The thak map of Mauza Dhusmara, which lay on the other side of the river and opposite to Mauza Gatiasham, prepared in 1857, shows that some lands of Mauza Gatiasham were depicted in that map as chak No. 4 being a residuary chak of chit or detached lands of Mauza Gatiasham. The revenue survey maps of Mauzas Gatiasham and Khetab Khan prepared in 1857 show that by that time tremendous changes had been wrought by the river, it having broken its banks on the east and cut several channels through Gatiasham and Khetab Khan and that diluvion as well as alluvion had already taken place in several parts. In 1861 the father of defendants 1 and 2 made a petition to the survey authorities complaining inter alia that the western boundary of Khetab Khan was the flowing river Teesta and had been determined to be so long ago and he was in possession of the said mauza according to the said boundary, but in the thak survey some lands on the western side had been shown as appertaining to Gatiasham and that the boundary line commencing from the north-western corner of his mauza southwards had been incorrectly drawn with the result that a large quantity of lands of Khetab Khan had been wrongly included within Gatiasham.

In the thak map of Gatiasham the flowing river Teesta was shown as on the west of the western boundary line of the mauza (Stations Nos. 1 to 10), and on the south of its southern boundary line (Stations Nos. 11 to 15), and Khetab Khan was shown as lying contiguous to its east (Stations No. 16 to 26). The complaint was that the line should go towards the south-west instead of towards the south-east from Station No. 22 and should run in that direction up to Station No. 10. The Superintendent of Survey found that there were some discrepancies in the thak map of Gatiasham, but he referred the applicant to the civil Court. On that the applicant commenced a suit against the plaintiff's predecessor, being Title Suit No. 155 of 1861, which resulted in a compromise decree. The exact import of the compromise then arrived at is a matter of controversy in this case which will be dealt with hereafter. It would be sufficient to say here only this: that under it the line between certain stations on the thak map of Gatiasham as drawn at certain bearings and distances would represent the boundary between the lands of the two parties. A decree was passed in 1862 on the basis of that compromise, the copy of the thak map of Gatiasham that was filed along with the petition of compromise forming an annexure thereto. This line will hereafter be referred to as "the decretal line." In 1913 the then predecessor of the plaintiff, as proprietor of Gatiasham, instituted a suit being Title Suit No. 462 of 1913 against certain persons who are not parties to the present litigation, and were not parties to Suit No. 155 of 1861, which ended in a compromise in 1862, alleging that at the time of the thak survey in 1856 some lands of the said mauza were situate on the opposite bank of the river Teesta and they were depicted as chak No. 4 in the thak map of 1857 of Mauza Dhusmara and included within the ambit of that mauza and further alleging that the said lands had undergone successive diluviation and re-formation, claimed title to and recovery of possession of certain lands as forming the re-formation in situ of an alluvial accretion to Mauza Gatiasham and the land of the said chak No. 4. She obtained a decree in the trial Court in a modified form. An appeal being preferred to this Court by one set of defendants the decree was in 1917 varied upon a compromise. The effect of this compromise decree, as far as may be gathered from the papers before us and in the absence of an Amin's map which formed a part of the petition of compromise and of the said decree, was that the plaintiff's title to chak No. 4 was acknowledged, her title to some lands which lay on the east of chak No. 4 and west of Gatiasham as shown in the thak survey, and which lay on the bed of the river at the time of the thak but had since silted up was also admitted and in respect of other lands lying on the north and on the south of the said silted up lands and situate between Gatiasham on one side and Dhusmara on the other, each party acknowledged the title of the other to a half-share therein.

The commissioner who made the local investigation in this case and prepared the case map showed in it amongst other things the disputed lands, the present position of the river Teesta, as well as the position of its main channel at the time of the revenue survey, and the common boundary line between Gatiasham and Khetab Khan as in the thak and the revenue survey maps. He also drew on it the decretal line as described in the petition of compromise in the suit of 1861. He further depicted on it, at the request of defendants 1 and 2 and under orders of the Court, the thak lines of Mauza Dhusmara and of the disputed lands in the suit of 1913 and also a map of chur Khetab Khan which is alleged to have been prepared by their Amin Mohamed Ismail in 1918. He drew the decretal line in three different ways, one of which he preferred, namely a vermilion dotted line drawn as per specifications given in the petition of compromise in the suit of 1861, drawn from Station No. 22 up to a point near Station No. 10 of the thak map of Gatiashama as corrected with reference to its field book. He found that almost the whole of the disputed lands with the exception of a small strip on the north fell to the south of the said decretal line.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the compromise in the suit of 1861 should be given effect to and so he held that defendants 1 and 2 are entitled to such lands as lay to the south of the decretal line and within the boundary of Gatiasham as shown in the thak map of that mauza. He however would not accept the vermilion dotted line of the commissioner as the decretal line because he was of opinion that when a copy of the thak map of Gatiasham was filed along with the petition of compromise in the suit of 1861, it was the thak map alone and not the bearings and distances as noted in the margin of the map that could not be taken into account. He therefore got the commissioner to draw the decretal line on the basis of the thak map of Gatiasham and without reference to the bearings and distances noted on it. As regards the rest of the area of the disputed land he drew a straight line from the south-eastern corner of Mauza Gatiasham (i. e. Station No. 16 of the thak map of Gatiasham) up to the south-eastern corner of Mauza Dhusmara (i. e. Station No. 88 of the Thak Map of Dhusmara) and held that an irregularly shaped triangular area, consisting of such of the disputed lands as lay outside the thak boundary of Gatiasham and north of that line, should be held to belong to the plaintiff. He therefore gave the plaintiff a decree in accordance with his prayers in the plaint for the strip of land lying on the north of the decretal line and the triangular area on the south of the thak boundary of Gatiasham. In the appeal which the defendants have filed, their contentions range round three matters: first the triangular area, second the order for costs that has been made against them, and third the decree for khas possession that has been passed as against defendants other than defendants 1 and 2. In the cross-objection preferred by the plaintiff arguments have been addressed to us which are directed to establishing that the suit should have been decreed in its entirety, a very minor point as well having been taken that the Subordinate Judge had no good reason for not accepting the vermilion dotted line of the commissioner as the decretal line.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as it deals with the triangular area, is obscure to a degree and the reasons on which he has proceeded are not easy to comprehend. Learned advocate for the plaintiff-respondent therefore, and in our opinion quite rightly, sought to support the decision of the learned Judge primarily upon grounds other than those that are to be found in his judgment. He next referred to the judgment and put upon the process of reasoning it reveals a meaning which, in our judgment, is the only meaning which would make it sensible. We shall presently deal with these matters but before we do so we propose to dispose of a few points which have been raised before us and which need not detain us long. Considerable argument has been addressed to us on behalf of the appellants, based on the fact that though in the prayer in his plaint the plaintiff has asked for declaration of title to the lands in suit on the ground of their being re-formation in situ of and accretion to his Mauza Gatiasham, there are no specific averments therein such as would be sufficient to found a title by accretion, it being generally recited in it that there was re-formation in situ and accretion. The respondent as well as the Court below have, on the other hand, laid a good deal of stress on the fact that in the written statement defendants 1 and 2 specifically rested their case upon the fact that

"the disputed land is owned and possessed by the defendants and forms the land in respect of which the decree was obtained their father," and did not lay any claim to them on the ground of re-formation in situ or accretion. In our judgment, the pleadings, so far as a matter of this kind is concerned, should not be construed too strictly unless one must do so for some very good reason. In the case of chur lands which are constantly going under water and re-forming it is very difficult, until a full investigation based on a proper survey and comparison of maps is made, to premise with any degree of certainty whether a claim would really lie on the ground of a new formation as being re-formation in situ or a contiguous accretion. The defendants' case that Mauza Khetab Khan never diluviated and the lands in dispute always remained in their present state ever since 1861 cannot be true; it was obviously put forward to ensure the defendants' success on the ground of a title by adverse possession. Their denials of the plaintiffs' case, namely:

"that the lands of Mauza Gatiasham were diluviated several times after the thak survey, and that for the last time the diluviation commenced in 1323 or 1321 and went on till 1327, and then re-formation began in 1328, and their assertion that the disputed land was re-formed long before 25 or 30 years' and thereafter the river Teesta gradually shifted towards the west and the disputed land was never diluviated," are also not true. On behalf of the appellants it has been contended that the suit should have been dismissed on the ground of limitation as also on the ground that they themselves had acquired a title by adverse possession. So far as limitation is concerned stress has been laid on the Subordinate Judge's finding which is in these words:

"An analysis of the evidence shows that the plaintiff failed to prove possession of any particular portion of the disputed area at any time."

On the question of adverse possession it has not been disputed that for the appellants to succeed they must trace such possession back to a period prior to 1305 because the last male owner died in that year and thereafter his widow held the estate which the plaintiff has obtained under an adoption made by her in 1324 and he having attained majority within three years before the institution of the suit. But to show such possession reliance has been placed, in particular, upon six documents, Exs. F-1, F, F-11, F-8, F-9 and F-10 which we have been asked to read in conjunction with the entries in the chitta daks of the survey alleged to have been made by the defendants' Amin in 1318 and in the light of the oral evidence adduced in the case. We have done so, but we cannot bring ourselves to differ from the view which the Subordinate Judge has expressed. We agree with him in his conclusion that though there was some sort of a survey of the outer boundary about the year 1318 by the defendants' Amin, as is alleged on their behalf, the chittas must have been prepared much later, and the entries to be found in them cannot be implicitly relied on. As regards oral evidence it is not at all difficult to adduce a piece of evidence here, or a piece of evidence there, to establish a connexion between names appearing in the documents and thus make the documents fit in with a part of the disputed land. The Subordinate Judge was, in our opinion, right in holding that it is difficult to be satisfied on the materials such as they are on the record, that the documents mentioned above related to the plots with which the defendants desire to connect them. In any event these documents can only prove that some parts of the disputed lands were in possession of persons whose names appear in them. They are not documents with which defendants 1 and 2 had any concern and so are of little assistance to these defendants as a means of establishing their title by adverse possession. It is quite possible that these defendants had tenants in parts of this disputed area for the periods that such parts were not under water, but there is no proof of any continuous or systematic possession through tenants by which the title of the rightful owner may be displaced. We think in this case we should apply those principles which are applicable to newly formed chur lands in which both parties were merely scrambling for possession, namely that possession lay with him who had title. We accordingly hold that the suit was not barred, nor was the plaintiff's title, if he had any, extinguished by adverse possession.

To support the decision of the Subordinate Judge as regards the triangular area and also to challenge his decision in so far as it purported to exclude the area lying to the south of the decretal line and within the thak boundary of Gatiasham or any area at all, it has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the compromise decree in the suit of 1861 should be read as giving the father of defendants 1 and 2 only three chaks of land lying to the south of the decretal line, and that if the defendants have not produced the map which formed an annexure to the petition of compromise and of the decree, and have not shown where those chaks lay, they ought not to be allowed to succeed at all. (The judgment then considered the facts and concluded.) We are unable to hold that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing his title to the lands or his claim for recovery of possession thereof as against the defendants.

With regard to the point in connexion with the decretal line which has been taken in the respondents' cross-objection it is conceded on behalf of the appellants that the decision of the Court below cannot be supported. The commissioner gave very good reason why his vermilion dotted line should be accepted; that line agreed very closely with the revenue survey boundary line. The Subordinate Judge has, in our opinion, needlessly rejected the said line, and has put an unnecessarily narrow construction upon the petition of compromise in holding that the thak map should be taken divorced from the field book which appears on it. (The Court after upholding the commissioner's findings varied the order for costs and concluded.) In the result the appeal is allowed and the cross-objection is also allowed in part. The plaintiff's title to the portion of the land in suit lying on the north of the vermilion dotted line from Station R to Station 10 should be declared, and he should get a decree for khas possession with mesne-profits to be determined hereafter in respect of that area, and the suit in respect of the rest of the lands should be dismissed. So far as the costs of the Court below are concerned each party should pay his or their own costs; but as regards the costs of this appeal the appellants will get their costs from the respondent, hearing fee being assessed at 10 gold mohurs. There will be no further order for costs in the cross-objection.

M.N.

Order accordingly.

v.

Gopeswar Chatterjee—Defendant—Respondent.

Appeal No. 468 of 1928, Decided on 11th May 1932, against original decree of Sub-Judge, Burdwan, D/- 31st August 1928.

(a) Practice—Pleadings—Relationship of parties is to be determined from real contract—Contract.

Whatever might be the words used in the pleadings, the relationship between the parties is to be determined upon the real character of the contract between them. [P 206 C 1]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 239—Receipt of share in profits is not conclusive test of partnership—But agreement to share all loss and profit is sure test—Test to determine whether relationship is of partnership or agency enunciated—Contract Act (1872), S. 182.

The receipt by a person of a share in the profits of a business is prima facie evidence that he is a partner in the business, but the receipt of a share of the profits is not a conclusive test of partnership. On the other hand an agreement to share all profit and all loss is an agreement of partnership even though the words "partner" or "partnership" do not occur in the agreement; while even though some losses are to be shared in by the parties, the agreement may show that a partnership was not intended. But a more certain test is to find out whether not only was there a common business but a common interest of all the parties in it, or whether the common business was to be carried on by one on behalf of another so that the latter could be regarded as the principal. [P 206 C 2; P 207 C 1]

(c) Contract Act (1872), S. 239—Participation in profits and not liability for loss coupled with other circumstances held took case out of partnership contract—Contract Act (1872), S. 182.

M was to take the contract of loading and unloading wagons for a company in his own name. There was no evidence that he was under any obligation to disclose the name of G who actually did the work to the company; the work was to stand in his own name so far as the company was concerned and there was nothing to suggest that the company was going to hold anybody else liable for any loss that might be caused. There was no evidence suggesting that anybody else than M was to have a voice in determining what work was or was not to be undertaken or when the work was to be stopped or whether the contract with the company was or was not to be renewed on the expiry of its period or other matters of that description:

Held: that by themselves these circumstances might not be enough; but taken along with participation in profits and non-liability for the loss, they took the case beyond the pale of a partnership contract. [P 207 C 1]

gent proof is necessary to hold that partnership was intended.

It is nothing extraordinary if in a partnership concern, the duty is delegated to one partner to decide upon what contracts should be undertaken or even to enter into contracts in his own name, and to another to finance the enterprise and to a third to manage or carry out the work; but these are more or less matters of delegation. But when the division of work in the aforesaid way is founded not merely on mutual consent given for the sake of mutual convenience but is founded on an assertion of a right and to the exclusion of others, more cogent proof is necessary to hold that notwithstanding all this the intention was to create a partnership. [P 207 C 2]

(e) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 89—Refusal.

The refusal for Art. 89 need not always be express and may on the other hand be inferred from circumstances, and a failure to comply with a definite demand may sometimes amount to a refusal. [P 208 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decree dismissing his suit for accounts and for damages. Shortly put the plaintiff's case was as follows: The plaintiff had worked as a contractor for loading and unloading wagons for the Indian Iron & Steel Co. Ltd., at Santa for a long time. As he had various other businesses to attend to, it was inconvenient for him to look after the said contract work personally, and so he made up his mind to appoint somebody to whom he might entrust the same. The defendant, who is a pleader, on coming to know of his intention, approached him to be so appointed. Upon that it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the defendant would carry on and look after the business, by bestowing personal labour, and would receive advances from the company and make advances from his own pocket whenever necessary, would keep proper accounts of all income and expenditure and explain the same to the plaintiff, and would be liable to make good to the plaintiff all losses that would accrue by reason of negligent performance of the work; and that the profits would be divided half and half between the parties, but the loss, if any, would be borne entirely by the defendant. The defendant worked under this arrangement from 1st November 1919, till 15th April 1921. During this period the defendant was negligent in the performance of the work he was entrusted with and was also guilty of misfeasance and malfeasance, and did not render accounts. Consequently, on 15th April 1921, the plaintiff wrote to the company withdrawing the powers which he had conferred on the defendant to receive payments and do other acts on his behalf, and since then all connexion of the defendant with the plaintiff and with the business ceased.

The defendant had paid to the plaintiff in all Rs. 1,200. The prayers in the plaint were that it might be held that the defendant was bound to render account to the plaintiff for the period from 1st November 1919 to 15th April 1921, that he might be ordered to render such account, and that a decree might be passed against him for such amount as might be found due as the result of accounting and also for a sum of Rupees 1,376-3-0 which the company had deducted from the plaintiff's bills, after the defendant had ceased to work, on account of demurrage, back charges and store charges, for work which the defendant had done during the aforesaid period. The defendant took various pleas: it was averred that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was laid, because the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant was not that of principal and agent, but that it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant's son Madan Gopal that the plaintiff would renew the contract with the company in his own name that Madan Gopal would allow the plaintiff's name to stand in the office of the company and would carry out the works relating to the contract with his own men and money and keep the accounts, but that the defendant only managed the business for his son and had no liability to account. The terms, according to the defence, were that out of the net profits the plaintiff would get four annas and the defendant 12 annas, but it was admitted that the plaintiff was not to be liable for loss if any. It was denied that any amount had been deducted from the plaintiff's bills as alleged in the plaint. Charges of negligence, misfeasance and malfeasance were repudiated, and on the other hand it was contended that the business, which at the inception of that partnership was in ruins, attained a flourishing state during the defendant's management. Limitation was pleaded; it being said that the defendant worked till 5th April 1921, on which date he was removed by the plaintiff. It was also asserted that the plaintiff had received not Rs. 1,200 only but in all Rs. 2,517.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit failed on the preliminary ground that it was not maintainable in the form in which it was laid. He nevertheless dealt with all the issues which had been framed and recorded his conclusions thereon. In the result he dismissed the suit. The first and most important question for consideration in this appeal is whether the suit in the form in which it was brought was maintainable. The Subordinate Judge held that the business in question was a partnership business within the meaning of S. 239, Contract Act, that the plaint was framed as if the relations between the parties were as those of principal and agent, while in reality the parties were partners, and that as the particulars required by Form No. 49, App. A of the Code had not been given, no decree in Form No. 21 of App. D of the Code could be made. He held therefore that the claim for accounts was not maintainable and that, inasmuch as the claim for damages was inseparable from the claim for accounts the latter claim too was incompetent. Now, it is quite true that the frame of the suit was not that of a partnership action, and read carefully, the plaint would seem to suggest that the cause of action was founded on such relations as exist between a principal and an agent, though the terms "principal" and "agent" appear nowhere in it. At the same time it is only fair to say that the defendant in his written statements nowhere explicitly took the plea that it was a partnership that existed between the plaintiff and Madan Gopal; but that, on the other hand, an out and out transfer of the business or rather its goodwill to Madan Gopal was suggested, it being said that the plaintiff was to get a four annas share of the net profits. The Subordinate Judge noticed this difficulty, for he observed:

"The defendant's case as made in the written statement is that the plaintiff transferred his business to the said Madan Gopal in consideration of participation in the net profits of the business to the extent of four annas out of 16 annas, and hence it is clear there was no allegation of partnership in the written statements."

The Subordinate Judge however thought, and in this respect he was right, that whatever might have been the words used in the pleadings, the relationship between the parties was to be determined upon the real character of the contract between them, which in his opinion was a partnership contract. There is no document evidencing the contract, nor any direct oral evidence beyond what the plaintiff and the defendant themselves have given as witnesses examined in the case. There is some evidence proceeding from witnesses who have spoken to what they afterwards heard from the parties themselves; and inferences have also to be drawn from their subsequent conduct. For the purposes of this case Madan Gopal may be ignored, for it is conceded that his name was introduced merely to shield the plaintiff from difficulties that were anticipated, because the defendant had engaged in a business which as a legal practitioner it was not open to him to do, and that the real contracting parties were the plaintiff and the defendant. (Their Lordships then discussed evidence and proceeded.) The essential ingredients of the transaction were that the business was to remain in the name of the plaintiff, and so far at any rate as the company was concerned, it was the plaintiff who would take the work under contract from the company, he would make over the work for management to the defendant, and the defendant would get 12 annas out of the net profits as his remuneration, the plaintiff would get the remaining four annas thereof but would not be liable for the loss if any. The distinction between agency and partnership is sometimes a very subtle one, especially in cases where one party gets as his remuneration a share in the profits and does not remain liable for the loss, and this distinction becomes important when a question arises in connexion with their dealings with third parties. "Partnership" is defined in S. 239, Contract Act, and "Agency" in S. 182, and although every partner is an agent of the firm and his other partners for the purposes of the business of the partnership, S. 242 says:

"No contract for the remuneration of a servant or agent of any person, engaged in any trade or undertaking by a share of the profits of such trade or undertaking shall, of itself, render such servant or agent responsible as a partner therein, nor give him the rights of a partner."

The receipt by a person of a share in the profits of a business is prima facie evidence that he is a partner in the business, but it is now well settled, notwithstanding many dicta and decisions to the contrary, that the receipt of a share of the profits is not a conclusive test of partnership. In Ross v. Parkes (1) Jessel, M. R. observed:

"It is said (and about that there is no doubt) that mere participation in profits inter se affords cogent evidence of partnership. But it is now well settled by the case of Cox v. Hickman (2), Bulter v. Ship (3) and Mallon v. Court of Wards (4) that although a right to participation in profits is a strong test of partnership and there may be cases where upon a simple participation in profits there is a presumption, not of law, but of fact that there is a partnership yet whether the relation of partnership does or does not exist must depend upon the whole contract between the parties, and that circumstance is not conclusive."

On the other hand an agreement to share all profit and all loss is an agreement of partnership even though the words "partner" or "partnership" do not occur in the agreement, while even though some losses are to be shared in by the parties the agreement may show that a partnership was not intended. In Lindley on Partnership, Edn. 7, p. 46, it is said:

"Whatever difference of opinion there may be as to other matters, persons engaged in any trade business or adventure upon the terms of sharing the profits and making good all losses arising therefrom, are necessarily to some extent partners in that trade, business or adventure; nor is the writer aware of any case in which persons who have agreed to share profits and losses in this sense have been held not to be partners."

Again at p. 48 it is said:

"The inference that where there is community of profit there is a partnership so strong that even if community of loss be expressly stipulated against, partnership may nevertheless subsist. In Cooper v. Eyre (5), Lord Loughborough is reported to have said, 'In order to constitute a partnership communion of profits and loss is essential.' But there is nothing to prevent one or more partners from agreeing to indemnify the others against loss, or to prevent full effect from being given to a contract of partnership containing such a clause of indemnity."

Judged by the tests laid down in the propositions quoted above the terms of the agreement, such as they have been alleged on behalf of the parties in this case, would be equally consistent with a partnership as with an agency. But a more certain test is to find out whether not only was there a common business but a common interest of all the parties in it, or whether the common business was to be carried on by the defendant on behalf of the plaintiff so that the plaintiff could be regarded as the principal. On this point there is not, nor indeed could there be any, direct evidence, so long as the terms were not put into writing. But there are the following facts, viz., the plaintiff was to take the contract in his own name, and there is no evidence that he was under any obligation to disclose the name of the defendant to the company.

It was testified in his own name so far as the company was concerned and there is nothing to suggest that the company was going to hold anybody else liable for any loss that might be caused. There is no evidence suggesting that anybody else than the plaintiff was to have a voice in determining what work was or was not to be undertaken or when the work was to be stopped or whether the contract with the company was or was not to be renewed on the expiry of its period (vide Ex. A (9)) or other matters of that description. By themselves these two circumstances may not be enough, but taken along with participation in profits and non-liability for the loss, they may not unreasonably, in our judgment, be regarded as taking the case beyond the pale of a partnership contract.

It is quite true that for a partnership it is not essential that there should be a common stock or that there should be a joint capital or stock, and the dictum that a partnership in profits is a partnership in assets by which they are made is also not universally true. It may be, and indeed it is nothing extraordinary, that in a partnership concern, the duty is delegated to one partner, to decide upon what contracts should be undertaken or even to enter into contracts in his own name, and to another to finance the enterprise and to a third to manage or carry out the work; but these are more or less matters of delegation. But when the division of work in the aforesaid way is founded not merely on mutual consent given for the sake of mutual convenience but is founded on an assertion of a right and to the exclusion of others, such as appears to have been the case here, more cogent proof is necessary to hold that notwithstanding all this the intention was to create a partnership. These circumstances ordinarily would militate against a supposition of the parties having a common interest in the business, though the business itself is a common one. It has been argued that the stipulation that the defendant was to advance money was inconsistent with the theory of agency, and the fact that he would charge no interest on such advances but get a share in the profits suggests that the intention was to make him a dormant partner, that is to say, one who was not known or appeared to be such and whose real character was concealed under the cloak of a mere lender of money. But on examining the materials on the record we are satisfied that it was never contemplated that the defendant would, in fact, have to make any very considerable advances, and the evidence that there is on the record amply establishes that the business was carried on and was also intended to be carried on with the amount that was due from the company at the inception and with further advances made by the company.

That the relationship between the parties was not that of partners also appears, in our judgment, from the contents of such letters as Ex. 1 (d) written by the defendant to the plaintiff, and Ex. 1 (g) and Ex. 1 (n) which were written by the plaintiff to the defendant and to which the defendant never protested. We see no good reason to think that the letters produced are not genuine. They have a ring of sincerity and truth which, in our opinion, it is impossible for any man to simulate or fabricate. Some argument has been advanced before us, based on the fact that in some letters from the company to the plaintiff the letter was addressed as M. A. Latif & Co., or M. A. Latif and Brothers (vide e.g. Exs. A-6, A-7 and A-9), that in one of the letters (Ex. A-9) the company enquired about the name by which the partnership was to be known, that a bill (Ex. D) was made out in the name of M. A. Latif & Co., and that in some of the bills Ex. D series the defendant signed for M. A. Latif & Co. But we are not prepared to infer from these that the company meant to suggest that the plaintiff was really carrying on the business in partnership with somebody else. The defendant does not suggest that he was included in M. A. Latif & Brothers; nor can it be contended that because he was signing for Latif & Co. he must have been a partner of that firm any more than an agent working under it. The plaintiff admittedly had various other businesses which were carried on under the name of M. A. Latif & Brothers or M. A. Latif & Co. As regards the letter Ex. A (9) in which the company addressing the plaintiff in December 1920, as M. A. Latif & Brothers enquired of him of the name by which the partnership was to be known, we do not think that this inquiry suggests that there was in fact a legal partnership in existence, far less any such between the plaintiff and the defendant.

On the other hand in March 1921 the company appears (vide Ex. 2 (h), to have referred to the defendant as the "Babu" appointed by the plaintiff for the works and there is also a large volume of documents showing that the company regarded the plaintiff alone as their contractor. One very strong circumstance which in our opinion, completely demolishes the defendant's case as to partnership is that afforded by his own conduct; if there was a partnership which the plaintiff had wrongfully dissolved, as it is his case, it is inexplicable that the defendant should not have raised a protest expressly stating that he was a partner or should have refrained from resorting to the Court within the time allowed by law to assert his rights and to ask for relief. His explanation is that he might thereby get into trouble as he is a pleader. But in this respect his position as defendant to-day is not any better. We cannot but reject this explanation. (Their Lordships then considered the question of shares of the parties and of limitation and proceeded). We have carefully considered these and other materials, e. g., Exs. 1 (f) and 1 (j), to which our attention has been drawn, but we are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge. In our opinion what has been proved falls far short of establishing a refusal such as Art. 89, Lim.

Act contemplates. It is quite true that the refusal need not always be expressed, and may, on the other hand, be inferred from circumstances, and it would also be correct to say that failure to comply with a definite demand may sometimes amount to a refusal. But we fail to discover in this case anything which would even remotely suggest a repudiation on the part of the defendant of a liability to account or any circumstances from which the failure or omission on his part to render accounts might be construed as a refusal.

It may also be mentioned here that a refusal and time having run therefrom was never even pleaded. In our opinion no part of the claim is barred. It has been suggested in the arguments addressed to us on behalf of the respondent that there was no liability on his part to render account. The ground for this plea it is difficult to make out. When the plaintiff was to get a share of the profits, and when under his agreement it was the defendant's own case that he was to keep the accounts (Madan Gopal being now out of the way) and when it has been established beyond doubt that he handled the cash and never made over the books, it is idle to contend that he was not bound to account. The conclusions which we have recorded above are sufficient to establish the position that the plaintiff is entitled to a preliminary decree for accounts for the period in suit on the footing of the defendant having been an agent liable to render the same. (The judgment then considered other minor points and allowed the appeal and dismissed the cross-objections).

Mangtural Bagaria—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 82 of 1931, Decided on 15th April 1932.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (3 of 1909), S. 108—Administration order under—Estate vests in Official Receiver immediately.

The moment an administration order is pronounced under S. 108, the property of the deceased debtor vests in the Official Assignee and the fact that the order is not drawn up makes no difference. The drawing up of the order is not a matter which delays the vesting of the property at all as the ordinary prima facie rule of all the Courts of law and equity is that the drawing up of the order is not the bringing into existence of the order, though there are many cases in which the drawing up of the order is, in effect, the bringing into existence of the order, namely, those cases where an order has no utility except in so far as it may be enforced: Metcalf v. British Tea Association, (1881) 46 L. T. 31, passim. Case law referred.

Advocate-General—for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case we have followed with the greatest care the argument of the learned Advocate-General who appears for the plaintiff-respondent in the point before us seems to be a very narrow one. The position however is that, in my judgment the appeal should succeed. The plaintiff brings his suit for certain royalties due to the estate of one Popat Velji Rajdeo upon the terms of a mining lease. The plaintiff claims to be for this purpose entitled to represent that estate under an order dated 11th March 1927, which was an order made in an administration suit, in that the heirs and the widows of the deceased were litigating as to the succession and the Court was asked for a more or less full order for administration of the estate of the deceased. The order in question of 11th March 1927, appointed the present plaintiff Mangtulal to be the Manager and it is in that capacity that he claims to be entitled to recover from the defendants whatever sums are due to Popat Velji Rajdeo's estate.

The point upon which the case turned was a point taken in one of the written statements from the beginning. It was shortly this: This very plaintiff Mangtulal Bagaria on 18th July 1921 applied to the learned Judge exercising jurisdiction under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and on 4th August 1924, obtained an order under S. 108 of the Act for administration of the estate of Popat. That order was obtained by him in his capacity as a creditor of Popat. He impleaded in those proceedings certain persons as being the legal representatives of the deceased. In their presence the matter was argued by Mr. Khaitan, attorney for the applicant, and by Mr. Chatterji, attorney for the legal representatives. The plaintiff satisfied the learned Judge that the case was within the section and the learned Judge pronounced an order of the character set forth in S. 108, an administration order under the insolvency jurisdiction. Now, it is not contended and it is not a matter subject to doubt that upon that order being pronounced and before it was drawn up the property of the debtor vested in the Official Assignee of this Court. The matter is no different than it would have been in the case of an order of adjudication and the position therefore was prima facie that the Official Assignee of this Court represented Popat's estate and no other person could claim to represent it. The order having been pronounced it was minuted according to the practice of this Court. When a receiving order is made upon a "judgment summons," or when an order is made by the Judge in Chambers on summons the English practice is that the Judge makes an endorsement of the order upon the summons itself. In this Court that practice is not followed but a minute of the order is made at the time and the fact that an order was pronounced in this case is not capable of dispute as we shall see in a moment that steps were taken and an order was drawn up.

The order as drawn up recited an affidavit of Mangtulal filed on the 30th July and it described Popat Velji Rajdeo as a person who died insolvent. It appears that the advisers of the legal representatives took exception to these passages in the draft and they applied to the learned Judge upon a proceeding which does not appear to be in writing. They applied to him orally, we are told, at his house during the vacation, but the statement of fact which we get from the plaintiff's own petition is that the application was an application to speak to the minutes of the order. Mr. Chatterji was instructed apparently to get the order drawn up without the particular passages objected to. He attended before Ghose, J., and the learned Judge when hearing the application at his house was, of course, attended by an officer of the Court whose duty it was to make a minute of any order which the learned Judge might make. The minute which was made by the Court's officer was this:

"The order for administration in insolvency made on 4th August 1924 is not to be drawn up by order of (those, J., till after the vacation when the matter will be mentioned to him."

In these circumstances we have to consider what was the effect or nature of the order after that direction was given. What happened, in fact, was that the matter was never mentioned to the learned Judge after the vacation in the exercise of his insolvency jurisdiction or at all, but that, in an administration suit which had been started on 23rd September 1921, various orders were made appointing sometimes one person and then another and finally the plaintiff to manage or represent the property of the deceased. It is contended by learned counsel for the appellants that under S. 109, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the property vests in the Official Assignee the moment the order is pronounced. That cannot be disputed. The drawing up of the order is not a matter which delays the vesting of the property at all and cases have been cited to us which show that this is an arrangement entirely consistent with what happens in insolvency in respect of other classes of orders. The case of In re Manning (1) is a particularly instructive case upon this point and it is to be noticed that the effectiveness of the order from the time of its pronouncement is not some special doctrine peculiar to the Court of Bankruptcy but it is an ordinary doctrine of every Court. I do not say that there are no exceptions to it. There are exceptions to it under the rules in the insolvency jurisdiction. Thus an order for discharge is by the rules made effective only from the date of the drawing up. But the ordinary prima facie rule of all the Courts of law and equity is that the drawing up of the order is not the bringing into existence of the order. There are many cases in which the drawing up of the order, in effect, the bringing into existence of the order, namely, these cases where an order has no utility except in so far as it may be enforced; if for example, a writ of attachment is issued, the Sheriff cannot proceed upon the writ until it is handed out and in effect the order is not an available order until after the drawing up. But the prima facie doctrine of all Courts is, as I have said, and it is plain upon the face of the Civil Procedure Code which requires that all decrees and orders are to be dated as on the date they are pronounced. That being so, on the 4th August there was an order which vested the property in the Official Assignee.

The question is whether the directions made on 4th September brought that position of affairs to an end. In my opinion it did not. In the first place, the order does not say more than that, the order is not to be drawn up till after the vacation. It does not say that it is never to be drawn up. We know from the character of the application made by Mr. Chatterji that there was no such question in the mind of any one at the time. The intention was that the learned Judge at a more convenient time would settle the particular dispute which had taken place upon certain words and that was all. If when the time came learned counsel had mentioned the matter to the Judge and if then the Judge had said

"the order not having been drawn up and perfected, I am now minded to make another order altogether," the position would have been very different. I do not say what it would have been because perhaps it is a serious question whether in that event the learned Judge would and could have divested the Official Assignee of the property. It would be a rather extraordinary thing to do because the order had in the meantime enured to the benefit of all the creditors. But if the learned Judge, on having the matter mentioned to him, had purported to say my original order was a mistake and I cancel it, it might very well be that the position would have been as if no such order had been pronounced. It may be pointed out that there was one thing which the learned Judge did not do. The learned Judge might have said:

"the order is not to be drawn up till after the vacation and I stay execution thereof in the meantime so far as the taking over possession by the Official Assignee is concerned."

Staying of execution could not affect the vesting of the property, but the learned Judge it is to be noticed did not even grant a stay so far as the acting on the order is concerned. All that he said was that the particular terms of the order about which there was some little dispute would be settled by him in future. That is the right view to take of what happened. We are bound by the authorities cited by Mr. Page to hold that the property vested in the Official Assignee and still vests in the Official Assignee. The learned Judge has discussed the general question of the effect of orders before they are formally drawn up and he has observed the well-known doctrine that, until an order is formally drawn up, the Judge can withdraw it, alter it or change it in any way he likes. He still is dominus of the order. It does not require to come under the slip rule or any other principle of law to entitle him to make a variation. One case has been cited by the learned Advocate-General where an order was made for winding up a company. The minutes of the order had been issued to the parties but the order had not been perfected. In the meantime certain persons paid the company's debts and instead of making a winding up order, the learned Judge dismissed the winding up petition. This principle that the learned Judge is dominus of the order until it is drawn up is, in my judgment, of no avail to the plaintiff in the present case. The learned Judge had never at any time, so far as I can see, shown the smallest intention of rescinding the order which he had made. He merely postponed till another occasion the consideration of the question as to how it should be drawn up.

1. (1885) 30 Ch D 480=55 LJ Ch 613=34

When the defendants took the point that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue it may be that the plaintiff could have gone to the learned Judge or the Judge having jurisdiction in insolvency and got an order which would bring to an end all operation of the order previously made. He did nothing of the kind. Up to this date no one has gone to the learned Judge in insolvency to put the matter right. The position is that the order stands and any creditor of Popat Velji would be prima facie entitled to have it drawn up yet by taking the proper steps. It is to be observed that the plaintiff's own view of the matter is disclosed by some of his affidavits and petitions in the administration suit. As a matter of fact, in one case, he put forward that the learned Judge had ordered that the order was to be in abeyance with a view to making a case that there was no one to protect the assets. That was not a true representation of what the learned Judge had done at all. It suited the plaintiff because at that time he wanted to have some one else to be appointed administrator. But there are other passages from which it can be seen that the order was an order which was in existence still and was being completed, and he does suggest in one of his petitions at the very time the order was made on 11th March 1927, that there was an order which only required to be formally completed. I have no doubt that this is a case where we should apply the doctrine of In re Manning (1) Blount v. Whitely (2), Script Phonography Co. Ltd. v. Gregg (3), Ex parte Hookey (4). I am not prepared to follow the case of Melcalfe v. British Tea Association (5). It appears to me that much of what was said on that occasion was unnecessary for the decision of the case which was the very special case of an order conditionally dismissing a suit. Nobody doubts that an order dismissing a suit out and out brings the suit to an end. On the other hand, for the purpose of the drawing up of the order it is in existence. All that the learned Judges in that case ultimately did was to extend the time for appealing and give leave to appeal from the order dismissing the suit. The plaintiff in this case chose to go on in spite of the warning light that was exhibited to him in the written statement of the defendants and the position now is that he never had at the date of the plaint a right to the sum which he now claims nor, so far as I can see, has anything happened since which would entitle him to say that his defect in title has been cured.

In these circumstances the appeal must be allowed and the suit must be dismissed with costs in both the Courts. This order for costs will be against the plaintiff personally.

Judgment.—These two appeals have arisen out of a suit for foreclosure on a mortgage by way of conditional sale and are from the preliminary and the final decrees passed therein. Defendants 6, 7, 8 and 11 are the appellants. Defendant 1 is the mortgagor. He executed the mortgage on 23rd June 1916. On the same day, after being duly signed and attested, the deed was presented for registration and the executant's admission was taken, but the registration was not complete till 27th June 1916, which is the date the certificate of registration bears. Defendant 26, having obtained a decree for money in Money Suit No. 153 of 1915 against defendant 1 on 18th May 1916, put it into execution, and on 20th June 1916 obtained an order for attachment in respect of eight out of the properties covered by the mortgage. Two out of these eight properties are concerned in this appeal. On 21st June 1916 the writ of attachment was signed and issued and made over to the peon. As regards the said two properties the prohibitory order was served in the locality on 22nd June 1916, but was not posted in the court-house till the 24th. On 24th February 1917 the attached properties were sold in auction and purchased by defendant 26. After the sale was confirmed and possession was delivered to defendant 26, he sold the said eight properties to defendant 29 on 25th May 1919. On 3rd January 1921 defendant 29 sold the two properties with which we are concerned to the appellants.

The first question we have been called upon to determine is what was the effect of the attachment upon the mortgage which defendant 1 made. In the Court below the appellants rested their claim upon the ground that the attachment was prior to the execution of the mortgage. This contention was resisted on behalf of the plaintiffs on the ground that to render an attachment effectual the affixing of the prohibitory order on the court-house is absolutely necessary, and inasmuch as such affixing was later in date than the execution the mortgage lien was not affected by the attachment. The Court below upheld the plaintiffs' contention. It is not disputed now that the view which the Court below has taken is correct; and indeed the correctness of the view can no longer be disputed: see Muthiah Chetty v. Palanappa Chetty (1). But, in this Court, it has been argued on the appellants' behalf that in view of S. 59, T. P. Act, no right was created under the deed until it was registered and that inasmuch as the registration admittedly took place after the attachment had been effectively made the mortgage was, having regard to S. 64, Civil P. C., void against all claims under the attachment. There is very little authority directly bearing on the question that has to be considered; the only decision in which something like the present question was dealt with is the case of Veerakutty Koundan v. Ramasami Asuri (2). In that case it was held that where between the dates of the execution and of the registration of a mortgage deed another unregistered mortgage bond is sued upon and the mortgaged properties are attached, that mortgage does not acquire priority over the registered mortgage either by reason of the decree thereon or by an attachment, order obtained in the suit. The effect of an attachment however does not appear to have been specifically considered in that case and so the decision is not of much assistance.

A number of decisions have been relied upon by the appellants to fix the point of time at which a document can be said to be registered: Mt. Rohimoonnissa v. Abdulloh Khan (3), Harder v. Ram Lal (1), Veerappa Chetty v. Kadiresan Chetty (5) and Mohammed Ewar v. Birj Hall (6). It is unnecessary to discuss these because it can never be and indeed has not been contended on behalf of the respondent that the mortgage deed in the present case was a registered document at the date when the attachment was effected. It has then been contended that in the case of a document, of which registration is compulsory, title does not pass until registration has been effected: Paperaddi v. Norasireddi (7), Sheenarain v. Darbari (8) and Tilakdasi Singh v. Gour Narain (9). But S. 17 of that Act says that a document which is registered operates from the time of its execution and not from the time of its registration. The real question to be considered therefore is whether this operation by virtue of S. 17 of the Act in respect of a deed duly executed but not registered, is in any way affected by an attachment effected in the meantime, having regard to the provision contained in S. 64, Civil P. C.

In some recent decisions of Indian Courts the effect of non-registration in the case of deeds of gift of which registration is compulsory under the law has been considered, and these decisions have subsequently been examined by the Judicial Committee. In the case of Kalyanasundaram Pillai v. Karuppa Mooppanar (10) the facts were these: a Hindu executed a deed of gift of part of his immovable property and delivered it to the donee, and on the following day adopted a son and three days after he registered the deed. It was held that on delivery of the deed to the donee there was acceptance of the transfer within the meaning of S. 123, T. P. Act, 1882 and thereafter the gift became effectual subject to registration as required by S. 123. The opinions of the learned Judges of the Division Bench of the Madras High Court in that case will be found in Kalyanasundaram Pillai v. Krishnaswami Aiyar (11) and the judgment in the Letters Patent appeal therein is reported in A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 282. The same principle was laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Venkatasubba v. Subba Rama (12), the judgment of the Bombay High Court in which case is reported in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (13) their Lordships repeating what they had said in the case of Kalyanasundaram Pillai v. Karuppa Mooppanar (10). In Kalyanasundaram Pillai's case (10) their Lordships said:

"They are unable to see how the provisions of S. 123, T. P. Act, can be reconciled with S. 47, Registration Act, except upon the view that while registration is a necessary solemnity in order to the enforcement of a gift of immovable property, it does not suspend the gift until registration actually takes place. When the instrument of gift has been handed by the donor to the donee and accepted by him, the former has done everything in his power to complete the donation and to make it effective. Registration does not depend upon his consent, but is the act of an officer appointed by law for the purpose, who, if the deed is executed by or on behalf of the donor and is attested by at least two witnesses, must register it if it is presented by a person having the necessary interest, within the prescribed period. Neither death nor the express revocation by the donor, is a ground for refusing registration if the other conditions are complied with."

Applying these observations, if they are applicable, to the case of a mortgage it may well be said that while registration is a necessary solemnity in order to the enforcement of a mortgage of immovable property, it does not suspend the mortgage until registration actually takes place. It has been contended, however that what was laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case aforesaid has no bearing upon the question now before us. This has been said firstly, because by reason of

Ss. 2 and 129, T. P. Act, 1882, the Hindu law which requires delivery of possession to complete a gift applied, whereas it is too late now to contend that under the Hindu law possession is necessary to complete the title of the transferee in any other case of transfer [Kali Das v. Kanhya Lal (14)]; and secondly because what was really considered by the Judicial Committee was a very different question, namely, whether a donor having done all that he had to do to make a valid gift, and when all that was necessary to make it effective was done and the document was incomplete merely on account of non-registration, could himself turn round and revoke the gift.

As regards the first of these grounds it is difficult to see how the distinction pointed out enures to the benefit of the appellants. The Hindu law or S. 122, T. P. Act, 1882, only imposes an additional condition for the gift to be effective the provision for registration remaining the same in the case of gifts as well as in the case of mortgages. So far as the second ground is concerned it is true that the present question was not the question before the Judicial Committee. But their Lordships' decision, carefully read, does not seem to us to proceed upon a disqualification attaching to the donor personally by reason of the fact that he had executed the deed of gift and handed it over to the donee; it proceeds upon a consideration of the legal position created by the fact that the gift was complete except for the registration. Their Lordships quoted a passage from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court in the case under appeal and did not express their dissent from it. On the other hand their Lordships affirmed the judgment and the decrees appealed from. The passage runs thus:

"The effect of these sections (i.e. Ss. 47 and 49, Registration Act), in my judgment, is that if a title is complete except for registration no subsequent alienation or dealing with the property by the vendor or donor as the case may be can defeat the title which on registration became an absolute title dating from the execution of the document."

It will be seen that the observations just quoted include not merely gifts but also sales. Their Lordships observed that they were in complete agreement with the Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Atma-ram Sakharam v. Vaman Janardhan (15) and also approved of the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Venkati Ram Reddi v. Pil-lati Rama Reddi (16) subject to a qualification as to acceptance of the gift arising by reason of S. 122, T. P. Act. These Full Bench decisions, as well as the two dissenting judgments in the former of the two cases, dealt very fully with the question whether an executant of a deed compulsorily registrable has any locus penitentie to resile by reason of the fact that the title under it is incomplete for want of registration. These decisions are clear authorities for the proposition, which has thus obtained the approval of the Judicial Committee, that incompleteness due to want of registration is not a thing of which the executant can take any advantage, and that if the instrument is otherwise complete the executant is to be regarded as having done everything that was in his power to complete the transfer and to make it effective.

To consider the effect of S. 64, Civil P. C., the true nature of an order of attachment has to be realized. Form No. 21 of App. F to the Code, is the form of a prohibitory order for attachment of immovable property. It shows that by such an order the judgment-debtor is prohibited and restrained from transferring or charging the property by sale, gift or otherwise, and all persons are prohibited from receiving the same by purchase, gift or otherwise. At the stage at which the attachment in the present case was effected the transferor had done all that lay in his power to complete the transfer and to make it effective and the transferee had already taken the charge which had been so created in his favour, and all that remained was the solemnity to be gone through which was necessary to make it enforceable. We are accordingly of opinion that the attachment, such as it was in the present case, did not effect the mortgage. The result is that, in our judgment, the purchase by defendant 26 cannot prevail over the plaintiff's mortgage lien. In the view we have taken of the aforesaid matter no other question calls for our decision. But as two other questions have been argued before us on behalf of the appellants we think it right to record our views thereon.

One of these contentions was that the Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that defendant 29 in the matter of the purchase that he made from defendant 26 was merely a benamidar for defendant 1. We have examined the materials, bearing upon this question, in the light of the arguments addressed to us and we must say we are unable to come to any different conclusion. A careful perusal of the deposition of defendant 29 himself, apart from the other materials to which the learned Judge has referred, confirms us in the view that we take of this transaction. The scheme involved in this benami is a matter of some nicety and complication. The Subordinate Judge has gone into it in detail and with care and we are of opinion that his appreciation of it is correct. It will serve no useful purpose to repeat it here. The other contention is that the equities arising in favour of the appellants, on the footing that they were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration from defendant 29 and without notice of defendant 1's title, have not been considered by the Court below. The Subordinate Judge appears to have disposed of this question with the remark that S. 11 (or S. 432), T. P. Act, is not applicable to the case. This remark of his, no doubt, does not adequately dispose of the question, but we do not know in what form the question was presented before him. Be that as it may, we have tried to come to a conclusion of our own on this question and we are met with the difficulty at the outset that the materials before us are, in our view, utterly insufficient to establish the fact or show such conduct on their part as would lead to the inference that they were bona fide purchasers. The only materials on the record to which they may point for a finding in their favour, so far as this matter is concerned, is the evidence of defendant 8, Ramdayal which in some material respects is in conflict with what defendant 29 has deposed, and the evidence of the witness Jahbar Ali. We have perused this evidence with care, but we are unable to hold in favour of the appellants. Apart from everything else the evidence makes it clear that no inquiry was made by the purchasers to satisfy themselves as regards their vendor's title.

The result is that these appeals should in our opinion be dismissed with costs to the plaintiffs-respondents and we order accordingly. One set of hearing-fee will be assessed in the two appeals. The appellants, will be allowed time for three months more from today for redemption on payment of the amounts mentioned in the decree of the Court below.

Appeal No. 75 of 1930, Decided on 28th January 1932, against appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, 24-Pargannas, D/- 20th August 1929.

(a) Practice—Pleadings—Pleadings in mofussil should be liberally construed.

(b) Easements Act (1882), S. 15—Immemorial user or lost grant must be pleaded to obtain relief—Plea of long user—Inference of lost grant may be drawn—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 4.

The question of immemorial user or lost grant must be pleaded in every case before a person can be given relief on that head. Whether the action be brought against the servient owner or a stranger, a party cannot safely allege his right to an easement generally, but should state specifically the manner in which he claims title to the easement, whether by grant (actual or lost), prescription at Common law, or under the Act.

[P 217 C 2]

Where the plaintiffs did allege circumstances, namely, the user by themselves and by their ancestors of the land as pathway for 40 or 50 years, the plaint may on a liberal construction be taken to have relied upon long user leading to an inference of lost grant : 6 Cal 394 (P C), Ref.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendant and arises out of a suit for declaration of the plaintiffs' right of way over a piece of land described in the plaint and for removal of the obstruction placed at one end of it by the defendant. There is also a prayer for perpetual injunction for restraining the defendant from obstructing the said pathway. The defence of the defendant to the suit was that there was no such pathway as alleged in the plaint, nor has the right been exercised for a sufficiently long time in order to entitle the plaintiffs to acquire right either by prescription or under the other heads of claim to which I shall presently refer. The Munsif decreed the plaintiffs' suit declaring the plaintiffs' right of easement as claimed in the plaint and directing that the obstruction be removed in execution of the decree. The Munsif decreed in full the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal the Additional District Judge has modified the decree by restricting the right to use the pathway as a footpath. He has disallowed the claim of the plaintiffs to use the pathway as a cart track.

Against this decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the 21-Pargannas modifying the judgment of the Munsif the present appeal has been brought, and three grounds have been taken by Mr. Amarendra Nath Bose who appears for the appellant. The first ground which he takes is that the appellant has been considerably prejudiced by the Courts proceeding on the footing that the plaintiffs claimed a right to this way on the basis of immemorial user. His contention is that if it had been so pleaded he might have made suitable defences to the claim. It becomes therefore necessary to examine the relevant paragraph of the plaint to see if the claim was based on user from which it might be inferred that the user was much in excess of the period of 20 years prescribed by the limitation Act, or in other words, whether there were allegations in the plaint which would lead to the suggestion that the plaintiffs were basing their claim apart from prescription also on immemorial user. Para. 5 is the paragraph which gives the statement of facts on which the cause of action in the present suit is based. In the first part of that paragraph it is stated that the plaintiffs and their ancestors have been using the disputed land as a pathway as of right without interruption for 40 or 50 years, and having thus used it they have acquired a right of way over the disputed land.

It is stated in the second part that they have acquired also a right to this land as an easement of necessity; and thirdly it is stated that they having used the land at any rate for much in excess of 20 years without interruption and in their own right they have acquired easement of way over the disputed land. It is contended for the appellant that although the claim is rested on three heads the first and the third heads merely allege facts which suggest that the claim is founded on prescription and not on immemorial user. It is true and I think the comment is a fair one that the plaint is ill drafted and does not in terms suggest that the right was founded on immemorial user. But to my mind it seems difficult to understand the three heads of claim unless one reads the first head as referring to facts which would lead to the inference of immemorial user from which a grant may be presumed. There is no point in stating that the land had been used by the plaintiffs and their ancestors for a period of 10 or 50 years unless it was intended to convey the impression that apart from the right which is acquired by user of 20 years they have acquired a right by very long user. The learned Judge while dealing with this question says this with reference to the argument that no case of grant was made in the plaint:

"but the case of long user was certainly made though the words 'time immemorial' as the learned Munsif remarks were not used, and the existence of an ancient right derived from grant or otherwise is a presumption."

The pleadings in India have to be construed somewhat liberally notwithstanding the fact that lawyers in general in the mofussil now are more fully equipped than the average mofussili lawyers of half a century or more ago. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have made observations to the effect that pleadings of this country are not to be construed with the same strictness as pleadings in English Courts. It seems to me that although this plaint was drafted by a junior pleader it was revised as appears from the corrections made in the plaint by a pleader of considerable standing. It seems somewhat singular that the words "immemorial user" were not used although facts were alleged to convey the impression that the plaint was founded on the case of immemorial user. It is difficult in the face of the case of Maharani Rajroop Koer v. Abdul Hossain (1) to say that the defendant should be given a further opportunity of meeting the case of immemorial user seeing that the plaintiffs did allege circumstances, namely, the user by themselves and by their ancestors of the land as pathway leading to Rai Bahadur's Rowd for 40 or 50 years. The Judicial Committee in the case to which I have just now referred made observations which are pertinent to the present controversy. Their Lordships stated:

"The object of the statute was to make more easy the establishment of rights of this description, by allowing an enjoyment of 20 years, in covered under the conditions prescribed by the Act, to give, without more, a title to easements. But the statute is remedial, and is neither prohibitory nor exhaustive."

A man may acquire a title under it who has no other right at all, but it does not exclude or interfere with other titles and modes of acquiring easements. Their Lordships think that in this case there is abundant evidence upon the facts found by the Court for presuming the existence of a grant at some distant period of time. The result of the facts which appear in evidence, and the effect of the judgments of the Munsif and of the Subordinate Judge, are thus stated in the judgment of the High Court:

"The evidence shows, and the Courts appear to have found, that the pyne was constructed by the ancestors of the plaintiff a great many years ago, possibly fifty or sixty years certainly more than twenty years for the purpose of irrigation; and it is part of the evidence which indicates that such construction was accompanied with certain advantages on the part of the defendants, which compensated them for any injury or inconvenience caused by the construction of the pyne."

This being an artificial pyne, constructed on the land of another man at the distant period found by the Courts, and enjoyed ever since or at least down to the time of the obstructions complained of by the plaintiff and his ancestors, any Court which had to deal with the subject might, and indeed ought to refer such a long enjoyment to a legal origin, and under the circumstances which have been indicated, to presume a grant or an agreement between those who were owners of the plaintiff's mohal and the defendants' land by which the right was created. That being so, the plaintiff does not require the aid of the statute; and his right therefore is not in any degree interfered with by the provision in S. 27, upon which the Munsif decided. This question which has been raised by Mr. Bose assumes an important aspect as the defendant raised the plea of limitation under the statute and on the facts found it appears that the obstruction was much beyond two years of suit. The plaintiffs rested their case not only on prescription as I have said but on a liberal reading of the plaint on long user which might lead to the inference of lost grant. It is true that the effect of this somewhat ill-drafted plaint has been that the defendant had to pursue his remedies in the lower appellate Court as well as before this Court and there was some ground for his appealing both before the lower appellate Court and this Court. That really is a question of costs which I shall consider hereafter.

Mr. Bose has referred to a number of decisions where it has been held that the question of immemorial user or lost grant must be pleaded in every case before a person can be given relief on that head; and that no doubt seems to be so, as will appear from certain observations of the learned author in Gale on Easements 9th, Edn. 521. The learned author says:

"As the right can be established by the dominant tenement the pleading will state the possession of the tenement by the party, and that by reason thereof he was entitled to the right in question. That whether the action be brought against the servient owner or a stranger, a party cannot safely allege a right to an easement generally, but should state specifically the manner in which he claims title to the easement, whether by grant (actual or lost), prescription at Common law, or under the Prescription Act; and in many cases it is advisable to plead alternatively a title by all three methods."

The learned author further points out that according to modern practice a lost grant if relied on should be pleaded. In this connexion Mr. Bose also referred to Smith v. Baxter (2). If I was of opinion that the plaint could not be construed as containing the allegation of very long user much beyond the period of prescription as prescribed by the Limitation Act I would have remanded the case. It seems to me that it is really due to legal advice that the plaint has been so drafted. The facts are there and it would not be right to allow the defendant further opportunity for he has to meet the case of long user made in the evidence and indicated in the plaint. The user was ever since 1866 when this pathway was shown in a particular document to which the present defendant was a party and the finding is that the user has continued ever since. Of course the Munsif was not very happy in his expression when he says that the oral evidence adduced by both the parties furthers the view that there was such a path and it never came into disuse. I asked Mr. Bose whether there is evidence to show on behalf of the plaintiffs that the pathway was being used for this length of time, and he answered in the affirmative.

It is not necessary in this view to consider the second question raised in this appeal as to whether the plaintiffs can succeed on the ground of easement of necessity as according to the findings of both Courts there is not another though inconvenient way.

The third ground taken is that there is no determination of the question of the width of the pathway. I think there is evidence to show that the width of the pathway was 6 feet and the evidence points to this: that this has been the width ever since 1866. The learned Judge has restricted the pathway to its use as a footpath and to that extent the decision of the Judge is in favour of the defendant.

The appeal must be dismissed. Having regard to the observations which I have made that the plaint is not absolutely clear on the question of immemorial user it is just that the plaintiffs will not have costs either of this Court or of the lower appellate Court. Subject to this slight alteration as to costs the appeal is dismissed.

Judgment.—The appellants have been convicted under S. 19 (f) read with S. 14, Arms Act, and sentenced to periods of imprisonment and fines. The prosecution case is that an officer of the Customs Preventive Service received certain information on 4th January. The information was conveyed to the Superintendent of the Preventive Service who deputed an Indian Officer, Mr. Burman, to act as a bogus purchaser of an automatic pistol.

On the morning of 5th January they proceeded to Prinsep Memorial about 10-45 a. m. and after about an hour they saw the accused Malcolm come up to the memorial. The informer introduced Malcolm to Burman as the vendor and he said that the wished to sell the pistol which he produced. Negotiations then took place. The vendor wanted Rs. 440 for this revolver and another revolver which Malcolm said he had for sale. The bogus purchaser told him that he was willing to give him Rs. 300 for the pair. At this point by an agreed signal two other men from the Customs Department came up and arrested Malcolm. They found the pistol in his pocket. On his being seized he shouted out for the other accused Betteley and they were both brought under arrest and later on produced at the thana where a license which had expired on 31st December was found with Betteley. The suggestion of the prosecution is that the whole of the transaction was illegal inasmuch as the accused intended to make a surreptitious sale to a person who was not entitled to possess the weapon, and that the license had been obtained by Betteley merely for the purpose of enabling him to effect this transaction. Mr. Greenfield, Superintendent, Customs Preventive Service, says that Mr. Mann, another witness, had informed him of the intended sale of the pistol as far back as October 1931, and it was then that he instructed him (Mr. Mann) to get into touch with Mr. Burnan who posed himself as the intending purchaser. It appears that the license for this pistol was not renewed in January. It appears from the statement made by Mr. Burnan in cross-examination that there was no intention of the immediate delivery of the pistol by the accused to him. He says that :

"Malcolm told him that he would deliver both the weapons together and I would pay him them."

As only one weapon was with him, it is clear that the delivery was intended to take place at a subsequent date. In any case as the sale was not completed no offence was committed, as negotiations for sale to a person who has no license is not in itself an offence. An offence under S. 19 (a) of the Act is only committed if the weapon is actually delivered to a person who has not got a license. But there has been an offence committed under S. 19 (f) inasmuch as the accused Betteley had in his possession or under his control an automatic pistol in contravention of the provisions of S. 14, Arms Act, inasmuch as his license had already expired on 31st December. It is true that such delay in the renewal of the license is not ordinarily prosecuted. There is a Rule (No. 82) in the Bengal Government Arms Act Manual to the effect that ordinarily applications received for renewal of license within 30 days after the date of expiry should be granted. But that does not affect the provisions of S. 19 which states that a person who has in his possession arms in contravention of the provisions of S. 14 commits an offence. It has been argued that the word "extent" in S. 14 only refers to territorial extent, and in support of that reference has been made to form 16 and the conditions thereunder (which are found in Sch. 8, Arms Act Rules) in which "extent" in Col. 10 refers to territorial extent only, and condition three there also refers to territorial extent only.

But that does not limit the meaning of the word "extent" in S. 1 Arms Act. It is true that anyone who fails to deposit arms of which license has expired or who is in unlawful possession is also liable under Cl. (i), S. 19, Arms Act. But no authority has been shown to us limiting the meaning of the word "extent" in S. 14 to territorial extent. So that we think that the possession of arms of which the license has not been renewed is also punishable under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, read with S. 14.

As regards the possession of Malcolm we think where a weapon is made over merely for the purpose of negotiating a sale such possession is not unlawful inasmuch as it is not possession of the weapon with the intention of using it as a weapon. Such temporary possession is not possession as contemplated by the Act. We therefore think that Malcolm has not committed an offence under S. 19, Arms Act. In any case, as I have said, negotiations for a sale where no delivery took place would not be an offence. As regards the possession by Betteley we think that he has committed an offence under S. 19, Arms Act, inasmuch as he was admittedly in possession of this weapon after the expiry of the period of his license. Ordinarily under executive instructions no prosecution would result within 30 days. In the present case we agree with the finding of the learned Magistrate that both of the accused were trying to negotiate a sale surreptitiously. Such sales at the present time are highly reprehensible and we think that in the circumstances we would not be justified in not enforcing the provisions of the law as regards the illegal possession of this weapon beyond the period of license. In assessing the punishment for this offence we cannot take into account the intention of the accused to negotiate this illicit sale as part of the offence of retaining unlicensed arms in his possession, and we think for that offence a sentence of a fine of Rs. 50 will be sufficient punishment.

We therefore set aside the sentences which have been passed on both of the accused. We acquit Malcolm but convict Betteley under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months. Malcolm is discharged from his bail bond and Betteley will be discharged from his bail bond on payment of the fine. The appeal is disposed of accordingly.

S. 3—Injury by added peril disentitles workman from compensation.

Rabindra Nath Chaudhuri—for Appellant.

Jatindra Mohan Ghose—for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—This is a workman's appeal against a decision of the Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act rejecting a claim to compensation made on the ground that the applicant sustained an injury on 19th March 1930 while working in the spinning department of a cotton mill. The applicant's case is that he was a piecer, that his duty was to tie broken ends of cotton threads, that while he was standing by the machine and putting a bobbin on a spindle the bottom of his dhoti got caught between two rollers which were underneath the table of the machine and he says that the bottom of his dhoti having been caught between the two rollers was pulled in, that he put out his hand to try to pull it out and that in that way his hand got crushed. It seems that as a result of the injury his arm had to be amputated an inch or two below the shoulder. The employers make the case that it was quite impossible for a person standing by the machine and either putting a bobbin on a spindle or doing his proper work as a piecer to get his dhoti caught between the two rollers in the manner alleged. It is further said that at the time of the accident the applicant said both to the doctor and to the manager that he had got his arm crushed in a different way altogether, namely that he was trying to remove a torn spindle banding from the tin rollers while they were in motion. It was no part of the applicant's duty to interfere with the tin rollers. It is not contended that it was any part of his duty to take out any torn spindle banding from the tin rollers. The tin rollers were underneath the table altogether and the underneath part of the table was fenced off in the manner which has been described so that it would be necessary, to get one's hand into the tin roller to stoop down and reach out underneath the table.

The learned Commissioner had several witnesses called before him for the applicant. There is the applicant's own evidence as to his dhoti being caught by a roller. There were fellow workers with him who came and said that they saw his dhoti caught in the roller. But some of the corroborative witnesses appear to have been of a very poor quality and some of them also do not profess to have seen the actual commencement of the accident. Against that there was the evidence of the doctor and the evidence of the manager, and the learned Commissioner on two occasions examined the machine very carefully for himself. He has come to the conclusion—and from his description of the machine it is evidently very clear—that the story that the dhoti got caught between the rollers when he was standing by the machine attending to his duties is entirely impossible and must be disbelieved altogether, it not being possible for the dhoti to have got caught in that way. That is a finding of fact based upon his own examination of the machine, but it can be seen by this Court to be very well based indeed by reason of the description of the machine given by the Commissioner. That being so the Commissioner says:

"I do not believe that the accident happened through the applicant's dhoti being drawn into the machine. His case that it arose out of his employment is based upon this and I see no other way in which it could have arisen out of his employment, though it might very easily have happened as stated by the opposite party."

Now, one way to deal with a case of this character would be for the learned Commissioner to state his findings as to what the applicant's employment or duties were—what he was engaged to do; and then to go on to state his finding as to how the accident, in fact, happened. The learned Commissioner's judgment has given a good deal of trouble by reason that it does not follow this course. It does not state properly what the duties of the applicant were. It is not expressly stated whether the Commissioner was satisfied that rules were made or orders given that these pieces were not to meddle with the machinery while in motion. As, however, that is admitted by the applicant in his evidence, it does not very much matter. It is much to be wished however that the Commissioner had come to some more specific findings of fact as to how the accident happened. If the story as to the dhoti being caught is disbelieved, the applicant is found to be basing his case upon a false story. In that case one asks oneself why should not the evidence of the doctor and the manager be believed? It does not appear to me that the statement "though it might very easily have happened as stated by the opposite party" is a sufficient statement in the circumstances. The difficulty in dealing with the question whether the accident arose out of his employment without finding how the accident arose and going carefully into the limitations that had been put on the duties of the applicant is very considerable. In one case, for example, Mrs. Margaret Thom, or Simpson v. Sinclair (1), (though it was not a case quite of the present character) it was said by Lord Shaw of Dunfermline:

"I think that the statute is not satisfied by asking the question as to whether the nature of the employment of the injured person had any causal relation to the accident, because it is clear that in very many instances the accident arose out of the employment as such, apart from the particular nature of the service which the injured workman had to render";

and in another passage the same learned Lord says:

"My view of the statute is that the expression 'arising out of the employment' is not confined to 'the mere nature of the employment.' The expression, in my opinion, applies to the employment as such to its nature, its conditions, its obligations and its incidents. If by reason of any of these the workman is brought within the zone of special danger and so injured or killed, it appears to me that the broad words of the statute 'arising out of the employment' apply. If the peril which he encountered was not an added peril produced by the workman himself, as in the cases of Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. (2) and Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co. (3) in this House then a case for compensation under the statute appears to arise."

I cannot say therefore that I am at all satisfied with the observation "I see no other way in which it could have arisen out of his employment"; and if the question before us was a question to be decided merely by criticism of the learned Commissioner's judgment there would be a great deal to be said for the applicant. We have however to consider this case as a whole. If a substantial question of law arises we are entitled to do so on points of fact as well as on points of law. From this standpoint it appears to me plain enough that this is one of those cases where it is shown that the injuries arose to the applicant by reason of what has been described in the language I have just quoted as "an added peril produced by the workman himself." Similar cases may be found in the books. The case to which reference was made in the case cited is the case of Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. (2); and the principle that has often been laid down may be stated in the language of Lord Dunedin (quoting and adopting Lord Loreburn) thus:

"Nor can you deny him compensation on the ground only that he was injured through breaking rules. But if the thing he does imprudently or disobediently is different in kind from anything he was required or expected to do and also is put outside the range of his service by a genuine prohibition, then I should say that the accidental injury did not arise out of his employment."

Without entering into any question whether this boy was guilty of such wilful conduct as is mentioned in S. 3, sub-S. 1 (b), Workmen's Compensation Act of 1923, I am satisfied that the duties of a piecer do not include anything which requires his getting down underneath the table and interfering with the tin rollers while they are in motion. According to the applicant's own statement of his duties they do not include anything of the kind. His own version of his duty is that he has to join ends of threads when the machine is in motion; and the underneath part of the table is fenced to keep him out. Therefore his story as to the dhoti being caught while he was merely standing by the machine being found to be impossible, the applicant is, in the particular circumstances of this case, under the very strongest suspicion of having been doing something underneath the table which he desires to conceal because it was altogether outside his function. I see no reason at all why the evidence of the doctor or the manager as to what the lad was doing should not be accepted. I do not know why the learned Commissioner has not said that he would accept it or does not give some reason for not accepting it. In my judgment it is proved on the facts of this case that the injury was occasioned by an added peril which the lad brought about by interfering unnecessarily with a fenced-off part of the machine while it was working. In these circumstances the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Jogesh Chandra Roy, Rupendra Coomar Mitter, Bankim Chandra Banerjee and Nirmal Chandra Chakravarti—for Appellants.

D. N. Chakravarty, Sarat Chandra Basak, Gunada Charan Sen, Prakash Chandra Mazumdar and Ashita Ranjan Ghose—for Respondents.

Mitter, J.—Four main questions fall for determination in this appeal by the plaintiffs: (1) whether the plaintiffs have established their title to the fishery known as the Bikrampur Jalkar in the tidal and navigable river Padma; (2) what is the boundary between their jalkar and the respondents' (defendants 1 to 5) fishery known as the Mukundia Jalkar; (3) whether the plaintiffs have lost their title by adverse possession of the defendants to the portion of the fishery now in dispute and (4) what is the legal effect of the proceedings of 1816, 1843 and of the award of the arbitrator in certain suits instituted in 1909. The principal contestants to the appeal are Raja Janaki Nath Roy, a gentleman possessed of considerable wealth and his nephews.

In this action plaintiffs claimed a decree for recovery of joint possession with their co-sharers to the extent of their three annas two gundas one kara one kranti one danti shares in that portion of the fishery which is described in Sch. 2 to the plaint after declaration of their title as proprietors to the fishery described in Sch. 1 to the plaint of which the property in Sch. 2 is claimed as forming a part. The plaintiffs also rested their claim to the disputed portion of the fishery on the ground of adverse possession for more than the statutory period of 12 years. In the alternative they claimed that if the right to the disputed fishery (jalkar) be not established on the ground of their title as proprietors or on the ground of adverse possession they may be given a declaration that they have acquired "a right of easement and prescriptive right on the ground that they have been holding possession of the said right in succession to their predecessors for upwards of 60 years openly, peaceably, uninterruptedly and as of right."

They also claimed a decree for the sum of Rs. 536-10-3 as their share of the profits of the disputed jalkar during the pendency of the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., which had been withdrawn by the defendants and also claimed tentatively the sum of

Rs. 1,600 as mesne profits. The plaintiffs failed before the Subordinate Judge of Dacca. Hence this appeal to this Court.

The case as stated in the plaint is that there is a jalkar mehal described in Sch. 1 to the plaint known by the names of Nadi Padmabati, Balabanta Narhi Korha and others, that this jalkar mehal was in very ancient times an independent jalkar, that it was subsequently incorporated in zamindari 1 of the touzi of the Collectorate of Dacca and the Sadar jama of the said zamindari was fixed at Rs. 1,222-8-4 that the boundaries of the jalkar portion now in dispute is given in Sch. 2 of the plaint; that one-third of the jalkar formed the howla of Shamdas Pal within the said zamindari and the remaining two-thirds of the jalkar remained in the khas possession of the maliks; that the zamindari stood in the name of Raj Krishna Roy; that it was sold for arrears of Government revenue on 24th August 1832 (Bhadra 1239 B. S.) and was purchased in the name of Prem Chand Roy, father of Raja Sreenath Roy, defendant 1, who died pending this action and Raja Janaki Nath Roy (defendant 2) and grandfather of defendants 3 and 4, Jadu Nath Roy and Priya Nath Roy and Iswar Chand Desmukhya in equal shares; that the eight annas purchased by Prem Chand was for the benefit of himself and his three uterine brothers Guru Prosad Roy, Hari Prosad Roy and Chaitanya Das Roy, that Iswar Chandra sold his eight annas share of the zamindari to Trilochan Chatterjee who in turn sold the eight annas to the Pal Choudhuries of Lohajung; that the Pal Choudhuries and others dispossessed the Roy Choudhuries from a portion of the jalkar described in Sch. 1 and a suit was instituted by Prem Chand Roy for recovery of joint possession of the disputed portion of the jalkar and was fought up to the Sadar Dewany Adawlut and was decreed with mesne profits; that the plaintiffs as well as defendants 1 to 5 are descendants of the Roy Chowdhuries and plaintiffs have got certain shares in the jalkar which are detailed in paras. 13, 14 and 15 of the plaint.

The plaint proceeds to refer to several proceedings in support of their title and possession, viz., Suit No. 22 of 1851, in the Court of the Principal Sudder Amin of Dacca, the resumption proceedings of 1861, Suit No. 374 of 1864 in the Court of the Munsif of Narayangunge against the Government and the ijaradars of the Government, and rely on the principle of equitable estoppel against defendants 1 to 5 on the basis of what transpired in the course of these suits and proceedings. It is not necessary to refer to the history of these suits and proceedings now, as they will have to be referred to in detail hereafter. In para. 7 of the plaint the plaintiffs refer to certain demarcation proceedings under Act 5 of 1875 and refer to important admissions alleged to have been made by the principal defendants or their predecessors in the petition of objection as to the description of the upstream limit of the plaintiffs' jalkar now in dispute. The plaintiffs then proceed to state that with regard to a portion of the jalkar described in Sch. 1, to the plaint which is marked as A, B, C, D in the sketch map attached to the plaint and which lay within the district of Faridpur proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., were started and the first party to the said proceedings were the principal defendants 1 and 2 and Roy Sitanath Roy father of defendants 3 and 4 and the principal defendant 6 and some other persons and plaintiff 7 and the predecessor of some of the plaintiffs and some cosharer pro forma defendants were the second party to the said proceedings and the jalkar was attached under S. 145, Criminal P. C.

The plaint further states that in those proceedings the first party described the portion marked A, B, C, D in the annexed map as included in mehal char Mukundia bearing Touzi No. 4,000 of the Faridpore Collectorate and the second party described the said portion of the jalkar as included in Sch. 1, and appertaining to Zamindary No. 1, Raj Krishna Roy; that aggrieved by the order of attachment three title suits were instituted, one by some of the principal defendants (which includes some of their predecessors), the second by some of the present plaintiffs (which term includes their predecessors as well) and the third by the Pal defendants in different Courts in Faridpur and all these were referred to the arbitration of Mr. Sarada Charan Mitra, formerly a Judge of the High Court of Calcutta, who after taking evidence given an award, that by the said award he decided that the ujan (upstream) simana (limit) of the jalkar described in Sch. 1, of this plaint was the ujan simana and was represented by the line E F as in the map annexed to the plaint and held that the plaintiffs and the cosharer defendants were entitled to the portion of the jalkar marked A, B, C, D in the annexed map and the Court ordered a decree to be made on the said award and the appeal against the said award was dismissed, that the principal defendants are bound by the decision in the title suits and are estopped from questioning the findings in the said suit by reason of the rule of res judicata. The plaint next alleges that in the year 1917 another proceeding was started under S. 145, Criminal P. C., in respect of the jalkar now in dispute in which the plaintiffs pro forma defendants 15 to 24 were the first party and the principal defendants were the second party and the Magistrate decided that the second party were entitled to the possession of the same by his order dated 31st October 1918, that during the pendency of the 145 case the disputed jalkar was attached and Rs. 2750 was collected from the said Mehal by making settlement by auction and this sum was deposited in the Dacca criminal Court and was unjustly withdrawn by the defendants.

The order of the criminal Court has given rise to the cause of action for the suit which was brought on 30th September 1921 within three years from the date of the order under S. 145 of the Code. In para 10 of the plaint the plaintiffs say that they and their predecessors in interest have been in adverse possession of the jalkar for upwards of 70 years and have also acquired a right by adverse possession. In para 11 of the plaint the plaintiffs alleged that plaintiffs and their predecessors have continued to hold possession of the jalkar as of right, peacefully, unobstructedly without any interruption for 70 years on receiving rents, kabuliats and fish from the dealers in fish, by granting ijara settlements for a term fixed to them, and by holding the same in khas possession and they have acquired a prescriptive right and right by easement therein. On these allegations plaintiffs ask for the reliefs mentioned in the beginning of the judgment. Nothing further need be said about plaintiffs' claim based on "prescriptive right and right by easement" as the claim on this basis has been abandoned in this Court. Several of the defendants filed their written defences but as they generally follow the same lines it is sufficient to set forth the defence raised in the written statement of the principal defendants 1 to 4.

These defendants contend (1) that the suit is barred by limitation; (2) they admit that the plaintiffs, defendants 1 to 5, the defendant 15 and defendants 16 to 35 have got Zamindari right in Zamindari 1, Raj Krishna Roy and defendants 16 to 94 have got howla right in one-third share of the Howla Shamdas Pal but they deny that the jalkar (fishery) described as lying within the boundaries mentioned in Sch. 1, in its entirety and the jalkar described in Sch. 2 are included in the said Zamindari 1 on the Howla Shyamdas Pal; (3) they deny all knowledge of the revenue sale of the Zamindari 1, Raj Krishna Roy in the month of Bhadra 1239 B.S. They deny the possession of Prem Chand and Desmukhya in the disputed jalkar, on the other hand they say that the Zamindar of Char Mukundia had been in possession of the disputed jalkar even from before the permanent settlement and the maliks of Zamindari 1 had not been in possession; (4) they contend that they are not bound by the decision in Suit No. 22 of 1851, by the resumption proceedings of 1831 as the proprietors of Char Mukundia (their predecessors) were no party to the said two decisions; (5) they contend that they are not bound by the decision in the suit brought by their ancestor Prem Chand Roy against Pal Babus and Gopi Mohan Sen inasmuch as the owner of char Mukundia, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants were no parties to the suit and this decision is no evidence against them; (6) they contend that neither the decision in Suit No. 22 of 1851 nor the statements of the plaintiffs in the said suit can be used as evidence against them as the owner of Char Mukundia was not party to the said suit; (7) they contend that the statements of plaintiffs predecessors cannot be used in their favour; (8) they say that in the demarcation proceedings of 1903 neither defendants 1 and 2 nor the father of defendants 3 and 4 made any statements or sign any papers and that the statements were made by the ijmal officers who acted under the direction of the plaintiffs; (9) they do not admit the accuracy of the map filed with the plaint; (10) they say that the arbitrator did not decide the question of the boundary between the two jalkars and allege that the subject matter of the dispute in respect of which the award was given became dry chur immediately after the decision of the proceedings under S. 145 which gave rise to the three title suits which culminated in the award; they contend that the award cannot operate as res judicata on the question of boundary.

(11) They contend further that neither the maliks of zamindari No. 1 nor those of Howla Shamdas Pal ever acquired any indefeasible right by adverse possession to the disputed jalkar. They next raise the defence that the plaintiffs the pro-forma defendants and the principal defendants 1 to 5 jointly own and possess the jalkar as lying within the boundaries of Sch. 1 excluding therefrom the boundaries of the Sch. 2 and the jalkar lying to the south thereof. These defendants then proceed to set forth their own title to the jalkar of Char Mukundia. There was a zamindari Char Mukundia and others Sarkar Fyzabad and others and there was a several fishery called Nadi Balabanta Bil Baor in the public tidal navigable river Padma, Padmabati or Ganges. These two separate mehals carried separate jamas; afterwards they were incorporated into one Touzi, viz., 110 at the time of the permanent settlement which has become touzi 4000 of the Faridpur Collectorate. It carries a Sadar jama of Rs. 3,142-10-3. The devolution of the zamindari from Maharaja Ram Krishna Roy to Mr. J. P. Wise is shown in the following chart.

Mr. Wise on whom the zamindari devolved eventually granted a Patni settlement in respect of the jalkar mahal to Girish Chandra Guha in 1279 B.S.—

1872 A. D. Girish Chandra had 10 annas 8 pies share in the patni. Bepin had the remaining 5 annas 4 pies in the same. Girish mortgaged his 10 annas 8 pies share of the patni to Raja Sreenath Roy, Raja Janaki Nath Roy and Rai Sita Nath Roy Bahadur, father of defendants 3 and 4, and in execution of the mortgage decree the mortgagees purchased the 10 annas 8 pies share of Girish in the patni in the year 1882 and took possession of the same in the same year and the remaining 5 annas 4 pies share are in ownership and possession of defendants 5 to 9. Mr. Wise sold the zamindari interest and the jalkar right to one Mr. David and defendants 1 and 2 and father of defendants 3 and 4 purchased the same from the Administrator General when David's estate had been in his hands in the year 1301 B. S.=1894 A. D.

Defendants 1 and 4 give in a schedule attached to the written statement the boundaries of their jalkar which is known as Nadi Balawanta a local name for river Padma. They contend that the allegation that upstream of the jalkar claimed by the plaintiffs was Bangabaria and Narikelberia is false. They refer to a case under Regn. 49 of 1793 between plaintiffs' and defendants' predecessor by which it was decided that the downstream limit of their jalkar extended upto the south of Char Sahabdi, they contend that decree of 1816 inter partes operates as res judicata on the question of boundaries between the two jalkars. The upstream limit of the Bikrampur Jalkar they say has never been on the upstream side of the southern boundary of the said Char Sahabdi. They contend that they are not bound by the proceedings in the suit between Prem Chand Roy, their ancestor, as owner of the Bikrampur Jalkar and his co-sharer the Pal Babus and Gopi Mohan Sen. They insist that the plaintiffs have no right to the jalkar claimed by them on the upstream side of the mouth of river Satar. They contend that they have been in adverse possession of the jalkar described in Sch. 2 to the plaint for more than hundred years and have acquired a title by adverse possession. They say that the father of the defendants 1 and 2 or the grandfather of defendants 3 and 4 had no right to the Mukundia Jalkar before their purchase of the patni right and whatever right they had to the jalkar mentioned in Sch. 2 of the plaint as co-sharers of the plaintiffs in the Bikrampur Jalkar have been extinguished by adverse possession for 100 years and knowing this these defendants purchased on 17th Aswin 1289 B. S. (1882 A.D.) 10 annas and 8 pies share of the patni right of Girish Gula under the owner of Char Mukundia and subsequently purchased the entire maliki right in 1301=1894 and have been in adverse possession in both the said patni and zamindari rights for upwards of 12 years against the owners of the Bikrampur Jalkar. Defendants 6 to 9 take the same line of defence except that they deny the title of the plaintiffs to the Bikrampur Jalkar. On these pleadings several issues were framed.

They are to be found at p. 161, B K A. It will not be necessary to refer in detail to all the issues as the controversy has been considerably narrowed down before the Court. I will deal first with the question of the title of the plaintiffs to the Bikrampur Jalkar. The first part of issue 20 is as follows: Have the plaintiffs any independent or several fishery in the Padma? On this issue the Subordinate Judge decided against the plaintiffs and he seems to be of opinion that the plaintiffs must fail as they have not produced a grant from the Crown or have proved a lost grant. The burden is undoubtedly on the plaintiffs to show that the Bikrampur fishery has come to them under a valid and effectual grant from the Crown which has been sustained by the continuous use and employment of themselves, and their co-sharers and their predecessors. It is now well settled that title to an exclusive fishery in a tidal, navigable river can be established by proving an express grant or by giving evidence that a grant though not capable of being produced will be presumed. Bearing this in mind we proceed to discuss whether plaintiffs have established the title to the fishery which they describe in their plaint. They say, as has been stated already, that their jalkar was an independent jalkar and was included in zamindari of touzi No. 1 of the Collectorate of the district of Dacca and the Sudder jama of the said zamindari No. 1 along with the said jalkar was fixed at Rs. 1,222-8-4. A one-third share of the jalkar formed the Hqwla Shamdus Pal for which a fixed jama was payable to the maliks of the said zamindari and the remaining two-thirds share was held in khas possession by the maliks who used to enjoy the same by granting leases to fishermen. This is not now disputed by the defendants-respondents.

This zamindari, the plaintiffs allege, was sold at auction for arrears of Government revenue in Bhadra 1239 B. S. 1832, when it was purchased in the names of Prem Chand Roy Choudhury and Iswar Chandra Das Mukhya in equal shares. The purchase is not disputed, but what is disputed is that the purchase was not at a revenue sale, a matter to which we shall return hereafter. The purchase by Premchand in respect of the eight annas share is not disputed. It is not disputed that the purchase was for the benefit of Premchand and his three brothers, the predecessor of the plaintiffs and defendant 5. The following genealogical tree shows the relationship between plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 5.

It appears that plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 5 jointly owned the 8 annas share of the jalkar which was settled with touzi No. 1. There is no dispute as to shares of the plaintiffs in the jalkar whatever the limits of the jalkar are determined to be and therefore we have not thought it necessary to detail the shares of the plaintiffs and defendants respectively in the said jalkar. In this case it is true that no grants from the Government in the shape of pattas have been produced. But that fact will not affect plaintiffs' title if circumstances exist from which such a grant can be inferred. In dealing with this question it is important to remember what has been said by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sreenath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (1), where the title of the defendants in the Mukundia Jalkar was challenged by the Sens. At p. 227 (of 41 I. A.) their Lordships said this: "Although, on the other hand, when Government has created a separate estate of jalkar at the period in question it is usual to find some entry of it in the decennial settlement papers, no evidence was forthcoming to show that jalkar grants made prior to the decennial settlement or that settlements with zamindars made at the time of it must necessarily have taken the form of pattas or some other muniments which should now be in the zamindar's possession, or be recorded in the Government archives still in existence. In practice such original grants are but rarely forthcoming now, and resort must be had to secondary evidence of them, or to the inference of a legal origin to be drawn from long user: (Garth, C. J., in Haridas Mal v. Mahommed Jaki (2)."

In the case before us such secondary evidence exists and it is of such a character that we have no hesitation in saying that such a grant should be inferred. Indeed such a grant was recognized by the Government. In a proceeding between the Government and the proprietors of the Bikrampore Jalkar Government recognized that the Bikrampore Jalkar whose upstream limit was Dookhali belonged to the predecessors of the present plaintiffs and had been in existence from before 1195 B. S., prior to the date of the permanent settlement of 1793. It appears that in the year 1861 the Government assessed rent in respect of that portion of the Bikrampore jalkar from Bagra to Khaliya Bagra, a portion downstream of the portion of the jalkar now in dispute and Premchand Roy, predecessor of defendants 1 to 4 and Harilal Roy predecessor of defendant 5, as well as the plaintiffs' predecessors objected to the assessment and claimed that their jalkar whose upstream limit was the peepul tree or aswatha tree in the house of Kaimuddi Chakladar of Jonojat on the northern bank of the river and the house of Sadananda Guha of Deokhali on the southern bank and the downstream limit was Dadpur and Matibhanga, etc., was their jalkar from before the date of the permanent settlement and should be released from assessment and their objection was allowed. The Deputy Collector was satisfied from the papers which consisted of decrees of Courts and a certain kobala of the year 1195 B. S., that Nadi Padmabati of defendants 1 to 9 which included Premchand Roy was not excluded in the decennial settlement from the Bikrampore zamindari No. 1 Raj Krishna Roy which admittedly belong to the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 5: see B. K. B/188 Rubakari Ex. 17 (c). This decision was affirmed by the Commissioner on 24th April 1862.

Apart from this there was dispute between the proprietors of Bikrampore Jalkar and the Mukundia Jalkar regarding the boundaries between the two jalkars so far back as the year 1197 B. S., as will appear from the Rubakari of civil Court of District Jalalpur, Ex. H B K B, p. 51 and this is undoubted evidence that the right of the proprietors of the Bikrampore zamindari was recognized by the proprietors of Char Mukundia zamindari and the dispute was as to the boundaries: see B L B, p. 55 1 to 10. Indeed it is admitted before us by Mr. Dwarkanath Chakravarty who appears for the Raja defendants that the Bikrampore zamindars had a jalkar downstream of the Mukundia Jalkar and the same admission is made before us by Mr. Gunada Charan Sen who appears for defendants 5 to 9. Plaintiff's predecessor as well as the brothers of Premchand the predecessor of defendants 1 to 4 purchased the Bikrampore fishery at a revenue sale in the year 1832=1239 B. S. The defendants while admitting the purchase of the Bikrampore Jalkar by Premchand for himself and his brothers deny that the purchase was made at a sale for arrears of Government Revenue. Indeed it is too late now to raise the contention for it appears from a decision of the year 1852 of the Principal Sudder Amin of Dacca in which Premchand Roy was the plaintiff and the Collector of Dacca on behalf of the Government was the defendant it was asserted by Premchand Roy that he had along with Desmukhya defendant purchased the Bikrampore zamindari at a revenue sale in the month of Bhadra 1239 B. S., corresponding to 1832: see Ex. 16 dated 15th June 1852 Book B-87 (bottom) and that position was accepted by the Court and the plaintiff obtained a decree against the Government. It is certain that this is good evidence of the assertion by Premchand of his purchase at a revenue sale. If Premchand was not a revenue sale purchaser the fact would at once have been challenged by the Government. Indeed the denial of defendants 1 to 4 in this behalf is very evasive for they say in para. 4 of the written statement that they are not aware of the revenue purchase. It is difficult indeed for defendants 1 to 4 to say that their ancestor Premchand was making an untrue assertion in this respect in 1852, and the written statement is therefore put in that evasive form. The Subordinate Judge says that the decree Ex. 16 of 1852 where there is recital about the revenue purchase by Premchand Roy is not admissible in evidence against the owners of Mukundia Jalkar as they were no parties to the said suit. That decree Ex. 16 although not inter partes is admissible in evidence as evidence of a transaction within the meaning of S. 13, Evidence Act. It is too late now to contend after the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Ramranjan Chakravarty v. Ram Narain Singh (3) that the decree is not admissible in evidence against the defendants. We are unable to follow the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge:

"that the recital is in first part of the decree and the defendants rightly question its binding effect: see B. K. A., p. 520, 115."

In the absence of any evidence to the contrary and having regard to the fact that the recital is to be found in a very ancient document (1852) by the ancestor of defendants 1 to 4 and having regard to the evasive nature of the written statements of defendants 1 to 4, we are of opinion that plaintiffs have proved the purchase of the Bikrampore Jalkar by Premchand at the revenue sale.

Mr. Jogesh Chandra Roy appearing for the plaintiffs-appellants have admitted the title of defendants 1 to 4 in the Char Mukundia Jalkar and have admitted that the said jalkar appertains to Touzi No. 4,000 of the Collectorate of the District of Faridpur.

The question of boundaries is the more difficult. This dispute regarding boundaries between the two jalkars commenced in very ancient times. The proceedings of those times are fortunately on the record of this case. We are of opinion that the decision of the years 1816 and 1843, Ex. H (B/54) and Ex. C B B K B-68 should form the basis of our decision on the question of boundaries. (His Lordship then considered the evidence and proceeded.) It is very difficult to say at this distance of time that possession of the fishery was exercised up to that limit and it seems less consistent with probabilities that after the defeat of the plaintiff's predecessor in the suit of 1843 the Mukundia Zamindars would allow the Bikrampur Zamindars to exercise possession on that portion of the fishery from which they have been dispossessed by the decree of 1816 and the delivery of possession by the Munsif Kashi Nath. As pointed out by Lord O'Hagan in the Scotch case of Lord Advocate v. Lord Lovat (4) the course of conduct which the proprietor might be expected to follow with regard to his own interests must be taken into account in determining the sufficiency of a possession of the fishery. (His Lordship then considered the leases granted by the proprietors and proceeded.) Repeated assertions of title in ancient documents being mere recitals are no evidence of what is there recited though actual possession in conformity therewith would constitute a prima facie title: see Bristow v. Li. Cormican (5).

For the purpose of establishing title to the upstream of the Deokhali-Sahebdi line up to which plaintiffs' title has been established it becomes incumbent on the plaintiffs to establish by clear and convincing evidence that actual possession was in accordance with their assertion. We are of opinion that such evidence is lacking in the present case. We do not see any reason to doubt the authenticity of these leases and kabulyats or counter parts of leases. The plaintiffs were certainly entitled to grant leases up to the Deokhali Sahebdi line up to which their upstream limit had been determined and they actually granted these leases but in doing so they made assertions of a larger boundary of their Jalkar than they were entitled to.

In dealing with these ancient leases and kabulyats we are not unmindful of what was said by the House of Lords in the case just cited, Bristow v. Cormican (5), Lord Chancellor Cairns in delivering his speech said that these old leases have always been considered to be admissible as being evidence of acts of ownership. I understand this to rest on the principle that when at a distant period, as to which there is no more direct evidence available, you find a person claiming to be the owner of property, and willing to make himself as lessor for title to it, and another person willing to agree to give rent for the property and to enter into a solemn engagement as a tenant of it, admitting his landlord's title to it these circumstances are themselves admissible as evidence of title. They are real transactions between man and man, not intelligible except on the footing of title or at least an honest belief in title. The payment of rent under such a lease is a further and additional fact also admissible as evidence on the same principle: p. 652-3 (Appeal cases). But the matter in controversy before us is whether plaintiffs had made out such a possessory title to the fishing in that part of the fishery which lies upstream of the Deokhali-Sahebdi limit as to entitle them to sue the defendants for trespass to that part of the Jalkar. (His Lordship then again considered the evidence of leases and holding that it was insufficient proceeded.) It is next argued for the plaintiffs that the defendants are precluded from contending that the upstream limit of their Jalkar was not on the northern bank, the peepul tree standing at the Bari of Keamuddi Chakladar of Janajat, and the same having been diluviated the Khal of Debinagore in the same line with the above, on the southern bank of the river, the peepul tree on the south of the Bari of Sada Nanda Guha of Deokhali by reason of the award of Mr. Sarada Charan Mitra C. 267 which was given in Suits Nos. 37 of 1909 and 51 of 1909 and No. 8 of 1909 which were inter partes on the principle of res judicata. The award was made part of the decrees in those suits. It becomes necessary therefore to examine the decision and the pleadings in those cases and the circumstances which led to the reference to arbitration which resulted in the award. A proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., was started on 15th July 1905 in respect of the portion of the Jalkar which lay within the boundaries A B C D as shown in the sketch map attached to the plaint: see Vol. B, Map 1. The boundaries of A B C D are North. The line drawn from Bari of Arjan Khan Munshi of Nanda Dalapur and Char Amirabad on the west bank of the river towards the East up to the main current. South, the line drawn from the Bari of Habib Ulla Ukil on the western bank of the river towards the East up to main current in the same line. East, main current. West, from the Bari of Arjan Khan Munshi of Char Amirabad Nandalpur up to the Bari Habibulla. See plaint of Raja in Suit No. 8 (C 181). The plaintiffs and the defendants and their ijaradars were parties to these proceedings. The Magistrate was unable to find out which of the parties were in actual possession and attached the portion of the Jalkar within those boundaries till a competent civil Court decided between the rights of the parties. The Raja defendants instituted Suit No. 8 of 20th February 1908 in the Court of Subordinate Judge of Faridpur alleging the downstream limit of their Jalkar to be the Koshabhanga and Satar line see plaint (C-174 181) whereas the plaintiffs brought Suit No. 37 alleging their upstream limit the Janajat (which after diluviation had become the site of Debinagar Khal) and Deokhali line: see (C. 279 290) and Chandra Benode Pal and others instituted Suit No. 51. The issues in Title Suit No. 8 of 1909 in which the Raja defendants were plaintiffs were nine in number. Issue 8 ran as follows: "Whether the disputed Jalkar is within the limits of plaintiffs (Rajas) Mahal Char Mukundia. If not can the plaintiffs get any relief?"

All the matters in dispute were referred with the consent of all parties to the arbitration of Mr. Sarada Charan Mitra a former Judge of the High Court after he had resigned office and he gave an award declaring that the pur belonging to all the landlord parties as claimed in Suit No. 37 of 1909 (present plaintiff's suit) and not a part of the Zamindari Char Mukundia as claimed by the plaintiffs in Suit No. 8 of 1909. No objection was taken in time by the Raja defendants to this award and the award was confirmed and decrees followed on this award: see B K C p. 269. The Raja defendants preferred appeals to the Court of the District Judge of Faridpur and the learned District Judge (the late Mr. Garlick) in dismissing the appeal used rather hard expressions and said that the appeal was "an immoral appeal" and that the making of the appeal was a dishonest breach of a binding agreement."

"Jalkar in dispute in the three cases was part and parcel of the zamindari known as Bikram-

The result was that the decrees on the award became final. It is contended for the plaintiffs that these decrees operate as res judicata and bar the defence that the down-stream limit of the Mukundia Jalkar was the Koshabhanga Satar line or as has been put by the plaintiffs' learned advocate they discredit the Koshabhanga line. The portion of the fishery, the subject-matter of the suits is not included in the portion now in dispute. The rule of res judicata as embodied in S. 11, Civil P. C., 1908, does not depend upon the identity of the subject-matter but it depends on the identity of the issues. The difficulty in arriving at a conclusion on this part of the case is that the learned arbitrator has not recorded his finding on the issue as to what was the downstream limit of the defendant's Jalkar. If he had done so, the matter undoubtedly would have been res judicata. It is contended for the plaintiffs that no decision would have been given for the plaintiffs unless the learned Judge was of opinion that the Koshabhanga line was not the downstream limit of the defendant's Jalkar or which comes to the same thing, the upstream limit of the plaintiffs' Jalkar. In order to consider whether a previous decision is res judicata or not the substantial effect of what has been decided in the case has to be considered. It seems to me that the decrees are conclusive to this extent that the downstream limit of the defendant's Jalkar must be above the line where the line D C in the sketch map cuts the river, but it is not res judicata on the question that any portion above that line is the upstream limit of the plaintiff's Jalkar. (His Lordship then considered the evidence and holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove adverse possession beyond Deokhali-Sahebdi line proceeded to consider the commissioner's map.) It is argued for defendants 6 to 9 that the location of Sabdy char by the commissioner is obviously incorrect on the face of Renel's map G-13 for it comes between Bowhapur and Nasseygur but it is shown by the commissioner on the north of Nasipur.

Not a single question was put to the commissioner in cross-examination in this behalf and it is easy to propound riddles before the Court of appeal. Renel's map indicated correctly the course of rivers but it cannot be regarded as giving correctly the direction of villages for the method adopted for ascertaining village was by gun and sound, an extremely unscientific method, which makes reliance upon it difficult for the purpose of ascertaining true direction of villages. It is next argued that the river in 1819 at the time of delivery of possession by Kashi Nath was flowing north to south and Sahebdi char was to the east of Deokhali and in a line with Deokhali, Chaudharasi and Harina as appears from the statement of the plaintiffs in the suit which led to the rubakari of 1843, and then it is said that we know the positions of the three villages there can be no escape from the position that Sabdy char must be to the east of Deokhali and not towards its north-east. For what was once in the east of a particular village must always remain towards the east however the course of the river may change. But we are not troubled with this consideration seeing that between 1819 and 1840, when the suit was filed by plaintiff's predecessor, the river was flowing east to west and we have the relative positions of Deokhali and Sahebdi with the changed course of the river, one to the south of the other. We have got the relative position of the villages with reference to the changed course of the river from the statements made by the Mukundia Zamindars at a time much nearer their ken, and it transpires from their statement that Sahebdi char was on the northern bank of the river in 1843, while Deokhali was on the southern bank. There is no substance in the argument that Sahebdi was on the eastern bank at the time of the delivery of possession by Kashi Nath in 1819=1226 B. S. Whatever the relative position was in 1819 we have got this: that in 1843 when the river was flowing east to west Sahebdi char was on the north of Deokhali and that is the present position as shown in the Commissioner's map. If therefore we join point No 160 of the Commissioner's map which is the site of Asawtha tree to a point slightly to the north of the northernmost Sabdy char shown in burnt-sienna colour in the Commissioner's map and produce it towards the river we find the line cuts a point between stations 7 and 8 on the southern bank and station No. 28 on the northern bank of the present flowing river Padma and we think that the upstream limit of the plaintiff's jalkar is the line which joins a point between stations 7 and 8 to station No. 28 on the opposite bank of the river. Plaintiffs will be entitled to get a decree for recovery of joint possession provided their right has not been lost by adverse possession of the defendants for more than the statutory period of 12 years, or by ouster by the defendants for more than the statutory period.

We therefore proceed to discuss the question of ouster or adverse possession. In considering this question of adverse possession it is important to bear in mind the distinction between the elements necessary to constitute adverse possession when Mukundia Zamindari had not passed into the hands of defendants 1 to 4 who are cosharers in the Bikrampur Jalkar and the period after 1882 when it passed into their hands. It is conceded on behalf of the appellants that if there had been good evidence of adverse possession of the jalkar up to the Koshabhanga Satar line between 1867 and 1882 plaintiffs' title must be held to be extinguished. On 26th April 1867 Mr. Wise accepted a kabuliyat from one Kali Kumar De where the assertion was made that the downstream limit was Koshabhanga to Satar line: see Ex. B, p. 202. On 20th November 1872 Mr. Wise grants a patni patta (Ex. 5) to Girish Chandra Guha in which the same downstream limit of the Mukundia Jalkar is asserted, B 226 and on 17th January 1873 the corresponding patni kabuliyat is executed by Girish Chandra Guha. But after the execution of this patta and kabuliyat we have got no evidence of possession of the jalkar within the Koshabhanga Satar line for nearly eight years when an ex parte decree for rent obtained by Girish Chandra on 24th November 1882 for some portion of the fishery near the mouth of the Satar river. This decree which was obtained by Guha is certainly evidence of Guha's possession, but its probative value is very small. The weight to be attached to it must be very small seeing that it is not shown that the decree was executed and rent realized: see Neil v. Duke of Devonshire (6).

It is an important circumstance that there is no assertion by the Mukundia Zamindar of his right to the jalkar up to the Koshabhanga Satar line after the decree of 1816 and 1843 which defeated his claim up to that limit up to the year 1867 when for the first time Mr. Wise accepted the kabuliyat from Kali Kumar Do alleging the upstream limit to be Koshabhanga and Satar line. In order to establish title by adverse possession more convincing evidence beyond solitary ex parte decree for rent should have been forthcoming. Girish Chandra mortgaged his two-thirds share in the patni to the Raja brothers and two-thirds share of the patni in the Mukundia Jalkar was purchased by the Raja and his brothers on 20th March 1882 [see Ex. G-B.245] and the peon's report of delivery of possession is dated 11th July 1882. This evidence is in our opinion not sufficient to establish actual adverse possession of the stretch of water extending up to Koshabhanga-Satar line. It is not likely that the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title would allow possession to be wrested from them beyond the Deokhali and Sadaikhali limit when they were able to keep Prithipati Ram Krishna Roy the earlier Mukundia Zamindar out of possession even after the decree of 1816. The Guhas have not produced a single kabuliyat or patta from fishermen showing their possession of the jalkar up to the Koshabhanga-Satar line between 1872 to 1880 although Purna Chandra Guha deposes in (B K 478 A 20 to 30) that he saw registered kabuliyats in his grandfather's time; and on this evidence they cannot certainly found their title by adverse possession.

After 1882 when the Raja defendants 1 to 4 became the owners of the Mukundia Jalkar they were also cosharers of the Bikrampur Jalkar possessing the portion of the fishery downstream of the Mukundia Jalkar. When granting leases to fishermen up to Koshabhanga limit they might be exercising the right both as owners of Mukundia Jalkar and owners of the Bikrampur Jalkar. The question to be determined with reference to this part of the case is when did they give notice to the plaintiffs, their cosharers, in the Bikrampur Jalkar that they were granting the leases up to Koshabhanga-Satar line in their capacity as owners and patnidars of the Mukundia Jalkar and not as the cosharers of the Bikrampur Jalkar. The numerous pattas and kabuliyats (S series) which are undoubtedly genuine documents were executed in favour of or by fishermen for large sums of rent, on the assertion that the fishery up to Koshabhanga-Satar line belong to them in their right as Mukundia Zamindars; but it does not appear that plaintiffs had any notice of the assertion of this hostile title till within 12 years of suit. Mere participation of the rent and profits of a jalkar without more by the Raja cosharers even for a long period of time is not sufficient to constitute ouster: see Corea v. Appuhamy (7) and Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (8). (After further considering evidence re: adverse possession by the defendants the judgment proceeded). It is to be served that these leases after the institution of the suit of 1909 are of very little use after they as they were given after the dispute had arisen. It is to be observed that between 1906-18 both parties were trying to enlarge their respective rights in the jalkar and it cannot be said that the defendants were in uninterrupted and exclusive adverse possession of the portion of the fishery to which plaintiffs have established their title.

Reference has been made to the case of Raja Sree Nath v. Dina Bandu Sen (1) and it is said that the defendants openly asserted in that suit that their downstream boundary was the Koshabhanga-Satar line. The present plaintiffs were no parties to the said suit and the portion in dispute in that case was admittedly above the portion of the fishery now in dispute. Great stress was laid by the learned advocate for defendants 1 to 4 on the following passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sreenath v. Dinabandhu (J).

6. (1882) 8 A C 185—81 W R 622.

"and by means of such proceedings in 1797, 1816, 1843 by means of similar proceedings in litigation with some of the present defendants and by a long succession of ijara pattas and kabulyats which they put in evidence, they prove de facto possession, as under their jalkar rights of the whole fishery in both streams between their upper and their lower limits."

But as the present plaintiffs were no parties to the suit this finding is not strictly evidence against them. The question of adverse possession by the defendants loses much force as it appears that there were disputes prior to 1917 regarding the collection of rent from the disputed portion of the jalkar between plaintiffs' and defendants' lessees which led to proceedings under S. 144, Criminal P. C., and the matter was compromised, [see Ex. 15 C, Vol. 1 p. 1] and the order under S. 144 was rescinded. Indeed it is very frankly admitted by the learned advocate for defendants 6 to 9 that the decision of the case should depend on the decision on the question of title and not on the assertions and counter-assertions regarding the upstream limit of the plaintiffs and downstream limit of the defendant's jalkar in the numerous leases and kabulyats. We are on the whole of opinion that the real dispute with regard to the portion of the fishery now in dispute arose with the action of Sadar Ali Bepari, one of the fishermen lessees of the Raja defendants whose looting of the fish from the disputed portion resulted in the 145 proceedings which terminated on 31st October 1918 in favour of the defendants. The present suit has been brought within three years from that date and is well within time. We are of opinion that plaintiff's title to the portion to which he has established their title has not been lost by adverse possession of the defendants. (The remaining portion of the judgment is not necessary for reporting—Ed.).

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 58 and 100—Remedy of unsuccessful claimant under R. 58 is by suit only—Scope under Rr. 58 and 100 being same he cannot again apply under R. 100.

Because after the dismissal of a claim case under O. 21, R. 58, the only remedy open to the claimant being in the institution of a regular suit as provided in O. 21, R. 63 of the Code and the scope of inquiry under O. 21, R. 100 being the same as the inquiry under O. 21, R. 58, an unsuccessful applicant in a case under O. 21, R. 58 is not competent to apply under O. 21, R. 100: 15 I C 683, Ref. [P 234 C 1]

Order of Reference.—In course of execution proceedings, the present applicant brought a Claim Case No. 31 of 1930, under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. That case was dismissed for default on 13th December 1930: vide Order No. 10 of the Order-sheet. Thereafter the attached property was sold in auction purchased by the decree-holder on 19th February 1931. The sale was confirmed on 6th October 1931. Then on 17th November 1931 on decree-holder's prayer process for delivery of possession was issued and possession was duly delivered. Thereupon the present applicant who was the claimant in the Claim Case No. 31 of 1930 has presented an application under O. 21, R. 100 complaining about dispossession regarding his eight annas share in the disputed land. The opposite party decree-holder has resisted this application on a preliminary point, viz., the Claim Case of the applicant having been dismissed for default, he is precluded from raising any objection under O. 21, R. 100 on the principles of res judicata. The learned pleader for the decree-holder has urged that on the dismissal of a Claim case the only remedy open to the claimant is in the institution of a Regular Suit as provided in O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., and that the scope of inquiry under O. 21, R. 100 is same as one under O. 21, R. 58. It has been further contended that if the applicant (Claimant) is permitted to apply under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C., having once failed in his application under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., and to obtain a favourable order, he would thereby gain his end which he could not otherwise than by institution of a suit contemplated in O. 21, R. 63 C.P.C. These contentions appear to me to have force in them. On the other hand I find nothing in the Civil Procedure Code which precludes an application under O. 21, R. 100 by an unsuccessful applicant in a case under O. 21, R. 58. In my opinion, having regard to the provisions of O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., which give a conditional finality to an order in a Claim Case, the applicant is precluded from agitating the identical question in an application under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. But the Civil Procedure Code being silent on the point at issue and the parties to the proceeding having failed to refer to any reported ruling on the point, I have not been able to come to a definite conclusion on the point. In the circumstances I would refer under O. 46, R. 1, Civil P. C., the following question for decision by the Hon'ble High Court. Is an unsuccessful applicant in a case under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., competent to apply under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C.?

Judgment.—This is a Reference under O. 46, R. 1, Civil P. C., made by the Munsif of Meherpur in connexion with an application under O. 21, R. 100 of the Code, in Miscellaneous Case No. 519 of 1931, pending in his Court. The facts giving rise to the Reference have been fully set out in the letter of reference addressed to this Court and it is not necessary for us to refer to them again here. In view of the principle underlying the decision of this Court in the case of Jugal Kishore v. Bejoy Krishna (1) the contention of the decree-holder that after the dismissal of a claim case under O. 21, R. 58, the only remedy open to the claimant was in the institution of a regular suit as provided in O. 21, R. 63 of the Code and the further contention of the decree-holder, that the scope of inquiry under O. 21, R. 100 was the same as the inquiry under O. 21, R. 58 appears to us to be correct. In our opinion, the question referred to this Court for consideration, viz., whether an unsuccessful applicant in a case under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., is competent to apply under O. 21, R. 100, must be answered in the negative. The Reference is disposed of in the manner above indicated. There will be no order as to costs in this Reference.

Gopal Lal Chandra—Appellant.

v.

Amulyakumar Sur—Respondent.

Appeal No. 400 of 1928, Decided on 26th August 1931.

(a) Will—Executed after 1870—Calcutta view stated—Hindu Wills Act (1870).

The view adopted by the Calcutta High Court in respect of wills after 1870 is that, on the executors obtaining probate, they immediately become vested by force of statute with the whole of the estate, which belong to the testator at the time of his death: 22 Cal 788 (P C); 25 Cal 103 and 33 Cal 116 (P C), Ref.; A. I. R. 1926 Mad 494, not foll. [P 236 C 1]

(b) Succession Act (1925), S. 187—Probate obtained subsequent to suit is sufficient.

If any executor institutes a suit in anticipation of probate and subsequently obtains probate, the requirements of S. 187, Succession Act, are satisfied for the purposes of a decree to be obtained: 38 Cal 327, Ref. [P 236 C 1]

(c) Will—Legal heir of testator is entitled to sue until claimant under will establishes right.

The legal heir of a testator in possession of his general estate can maintain a suit for the benefit of the estate so long as any other claimant does not establish his right to the same under the will: 1915 Cal. 207, Ref. [P 236 C 1]

(d) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 174—Sale under—Inadequacy of price or irregularities will not affect legal consequence of sale.

Inadequacy of price, or irregularity in that the proper forms of proclamation not being used or error in stating whether the sale will be free from encumbrance or not, cannot affect the statutory consequences of the sale held under the Act. [P 236 C 2]

(e) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 167—Collector refusing to issue notice at first is not debarred from ordering such issue subsequently.

Where a Collector refuses to issue notice under the section he can change his mind and order issue of notice when another application supported by affidavit is put in 28 Cal. 180, Expl. [P 237 C 1]

(f) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 167—"Notice" and not knowledge of encumbrance is necessary under S. 167.

Section 167 speaks of "notice" and not "knowledge" and so requires some intimation of a definite character as regards the nature and the particulars of the encumbrance to serve as a basis, on which the starting point of the period contemplated by the section may rest. But knowledge or intimation may sometimes be sufficient to impute notice, if the circumstances are such as may reasonably require the person, who has such knowledge or intimation to enquire about the particulars: 15 I C 430, Ref. [P 237 C 2]

Judgment.—The plaintiff instituted this suit for enforcement of a mortgage bond in his favour, of which the consideration was made up of his dues upon seven promissory notes and a cash amount of Rs. 8,000 odd, and upon four subsequent mortgages in his favour on deposit of title deeds. The moneys were taken and the bonds were executed by one Taraknath Banerji, defendant 1 in the suit, who held the mortgaged properties under defendants 3 to 6 under a dar mourasi mokarrari lease. The latter purchased the properties in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against defendant 1. The plaintiff's case was that the said purchase was made with knowledge and notice of the encumbrances in plaintiff's favour and that in law and equity the purchasers were bound to pay up the plaintiff's dues. He prayed for a preliminary decree for sale with liberty reserved to apply for a personal decree for the balance.

Defendant 2 disclaimed all interest in the mortgaged properties. He, as well as the other defendants, namely, Nos. 3 to 6, alleged that they had no knowledge or notice of the encumbrances prior to the sale, that the sale was held in execution of a decree for rent in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act with power to the purchasers to avoid all encumbrances, that they got notice of the encumbrances, when they received the notices through Court in connexion with the present suit and they, thereupon annulled the encumbrances by proceeding under S. 167 of the Act. The Subordinate Judge has made a decree for money in plaintiff's favour against defendant 1 and has dismissed the suit against defendants 2 to 6. The plaintiff has appealed.

The first contention of the appellant is that the decree, in execution of which defendants 3 to 6 made the purchase, was not a decree for rent contemplated by the Bengal Tenancy Act and the sale in execution also had not the effect of a rent sale thereunder. This contention is pressed on several grounds, which will be noticed presently. But before doing so it will be convenient to state a few facts.

The suit for rent was instituted by five persons, namely: (1) Praphullakumar, (2) Amulyakumar, a minor son of one Shashibhooshan represented by his mother Manmohini, (3) Anathnath, (4) Sarojekumar and (5) Prasannakumar. It was stated in the plaint that the share of Nos. 1 and 2 was 10 as., of No. 3—2 as, 13 gds. 1 k. 1 kr., of No. 4—13 gds. 1 k 1 l. 1 kr., and of No. 5—2as 13 gds. 1 kr. The prayer was for recovery of rents and cesses for the years 1324 to 1327 B. S. with damages and interest. It was instituted on 14th April 1921. Shashibhooshan had left a will, dated 10th October, 1918, which was pending probate at the date of the suit. By the will, Praphullakumar, Manmohini and Shashibhooshan's son-in-law, Satish, were appointed executors: the first two being also appointed guardians of the person of the minor, Amulyakumar. Several bequests were made in favour of different persons, the properties, with which this suit is concerned, being bequeathed to Amulyakumar and it being provided that the executors should deliver them to him on his completing the age of 21 years. Probate was issued in favour of the two executors, Praphullakumar and Manmohini on 28th April 1921. On 7th September, 1921, the decree was passed in the suit for rent. The plaintiffs in the suit named above, as decree-holders, applied for execution. The sale was held on 19th November, 1923, they themselves being purchasers. They obtained a sale-certificate in their own names on 21st December 1923, and they obtained delivery of possession of the purchased properties on 10th January 1924.

It has been argued that, as the properties had vested in the executors under the will, there was no representation in respect of the 10 annas share of Shashibhooshan in the properties, since not the executors but the plaintiffs 1 and 2, that is to say, Praphulla in his personal capacity and Amulyakumar as represented by his guardian Manmohini, and not Manmohini as executrix, had sued so far as that share is concerned. This contention is pressed on the strength of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in the case of Meyappa Chetty v. Supramanian Chetty (1). In that case their Lordships observed:

"It is quite clear that an executor derives his title and authority from the will of his testator and not from any grant of probate. The personal property of the testator, including all rights of action, vests in him upon the testator's death, and the consequence is that he can institute an action in the character of executor before he proves the will. He cannot, it is true, obtain a decree before probate, but this is not because his title depends on probate, but because the production of the probate is the only way in which, by the rules of the Court, he is allowed to prove his title."

Their Lordships were there relying on the English law on the point and referred to the cases of Thompson v. Reynolds (2) and Woolley v. Clark (3). The view adopted by this Court in respect of wills after 1870 is that, on the executors obtaining probate, they immediately become vested by force of statute with the whole of the estate, which belonged to the testator at the time of his death: or in other words, that the vesting takes place on the taking of probate, but relates back to the time of the testator's death and to the estate which then belonged to him: see Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (4), Sarat Chandra Banerjee v. Bhupendra Nath (5) and Kurrutulain Bahadur v. Nuzbat-ud-dowla Abbas Hossein Khan (6). It has been pointed out to us that a different view has been taken in other Courts [e. g., in the case in K. Ramiah v. K. Venkatasubamma (7)], but we should be content to adopt the view which this Court has taken. It is true that, if an executor institutes a suit in anticipation of probate and subsequently obtains probate, the requirements of S. 187, Succession Act, are satisfied for the purposes of a decree to be obtained [Chandra Kishore Roy v. Prasanna Kumari Dasi (8)]. But at the same time, it is well settled that the legal heir of a testator in possession of his general estate can maintain a suit for the benefit of the estate so long as any other claimant does not establish his right to the same under the will: see the cases referred to in Basanta Kumar v. Gopal Chunder (9). The contention of the appellant therefore cannot be upheld.

It has next been contended that, even if the suit was properly constituted at the date it was laid, by the grant of the probate, which Praphulla and Manmoffini obtained, Shashibhooshan's ten annas share vested in them as executors, and neither at the date of the decree nor at the date of the application for execution the decree-holders had any rights as landlords, and so, on the authority of Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (10), the execution was not one in which the tenure could pass. We have carefully perused this decision and we have come to the conclusion that it is not possible to regard the decree-holders as having parted with or assigned over their interests as landlords in any way, so as to be ex-landlords and not existing landlords within the meaning of the decision. Amoor Ali, J., in the case of Chhatrapat Singh v. Gopi Chand Bothra (11) observed thus:

"From one point of view the trustee is an assignee, inasmuch as the property is conveyed to him as has been done in this case. But to my mind the legislature never intended to include in the word 'assignee' used in Cl. (h) (meaning that clause of S. 148 of the Act) persons in whom a legal estate was vested by an act of the owner but had no independent interest in the property."

We entirely agree in this view. This contention also must be overruled. It has been argued that the sale was held subject to encumbrances and this should be inferred from the fact that the price which the properties fetched was only Rs. 5,000, whereas after purchase it was let out by the purchasers in 1926 for a selami of Rs. 3,000 and at an annual rent of Rs. 3,000. The price, for which the properties were purchased, seems to have been very low. But inadequacy of the price is hardly a consideration, which comes in when the question is what is the legal consequence that should have followed from the sale. In one copy of the proclamation (Ex. H) filed on behalf of the defendants the words "sale will be free from incumbrance" appears, while in another copy (Ex. 14), which is said to be the original, the words "sale will be subject to the encumbrance" appears, and the forms of these proclamations, that were used, were inapposite, inasmuch as, instead of forms under S. 162, Cl. (a), those under Cl. (b) were used. These irregularities and errors cannot, in our opinion, affect the statutory consequences of the sale that was held. Both in Ex. 14 and in Ex. H it was distinctly stated at more places than one that the sale was to be held with power to annul encumbrances.

The next question raised is whether the Collector had jurisdiction to issue the notices under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act. The sale, as already stated, took place on 19th November 1923. The application for serving the notices under S. 167 of the Act was made on 11th June 1926. This application was dismissed by the Collector on 15th June 1926, on the ground that it had been made beyond one year from the date of the sale. There was then an application for revival of the case on allegation, supported by an affidavit of the oath of defendants 2 to 6 that they had notice of the encumbrance only on 11th May 1926. On this application the case was revived and notices were ordered to issue. It has been argued that the Collector's order of revival was without jurisdiction, because what he had to do in this connexion was nothing judicial, and reliance for this proposition has been placed on the decision in the case of Nritya Gopal Hazra v. Golam Rasool (12). The decision only lays down that the Collector's function in this matter is that of a ministerial officer. There is nothing in the decision suggesting that the Collector may not change his mind or that he may not subsequently do what he had declined to do before. The word "revival" may not have been a happy word to use in this connexion. Our attention has been drawn to the allegation in the petition and the affidavit aforesaid that defendants 2 to 6 received notice of the encumbrance on 11th May 1926 and that the correct date should be 29th April 1926. The error is unfortunate, but we cannot regard it as intentionally made.

Then it has been argued that defendants 2 to 6 had notice of the encumbrance far beyond one year from the date of the application made for issuing the notices under S. 167 of the Act. Their case was that it was on 11th May 1926 (or rather 29th April 1926 to be correct), that they got notice of the encumbrance when they received the registered postcards issued by the Court informing them of the present suit. The plaintiff's case on the other hand was that on at least four previous occasions they had such notice or knowledge of the encumbrance. The plaintiff has adduced some oral evidence and has also relied upon some circumstances to establish this position. We have examined this evidence with care and we are quite unable to believe it : we are decidedly of opinion that it was untrue in every material respect, and it is in conflict with what some documentary evidence, that there is on the record, unmistakably proves. The circumstances on which the appellant relies are at best dubious and lead to no definite conclusion. It is possible that the wholesale ignorance pleaded on behalf of the defendants is not true, but the possibility is more or less a mere supposition and is not based on any tangible proof. In the circumstances we think it is reasonable to hold that the defendants are entitled to rely on the notices that they received through the Court in respect of the suit as giving them first notice of the encumbrance. An argument has been addressed to us based on the supposition that two of the defendants had much earlier notice of the encumbrance. It was based upon a passage in the judgment of the Court below, which is worded thus :

"It is also very likely that, during the years 1920 to 1924, the plaintiff would tell two out of the five landlords about his mortgage lien, but this will not help the plaintiff's cause in the present case, when it is admitted that no other landlord, except Saroje Sur and Praphulla Sur, was apprised of the mortgage lien. The Bengal Tenancy Act does not encourage this vague talk about a mortgage lien and it has been provided that, in case of registered and notified encumbrances, a copy of the instrument must be served on the entire body of landlords. A purchaser in a rent sale has got the right of annulling all encumbrances excepting the notified and registered encumbrances and the plaintiff cannot claim any benefit for himself unless he brings himself within the class of registered and notified encumbrances."

It has been argued that if Saroje and Praphulla had notice of the encumbrance, the other decree-holders defendants, who were members of the same joint family as they and to whom they or one of them stood in the position of karta, were affected by that notice. The answer to this contention is that the fact that Saroje and Praphulla had knowledge is only a possibility, as we have already stated, and is not a fact proved in the case. Nextly, the answer is that S. 167 speaks of "notice" and not "knowledge", and so requires some intimation of a definite character as regards the nature and the particulars of the encumbrance to serve as a basis on which the starting point of the period contemplated by the section may rest. It is true that there is no form of notice prescribed by the statute. It is also true that it has been held that knowledge or intimation may sometimes be sufficient to impute notice if the circumstances are such as may reasonably require the person, who has such knowledge or intimation to inquire about the particulars: Yusuf Gazi v. Asmat Mollah (13). But we can find nothing on which it may be held that there was such a duty cast on Praphulla or Saroje in the present case. Nor do we see how knowledge, if any, on their part may be regarded as knowledge of the others on the footing of their being members of one family. There are no materials on which we can hold that Praphulla and Saroje or either of them acted as kartas, while on the other hand the plaintiff's own evidence is that on one occasion, when he and the mortgagor saw Praphulla and Saroje make entreaties of them for returning the properties to the mortgagor on taking some money, Praphulla and Saroje replied that: "they would consult their cosharers if it was possible to give back the properties after taking some money."

On the findings we have arrived at no other question need be considered. The appeal, in our opinion, ought not to succeed. It is accordingly dismissed with costs to the appearing respondents.

Civil Rule No. 294 of 1932, Decided on 17th June 1932, against order of 2nd Sub-Judge, Sylhet, D/- 23rd January 1932.

* Civil P. C. (1908), O. 33, R. 1—Court can allow plaintiff to continue suit as pauper—Suit on insufficient stamp—Application for pauperism when deficit payment ordered—Pauperism proved—Plaint cannot be rejected under Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 11.

Priyanath Dutt—for Opposite Party.

Guha, J.—The plaintiff-opposite party in this rule instituted a suit for partition on 3rd September 1930, in the Second Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sylhet. The court-fee paid on the plaint in the suit was Rs. 10 only. On the objection of the defendants, the petitioners in this Court, on the question of court-fee payable on the plaint as filed in Court, based on the fact that the plaintiff was out of possession of the properties sought to be partitioned, it was held that the plaintiff was to pay ad valorem court-fees on her plaint. Time was granted to the plaintiff for putting in deficit court-fees; and on the last date fixed for payment of court-fees, the 27th July 1931, an application was made by the plaintiff to allow her to proceed with the suit as a pauper. In the application made on 27th July 1930, the plaintiff prayed for the amendment of the plaint as presented in Court, in view of the Subordinate Judge's decision that she was not in possession of the share of the property claimed by her in the suit for partition. The application, to continue the suit as a pauper was eventually granted on 23rd January 1932, by the Subordinate Judge after the necessary inquiries into the pauperism of the plaintiff had been made, as required by law. The concluding portion of the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on that date was this:

"The petitioner is, accordingly, declared a pauper, for the purpose of the suit, and she is permitted to continue her Suit No. 127 of 1930 as such. Her prayer for amendment, along with the petition for pauperism was really premature, and it shall be considered in its due course, as the suit proceeds."

The defendants in the suit applied to this Court for setting aside the aforesaid order, made in Pauper Case No. 2 of 1931. The grounds for setting aside the order as mentioned in the application to this Court, on which this rule was granted, were directed against the Subordinate Judge's entertaining the plaintiff's application for continuing the suit as a pauper, and against the merits of the case, so far as the decision of the Subordinate Judge, on the fact of the plaintiff's pauperism was concerned. So far as the Court's power to allow a case to be continued as a pauper suit, after coming to a decision that the plaintiff was actually a pauper, is concerned, it appears to be amply supported by authority of decisions, so far as this Court is concerned: see the cases of Nirmal Chandra v. Doyal Nath (1) and Thompson v. Calcutta Tramways Co. (2). We can find no reason to differ from the view taken by this Court, based upon the principle that the power to allow a case to be continued as a pauper suit is included in the power given to the Court to allow a suit in forma pauperis to be instituted.

The order of the learned Subordinate Judge, as it stands, cannot, in our judgment, be successfully challenged, as one made without jurisdiction, or as one not passed in accordance with law. It has however been contended before us on the authority of the decision of this Court in the case of Mrs. Selima Sheehan v. Hafer Mohammad Fateh Nashub (3), that where the plaintiff had under-valued the suit, had not paid proper court-fees, after taking adjournments for the purpose of putting in deficit court-fees, but had applied on the last date for payment of such fees, for leave to continue the suit in forma pauperis, the only course left open to the Court was to reject the plaint, under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. The contention thus advanced altogether overlooks the order against which this rule is directed. The order relates to pauperism of the plaintiff, and does not even relate to the question of amendment of the plaint as prayed for by the plaintiff in the suit. The plaint as presented could not be rejected on any of the grounds mentioned in O. 7, R. 11 and it was only after the plaint had been amended with a view to a prayer for recovery of possession by the plaintiff, that payment of deficit court-fees as directed by the Court, could arise. No question of rejection of the plaint as filed by the plaintiff could arise on 23rd January 1932. The order passed on that date specifically mentioned that the prayer for amendment made in the petition for pauperism was premature, and was to be considered in due course during the progress of the suit. The decision of this Court in Mrs. Selima Sheehan's case (3), to which reference has been made above, and upon which great reliance has been placed on behalf of the petitioners cannot be of assistance to them, on the facts and circumstances of the case before us. There was no occasion for rejection of the plaint in this case at any stage of the proceedings before the Court below; and the learned Subordinate Judge would on the facts of this case, have acted illegally and entirely without jurisdiction if he had on 23rd January 1932, rejected the plaint as presented in the Court by the plaintiff, on the ground of non-payment of deficit court-fees. The order made by the learned Subordinate Judge on 23rd January 1932, appears to us to be a valid order under the law, and the ends of justice in the case would, in our judgment, be frustrated and justice denied to the plaintiff, if that order was to be set aside and the Court below directed to reject the plaint on the ground of non-payment of deficit court-fees. In the result the rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing-fee in this rule at two gold mohurs.

and was therefore led to believe that the suit was decreed on 16th February 1929. His application for execution was filed on 15th February 1932.

Held: that although the Court had no power to extend the time of limitation, yet in the interest of justice, the decree ought to be regarded as having been passed on 16th February 1929, on the principle actus curiae neminem gravabit (act of Court shall prejudice no man). [P 240 C 1]

Jatindra Mohan Sanyal — for Petitioner.

Judgment.—This Rule No. 424 has been issued upon the opposite party to show cause why an order dismissing an application for execution as barred by limitation should not be set aside on the ground that the petitioner having been misled by mistake of the Court the application for execution is not barred by limitation.

It appears that a decree was by mistake dated 16th February 1929, whereas the date of the decision was actually 11th February 1929. The decree-holder took certified copy of that portion of the summons book which contains the formal decree and was therefore led to believe that the suit was decreed on 16th February 1929. His application for execution was filed on 15th February 1932, and was therefore within time if the decree was passed on 16th February 1929, but out of time from the date of actual decision 11th February 1929. It is true that the Court has no power to extend the time of limitation. But in the circumstances of the case in the interest of justice, I think, the decree ought to be regarded as having been passed on 16th February 1929 on the principle "actus curiae neminem gravabit" which has been followed in a number of cases of this nature, one of which is referred to by the learned advocate for the petitioner, Civil Revision No. 1077 of 1929, of this Court. This rule is made absolute. The order complained of is set aside and the application for execution will be registered. Same order will apply to the other Rule No. 424 of 1932.

Santosh Kumar Basu, Santosh Kumar Pal and Parimal Mukherjee—for Petitioner.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Panckridge, J.—A preliminary point of jurisdiction is raised by the Crown in showing cause against the rule. The petitioner states that he is a European British subject. His statement is verified by an affidavit sworn by his brother, and Mr. Bhattacharjee agrees that in the absence of any evidence to contradict it, it must be taken to be correct. He was convicted at Port Blair on 2nd May 1932 by a First Class Magistrate of offences punishable under Ss. 408 and 468, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of eight months. On 6th May 1932 the learned Sessions Judge of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands allowed the petitioner's appeal against his conviction under S. 468 and acquitted him on that charge, but dismissed his appeal against his conviction under S. 408 and maintained the sentence. On 12th July 1932 the petitioner obtained this rule calling upon the Chief Commissioner of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands to show cause why the order of the Sessions Court should not be set aside or modified, on the ground that the sentence is too severe. Learned counsel for the Crown argues that we have no jurisdiction to entertain the petitioner's application.

By S. 13, Cl. (d) of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands Regulation, 1876, (Regulation 3 of 1876) it was ordered that the functions of the High Court under Ch. 32, Criminal P. C., of reference and revision should be discharged in respect of proceedings of the Court of Session by the Governor-General in Council, and in respect of Courts subordinate to the Court of Session by the Court of Session, but this clause does not apply to proceedings against European British subjects or persons jointly charged with European British subjects. By a notification made in 1878 under S. 3, Indian High Courts Act, 1865 (28 and 29 Vic. C. 15) it was ordered that this Court should exercise original and appellate jurisdiction and discharge the functions of a High Court in criminal proceedings in the Islands against European British subjects. Prima facie we have clearly the power to deal with the petitioner's case by way of revision. Mr. Bhattacharjee however maintains that, inasmuch as the petitioner did not claim to be dealt with as a European British subject by the Magistrate before whom he was tried, he must by reason of the provisions of S. 528-B, Criminal P. C., be held to have relinquished that right, and cannot assert it before us exercising revisional jurisdiction, which is "a subsequent stage of the case" within the meaning of the section.

Mr. Basu argues that what the section means is that, unless the claim has been made, a European British subject cannot at a subsequent stage challenge the legality of a previous stage at which the claim might have been made on the ground that he was not at such previous stage dealt with as a European British subject. There is nothing, it is contended, to prevent a European British subject making the claim at any stage of the case and being dealt with as such from that stage.

We are not prepared to go to this length since the argument appears to us to leave out of account the words—"shall be held to have relinquished his right." We are more impressed with the submission that when this Court calls for the record under S. 435 and thereafter proceeds to exercise its powers of revision under S. 439, the proceedings cannot properly be said to be a subsequent stage of the case. On this point the decisions are conflicting. In Empress v. Grant (1) the Bombay High Court held that when the accused had not claimed to be dealt with as a European British subject before the Sadar Court in Sind the Bombay High Court had no power by virtue of S. 4 (1) of the Code to enhance in revision the sentence passed on him.

On the other hand in Harris v. Peal (2) Walsh, J., held that an application in revision was not a subsequent stage of the same case within the meaning of S. 454 of the Code of 1898. In Jeremiah v. Johnson (3) Krishnan, J., preferred to follow the Bombay decision. We have come to the conclusion that the better opinion is that of Walsh, J. S. 439 confers no rights on a person convicted either by a trial Court or a lower appellate Court to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. The exercise of that jurisdiction is, subject to the limitations imposed by the section, purely discretionary. The High Court can and often does exercise the jurisdiction of its own motion without an application having been made to it. In these circumstances the hearing in revision cannot, we think, be properly described as a subsequent stage of the case. We think that, if the language of S. 528-B is ambiguous, a construction favourable to accused and convicted persons should be adopted, as the section purports to curtail privileges conferred by other provisions in the Code. For these reasons we hold that we have jurisdiction to revise the orders made by the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge.

With regard to the merits the petitioner was a ship's clerk employed in S. S. "Sajahan." In the course of his employment he was entrusted with various sums of money. In the case with which we are at present concerned he was charged with having misappropriated Rs. 100-1-0 which had come into his possession on account of mowing charges paid by passengers. In another case he was charged with misappropriation of Rs. 215 which had come into his possession as passage money collected from passengers on board. In the third case he was charged with misappropriation of Rs. 501 which had come into his possession as the price of wine supplied to passengers. He was convicted in all the three cases and a sentence of eight months' rigorous imprisonment was imposed on him in each case, the sentences to run consecutively, making a total term of two years' rigorous imprisonment. His offence was undoubtedly a serious one and it was aggravated by the fact that he suppressed correspondence from the owners of the ship and made false entries in the books of account which it was his duty to keep. At the same time this was his first offence and this much should be said to his credit that he made a more or less clean breast of the matter and did not, as people in the same situation often do, endeavour to throw the blame on a fellow servant.

In the circumstances we think that the ends of justice will be met if we reduce his sentence in this case to one of six months' rigorous imprisonment and make a similar order in the other two cases. This will have the effect of reducing the total term of his imprisonment from two years' to "18 months." In Revision Case No. 614 of 1932 we reduce the sentence of imprisonment from eight months rigorous imprisonment to six months' rigorous imprisonment for the reasons set out in our judgment in Revision Case No. 613 of 1932. In Revision Case No. 615 of 1932 we reduce the sentence of imprisonment from eight months' rigorous imprisonment to six months' rigorous imprisonment for the reasons set out in our judgment in Revision Case No. 613 of 1932.

Criminal Appeal No. 291 of 1932, Decided on 10th August 1932.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297—Enforcing claim to property is not admitting other party's possession—Contrary statement in charge vitiates it.

It is not a correct proposition of law to lay down that a person who attempts to enforce a claim to property which he cannot substantiate thereby creates the position that possession is with another, and if the language of a charge is open to that construction it is bad for misdirection. [P 243 C 1]

A direction in a charge in a case under S. 304, Penal Code, to the effect that if the party of the accused was held to be in possession, none of them was guilty of any offence even though there was a free fight between the two parties resulting in death of some of the complainant's party from injuries received, is not correct or comprehensive law. [P 243 C 2]

Heramba K. Biswas—for Appellants.

Khundkar, Dy. Legal Remembrancer and Nirmal Ch. Chakravarti—for the Crown.

Bartley, J.—The three appellants have been convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh sitting with a jury, who returned a majority verdict of guilty under S. 117 and 149/304, I. P. C., against all of the appellants and under S. 304, I. P. C., against Sahabali alone. The material facts alleged by the prosecution were that Sataulla and Manu owned a plot of land on which they grew paddy. On 20th November 1930 these appellants and a mob of other people entered the land and began to cut the crop. Sataulla, Manu and another man came up and protested. Appellants Sahabali and Manir speared Manu and Sabel struck him with a lathi. They then assaulted Sataulla with lathis. Both Manu and Sataulla died subsequently from the injuries. The substantive defence set up was that the land belonged to Sabel, who sowed aus and aman paddy in it. He cut the aus, but there was a golmal at the time of cutting the aman. The other appellants simply pleaded not guilty, and no alternative version of the actual fracas was alleged or sought to be proved, although it would appear that at least one man among the alleged aggressors died of injuries. The learned Judge, early in his charge, laid down that the first question for the jury was who was in possession of the land on the date of occurrence; in other words, who grew the paddy. After discussing the evidence on this point in detail, he told the jury that if they found possession with the prosecution side the accused had no right of private defence. If they found that Sabel was in possession, the next question was if he and his party had exceeded the right of private defence. If the jury could not, on the evidence, decide who was in possession, they "may consider whether it was a case of disputed possession, and then the question will arise which party was the aggressor."

direct the jury as follows: If Sataulla and Manu were in possession, the appellants, provided the jury held "they were all there" are guilty under S. 147. They might under conditions stated by the learned Judge be guilty under Ss. 149 and 304 of the Code. If the jury held that Sabel was in possession, none of the appellants were guilty of any offence. Finally, if it was a case of disputed possession and both parties went to the land prepared to fight, neither party could claim any exemption from liability for the consequence of their acts, and even then the appellants would be guilty of those offences of which they would have been guilty had Manulla and Sataulla been in possession. On these directions the jury returned a verdict that it was a case of disputed possession, and that the appellants were guilty as recapitulated above. (The judgment after overruling the contentions regarding prejudice to accused by non-summoning some of their witnesses and misdirections on the question of fact of possession proceeded.) It remains to consider in the light of the somewhat unusual verdict of the jury, the validity of the directions regarding what the learned Judge terms "disputed possession."

His first direction was that if the jury found disputed possession the question would arise which party was the aggressor. Later he said that if it was a case of disputed possession and both parties went to the land prepared to fight . . . the appellants would be guilty of those offences of which they would have been guilty had Manulla and Sataulla been in possession. It is not a correct proposition of law to lay down that a person who attempts to enforce a claim to property which he cannot substantiate, thereby creates the position that possession is with another, and the language used by the learned Judge is open to that construction. Moreover the case before the jury was, not that two parties went to the field prepared to fight. One side alleged that a mob cut their paddy and attacked them when they protested. The other side admitted an affray over the paddy cutting, gave no details of that affray, and merely claimed that the paddy belonged to them. The suggestion that both parties went prepared to fight is not based on evidence in the record. The direction as to the aggressive party is also confusing. If the jury found, as they did apparently find, that the land was the property of neither party, the legal position was that neither party had any right to use force in defence of the crop. The direction should have been that if the prosecution story as to the actual use of violence was correct, and if the appellants were not in possession, the appellants were not entitled to plead any right of defence of property in reply to the charges brought against them. Contra, if the jury found that the complainant's party attacked the others, the whole prosecution case failed, irrespective of who was in actual possession.

Lastly, if the jury held that the appellants were the owners of the crop, no right of private defence arose until its possession was endangered. If and when that right arose, it was a right limited by the provisions of the Penal Code, and the direction in the charge to the effect that if Sabel was held to be in possession, none of the appellants were guilty of any offence, is not a correct or comprehensive statement of law. We are, therefore of opinion that the charge delivered by the learned Judge is bad on the ground that it contains misdirections of fact and law, and that the convictions should not be sustained. In the result this appeal is allowed. The convictions and sentences are set aside and the case remanded for retrial to the Court of Session. The appellants will continue on the same bail.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 674 of 1932, Decided on 20th December 1932.

(a) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), Ss. 391 and 175—Sections are quite different and one has nothing to do with the other.

Section 175 deals with a very different class of license from that contemplated by S. 391. The object of the two sections and the nature of the licenses required by them are different. S. 175 occurs in Ch. 12 which deals with tax on profession, whereas S. 391 occurs in Ch. 26 dealing with regulation and inspection of places of public resort. Hence S. 175 has nothing to do with S. 391: 34 Cal 913 and A I R 1920 Cal 535, Ref. [P 215 C 1]

(b) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 391—Corporation has discretion to refuse license.

It is open to the Corporation to refuse a license if in their discretion they think it necessary to do so in the interest of public order and morality; but this discretion must be exercised in a judicial spirit and in a reasonable manner: Reg. v. London County Council, (1915) 2 K B 466, Ref. [P 246 C 1]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—Bye-laws or regulations framed under statute should be supported unless manifestly unfair or unreasonable.

Where there is competent authority to which a statute entrusts the power of making regulations or bye-laws, it is for the authority to decide what regulations are necessary; and any regulations which they may decide to make should be supported unless they are manifestly unreasonable or unfair: London County Council v. Dermondsey Bioscope Co., (1911) 60 L J K B 141, Rel. on. [P 245 C 2]

(d) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 391—Authority of Corporation to refuse license can be questioned by way of defence in criminal Court—Criminal Trial.

It is open to a person to raise by way of defence in a trial before a Magistrate under S. 391 that the Corporation has no authority to refuse license though it may be more appropriate to do so by a civil declaratory action or by a writ of mandamus. [P 246 C 2]

Judgment.—The question raised by this appeal is one of considerable importance and relates to the power of the Corporation of Calcutta to refuse a license to keep open a Carnival when in the public interest it thinks it necessary to do so. The case for the prosecution is that the appellant S. R. Varma was the proprietor of a Carnival in respect of which license had been obtained from the Corporation and that that license remained in force up to 1st March 1932; that there had been complaints against the holding of Carnivals of late both in the newspapers as well as by some public bodies like the Marwari Trades Association of Calcutta and the appellant was informed that no further license would be granted after the expiry of the period; that the appellant thereafter changed the site and name of the show and obtained a police licence for the show under the name of Hollywood Park Carnival on plots Nos. 21 to 29 of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Scheme and intimated to the Corporation that he was going to open the projected Carnival from 1st April and was prepared to pay the taxes, that the Carnival was opened from 1st April; but no license from the Municipality having been obtained the appellant had offended against the provisions of S. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act. The Corporation of Calcutta started the prosecution under S. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act.

It is admitted by the accused that the Carnival was started without obtaining the license and in such circumstances one would have thought that the provisions of S. 391 had been contravened; but it is contended by the defence that the Corporation cannot refuse a license altogether although it can impose conditions for the taking out of the license. The Magistrate thought that it was not necessary to go into the question whether the Corporation had the right of refusing license altogether and that it was sufficient for the purposes of the conviction in this case that the Carnival had been started and continued without a license. In this view the Municipal Magistrate convicted the appellant under S. 391, Calcutta Municipal Act, and has sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 500. The conviction and sentence have been challenged on appeal on several grounds: (1) the Corporation had no power under the statute to refuse a license altogether and, refusing to grant license "the Corporation ceased to function" and the conviction under S. 391 cannot be maintained; (2) the Act contemplates two licenses, one license for the place and another for the calling; and so far as the license for calling is concerned license could be taken after 1st July as S. 391 must be read with S. 175 and the prosecution was bad as it was started before 1st July; (3) that the sentence is too severe.

It will be easy to dispose of the second ground first. Mr. N. K. Basu who appears for the Corporation of Calcutta replies to the argument founded on this ground by pointing out that S. 175 or Sch. 6 has got nothing to do with S. 391. He argues that the breach under S. 175 is punishable under S. 492 whereas the breach under S. 391 is punishable under S. 488. He points out that S. 175 occurs in Ch. 12 which concerns "tax on profession," whereas S. 391 occurs in Ch. 26 which deals with "regulation and inspection of places of public resort." Mr. Basu further cites two cases in support of this view, Bevin Behari Ghose v. Corporation of Calcutta (1) and S. N. Banerjee v. W. Lewis & Co. (2). Both these cases which were under the old Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1899) B. C., support the argument of Mr. Basu and I am of opinion that S. 175 deals with a very different class of license from that contemplated by S. 391. The object of the two sections and the nature of the licenses required by them are different. S. 175 occurs in Ch. 12 which deals with tax on profession whereas S. 391 occurs in Ch. 26 dealing with regulation and inspection of places of public resort. These observations are sufficient to dispose of ground 2 taken. Ground 1 taken seems to be one of some difficulty. S. 391 of the Act of 1923 runs as follows :

"No person shall, without or otherwise than in conformity with the terms of a license granted by the Corporation in this behalf, keep open any theatre, circus or other similar place of public resort, recreation or amusement : Provided that this section shall not apply to private performances in any such place."

It is argued that when a Municipal authority is given the power under the law to regulate the opening of certain places of amusement that implies the continued existence of that which is to be regulated and governed and on this authority it is argued that the Corporation has got no power to withhold a license. It is said it can impose conditions but it cannot refuse altogether the granting of licenses. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Municipal Corporation, Toronto v. Virgo (3). In that case the question arose as to whether a statutory power conferred upon a Municipal Council to make bye-laws for regulating and governing a trade does or does not in the absence of an express power of prohibition authorize the making it unlawful to carry on a lawful trade in a lawful manner. It was held that it did not so authorize the Municipal Council. In that case a Municipal bye-law was passed prohibiting hawkers from plying their trade in an important part of the Municipality. And Lord Davey said that through all the cases a general principle may be traced that Municipal power of regulation or of making bye-laws for good government without express words of prohibition does not authorize the making it unlawful to carry on a lawful trade in a lawful manner.

In that case before their Lordships what was being dealt with was a bye-law power to make which is given by the statute and not the statute itself as in the present case, and it was held that the bye-law was really ultra vires of the statute in the absence of express prohibition. But there is also a well recognized principle that where there is competent authority to which an Act of Parliament entrusts the power of making regulations it is for the authority to decide what regulations are necessary; and any regulations which they may decide to make should be supported unless they are manifestly unreasonable or unfair; see the observations of Lord Alverstone, C. J., in London County Council v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co. (4). It is familiar knowledge that public performances have a strong influence on public mind and public opinion and for that reason the Corporation have been given the discretion to grant or refuse licenses regarding theatre, circus or other similar places of public resort, recreation or amusement. The terms of S. 391 would impliedly suggest such a discretion. As has been pointed out by Buckley, J. J., in Reg. v. London County Council (5), which was the case of cinematograph license: "The only question we have to determine is whether the body with whom exclusively the determination of that matter lies has acted fairly and according to law."

In the case in which these observations were made license was refused to the cinematograph company whose share holders were in a large proportion alien enemies, and it was held that the London County Council could refuse license in the exercise of their discretion.

Further in the case of Toronto Corporation there was no question of apprehended nuisance for, as Lord Davey pointed out:

"there was no evidence and it is scarcely conceivable that the trade could not be carried out without occasioning a nuisance."

If such nuisance could be apprehended the licensing authority would have been within their rights to refuse license. S. 391 says that certain places of amusement cannot be kept open without or otherwise than in conformity with a license granted by the Corporation of Calcutta. Can it be said that where a question of public order is involved or where a question is involved that betting and gambling which are illegal might go on in this Carnival the Corporation has no power to refuse a license? In the present case there was the representation by a public body as to the harmful effect of these Carnivals and there is evidence of the Theatre Inspector that betting and gambling were going on in the Great Eastern Carnival of which the appellant was the proprietor. It was open to the Corporation to anticipate, having regard to the way this Carnival was being carried on, that the applicant would not be a fit and proper person to hold the license for another Carnival. I am of opinion it was within the competence of the Corporation to refuse a license where in the interest of public order and morality it was necessary to do so. This act on the part of the Corporation does not in my opinion infringe on the liberty of the subject to carry on lawful trade in a lawful manner. The element of public order comes in and I should think that S. 391 impliedly gives the Corporation power to refuse licenses if in the interest of public order it thinks it should do so. The representation by the public bodies and in the newspapers led to a resolution to be passed by the E. G. P. Committee to the effect that no licenses should issue for carnivals except with the permission of the District Committee. This seems to be a salutary resolution, and if in pursuance of the resolution the Corporation refused to grant licenses it was quite within its power to do so. It cannot be said that the discretion was exercised arbitrarily or in an unreasonable manner.

A point had been raised by Mr. Basu on the second day of hearing of the case that authorities show that one cannot raise the contention that the refusal to issue license is in excess of the authority of the Corporation in a criminal Court, but must be determined before a civil Court wherefrom the accused must obtain a declaration that the action of the Corporation is ultra vires. I am of opinion that it may be raised by way of defence in the trial before the Magistrate although it may be more appropriate to do so by a civil declaratory action or by a writ of mandamus. My conclusions may be summarized as follows: Under the implications of S. 391 of the Act it is open to the Corporation to refuse a license if in their discretion they think it necessary to do so, but this discretion must be exercised in a judicial spirit and in a reasonable manner. In the present case it cannot be said that the discretion has not been exercised in an impartial and judicial spirit seeing that on the representation of a public body the question was debated before the E. G. P. Committee and the said committee came to the conclusion that license of Carnivals should ordinarily be refused and may be granted with the permission of the District Committee and seeing further that there is evidence in that case that the previous Carnivals of which the appellant is the proprietor allowed gambling and betting to go on. The conviction must therefore be maintained.

With regard to the ground of severity of sentence, after considering all the circumstances and giving due weight to the argument of Mr. Basu that the accused was liable in addition to a daily fine, I am of opinion that the ends of justice would be met by reducing the fine to Rs. 250 only (rupees two hundred and fifty). The appeal is to this extent allowed. The conviction is affirmed, but the sentence is reduced. The portion of the fine remitted must be refunded to appellant.

Kiron Soshi Dasi—Defendant—Appellant.

v

Official Assignee of Calcutta—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Appeal No. 101 of 1931, Decided on 22nd April 1932, from original decree of Buckland, J., D/- 11th August 1931.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11, Expl. 4—B executing deed of gift in favour of two persons who mortgaging that with K—Mortgagee K purchasing property in execution of decree against mortgagors—B suing for declaration that deed of gift was not binding on her—On B's death A was substituted for B and suit dismissed—A remaining in possession all the time—K becoming insolvent—Official Assignee suing A for possession and admitting A's possession since 1896—A pleading adverse possession—A could plead adverse possession.

In 1896 B executed a deed of gift of the property in suit in favour of two persons who granted a simple mortgage of the property in favour of K. In 1914 K instituted a suit against the mortgagors which resulted in a final decree being passed in 1916. The mortgaged property was sold in execution and purchased by K. Immediately after this B sued for a declaration that the deed of gift was not binding on her and for other reliefs against the mortgagee. She died soon afterwards and A was substituted in her place as plaintiff. The suit was eventually dismissed in 1923. But as A continued in possession of the property in suit and as K could not obtain possession of it from A the Official Assignee in 1930 sued A for possession of the property (K having been adjudicated insolvent in 1929.) At the hearing of the suit, B's and after B, A's adverse possession was admitted since 1896. A pleaded title by adverse possession for over 12 years even if the deed of gift was held to be binding and effective. Plaintiff pleaded that as A did not take the plea of adverse possession in the previous suit, A could not raise it in the present suit under Expt. 4, S. 11 :

Held : that though by reason of the former decision A was precluded from raising the plea that the title of the plaintiff had been extinguished in 1918 by A's adverse possession for over 12 years, it was quite open to A to urge that plaintiff's title had been extinguished by A's adverse possession for over 12 years prior to the date of the present suit. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 97 and 103—Executing Court not giving delivery—R. 97 does not apply—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 11-A.

Rule 97 has no application in the absence of an attempt on the part of the Court in execution to give delivery to the decree-holder or the auction purchaser. [P 250 C 1]

An application by a decree-holder or auction purchaser for being put in possession of the property on the allegation that in spite of repeated demands the person in possession was unwilling to give him possession is not an application within the meaning of R. 97, the order made on it is not an order under R. 99; and the suit filed thereafter for possession of such property is not a suit under R. 103 so as to make Art. 11-A, Lim. Act, applicable thereto, there having been no execution proceeding or no order made by the Court at any time directing that the decree-holder or auction purchaser should be put into possession of the property on the strength of his decree or sale certificate as the case may be : A I R 1924 All 495 (F B), not foll. Advocate-General, S. C. Mitter and S. P. Sinha—for Appellant.

W. W. K. Page and Laha—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the defendant, a lady of the name of Kiron

Soshi Dasi, appeals from a decision of my learned brother Buckland, J., in a suit brought against her by the Official Assignee of Calcutta for possession of premises No. 10, Sonagachi Lane, in the town of Calcutta together with mesne profits. On 25th February 1896, it appears that a woman of the name of Bhuban Mohini Dasi executed a deed of gift of the property in suit in favour of two persons, Gora Chand Dhur and Gour Mohan Dhur, sons of one Kunja Behari Dhur and these persons on 14th March 1912 granted a mortgage of that property in favour of one Maharaj Kishore Khanna. In July 1914, Khanna instituted a mortgage suit against Gora Chand and Gour Mohan which resulted in a final decree being passed in 1916 and a sale of the property in execution of the decree took place on 10th August 1918. On the day of this sale, Bhuban Mohini not only protested to the Registrar that the property still remained in her and that the deed of gift under which the mortgagors claimed was null and void but she commenced a suit for declaration of her title, for a declaration that the deed of gift was not binding on her and for other reliefs against the mortgagee. She died afterwards and the present defendant Kiron Soshi Dasi was substituted in that suit in Bhuban Mohini's place and stead. While that suit was proceeding, the mortgagee Khanna in his own mortgage suit obtained a sale certificate on 12th March 1919. On 13th March 1923, the suit of Bhuban Mohini which had become the suit of the present appellant Kiron Soshi was dismissed by Page, J. Thereupon, on 25th April 1923, Khanna the mortgagee, in his own suit applied for an order against the present appellant or any other person to vacate and make over vacant possession of the mortgaged premises No. 10, Sonagachi Lane, on the allegation that a certificate of sale had been granted to him but that the premises were in the occupation of the said Kiron Soshi Dasi who refused to give up possession in spite of repeated demands.

In that application, Kiron Soshi Dasi produced evidence of various tenants of the property who deposed to the fact that she and Bhuban Mohini had been in possession for many many years. She did not dispute that she was in possession of the property or contend for a single moment that she was minded to give it up. That application was in the end dismissed by an order made by Greaves, J. Thereafter it is not necessary to detail the events except to say that the present suit was brought by the Official Assignee because Khanna the mortgagee was adjudicated an insolvent on 25th September 1929.

The plaint in the suit which is before us was filed on 9th August 1930. At the hearing of the suit, it was not disputed that Bhuban Mohini and the defendant after her had been in adverse possession of this property even since the date of the deed of gift which Bhuban Mohini had executed to Khanna's mortgagors. At the settlement of the issues, a plea of limitation was taken and a plea of adverse possession and Mr. S. M. Bose on behalf of the plaintiff gave an express admission that the possession had been adverse possession from 1896 onwards. In these circumstances, the defendant who was concluded by the judgment of Page, J., from denying that title was in the Official Assignee on the footing that the deed of gift was valid and that the mortgage to Khanna was a good mortgage contended, first, that the suit was barred by limitation because it was not brought within one year of the order made by Greaves, J., in 1923 dismissing the application for possession. She also contended that her title by adverse possession was a complete defence to the suit. On this point the plaintiff said that Page, J.'s judgment made it impossible for her in this suit to set up Art. 142 or Art. 144, Limitation Act, as a defence.

Now, the first question is a question on the merits, that is to say, whether or not this adverse possession admitted since 1896 leaves the defendant without any answer to the Official Assignee. In my opinion, it affords a complete defence. The contention on behalf of the plaintiff which the learned Judge has acceded to is as follows: The suit before Page, J., had been brought in August 1918. The lady had in her plaint set up that the deed of gift was obtained by undue influence and had never been acted on or given effect to and that Khanna, the mortgagee had notice of all these facts. Page, J., was not convinced that there was anything defective in the deed of gift. He thought it valid and operative. Thereupon learned counsel for the plaintiff in that case ordered Page, J., to allow him to amend the plaint and plead an alternative case to the effect that, even if the deed of gift was valid and effective, the grantor, contrary to the deed of gift, had been in possession ever since, that that was adverse possession for more than 12 years and that the title of the grantee under the deed of gift had thus become extinguished under S. 28, Limitation Act. The learned Judge finding that this case had not been pleaded for one reason or another refused to allow the amendment. He therefore dismissed the suit for declaration as to the deed of gift and for an injunction restraining the mortgagee from proceeding against the mortgaged subject. The learned Judge in the present case has discussed the question whether, although adverse possession was not a subject-matter of decision before Page, J., the question of the lady's adverse possession for 12 years prior to August 1918 is a matter within the explanation to S. 11 of the Code—a matter which might and ought to have been raised in the same suit and he has come to the conclusion that it is such a matter. I am not in the least disposed to disagree with that opinion. I think it was for the lady to put forward a case in her plaint not only on title, but any case which she had to enable her in August 1918 to get relief against the mortgagee on the footing of adverse possession. If that question had been raised it would only have been relevant to see whether or not she had made out that for 12 years prior to 10th August 1918 she had been in adverse possession. It must be taken therefore that before 10th August 1918 she had not been for 12 years in adverse possession, that is to say, she is not now able to say that the title of the Official Assignee was gone on 10th August 1918 by reason of 12 years adverse possession.

It has been pointed out by the learned Advocate-General that the judgment of Page, J., cannot be taken to mean that her possession thereafter ceased to be adverse. Her possession thereafter became all the more acutely adverse by reason of Page, J.'s judgment. Then the question is: Does Page, J.'s judgment necessarily mean more than this: that she cannot be taken to have had in August 1918 adverse possession for 12 years. I am of opinion that it means no more than that. Had she been in adverse possession for two years before that judgment, she would have had no case whatever and, if she had raised the case and the case had been negatived, it would not in the least have been necessary to infer that the Court had come to the conclusion that for those two years she had not been in adverse possession. In my judgment, notwithstanding the judgment of Pago, J., it is quite open to the lady, in the circumstances of the present case, to say that for years before the date of the present plaint she was in adverse possession of the property. That is a complete answer to the suit and, on that ground alone, it seems to me that the suit should have been dismissed with costs.

The question of limitation which the learned Advocate-General raised in this appeal was to the effect that the plaintiff's suit was bad under Art. 11-A, because it was not brought within one year of the order made by Greaves, J., on 25th April 1923, dismissing the mortgagee's application for possession under his sale certificate. The learned Judge has held and I think rightly that those proceedings cannot be said to be proceeding upon an application under R. 97, O. 31 of the Code and the order cannot be held to be an order under R. 99.

The case of Sobha Ram v. Tursi Ram (1), has been pressed in argument before us. In my judgment, the position of the matter under the Code is as follows: If a person has in a suit succeeded in getting a decree for possession of certain property, he is entitled to get an order from the Court for delivering that property to him by way of execution against any person who is bound by the decree. In like manner, if a person is an auction-purchaser of a property in a suit constituted in a certain way, he is entitled to get possession of that property at the hands of the Court by way of execution against persons who are bound by the sale. When in either of such cases the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser desires the assistance of the Court to put him into possession he need not invoke the Court's assistance if he can get possession peaceably without it he has to make up his mind as to the kind of possession he is entitled to claim and whether he is entitled by way of mere execution to get possession against the other party at all; for example, to take the case which is the present case before us—the case of a person who has purchased a property under a mortgage decree, if he cannot for one reason or another get possession, he has to make up his mind whether he will on the strength of his title bring a suit against whoever is in possession or whether he will get a mere summary and equally successful remedy by execution. If he wants execution, he has to make up his mind whether, having regard to the persons whom he desires to remove and having regard to the persons who are likely to object to his getting possession, the case is one within R. 95 or R. 96.

If it is not, that is to say, if some one is in possession who is under no duty to obey the decree in the particular suit, that is a fact which he has to take into account before making up his mind to apply for execution at all. That is a fact which points to this that he is unlikely to get an effective remedy merely by executing his decree or the sale certificate. In these circumstances, it may very well be that the proper course is not to attempt to recover in execution without bringing an independent suit. It is only if he is prepared to say that the case is one within R. 95 or R. 96 that the certificate-holder or decree-holder has any business to approach the Court in that suit for execution and when he does apply, it appears to me that the order he ought to get is an order of the character in form No. 39 in App.E of the Code, not an order directed against any particular person but a general order directing the officer of the Court to put him into possession with a general direction to remove any person who refuses to vacate; else it will be purely a general order of the character specified in R. 96. Having in that way invoked the assistance of the Court to put him into possession of two things one or the other will happen; either he will get or he will fail to get possession because of the resistance or obstruction of somebody and when that happens it appears to me that it is open to him to apply under R. 97. In that case, the Court will investigate the question of the character of the possession or the claim of right of the party objecting to the execution and will make an order under R. 98 or R. 99 the consequence of which will be that the order will be final subject always to the bringing of a suit such as is contemplated by R. 103, O. 21.

In the Allahabad case already cited, it appears to have been assumed that without any order for execution under R. 95, or R. 96 the decree-holder or the certificate-holder who goes on the law by himself and demands possession and does not get it can come straightaway to the Court under R. 97, O. 21 and that has given rise to the further question whether knowing that the person in possession is not minded to give it up it is necessary for him to go physically and be really obstructed or resisted or whether it is enough in such a case merely to show that the person was objecting to his possession. I am not prepared to accept the authority in the Allahabad case in so far as it appears to hold that R. 97 has any application in the absence of an attempt on the part of the Court in execution to give delivery to the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser. The words which appear as the rubric of the particular rules of which R. 97 is the first one "resistance to delivery of possession to decree-holder or purchaser" and the form provided in App. E is plain to the effect that resistance is resistance to the carrying out of the execution by the office of the Court. Form No. 40 is headed "summons to appear and answer charge of obstructing execution of decree" and it proceeds:

"Whereas the decree-holder in the above suit has complained to this Court that you have resisted (or obstructed) the officer charged with the execution of the warrant for possession, you are hereby etc."

The language of the rule is:

"Where the holder of a decree for possession of the purchaser of any such property sold in execution of a decree is resisted or obstructed by any person in obtaining possession of the property."

That language does not, it seems to me, indicate that because an amicable delivering up of the property to the decree-holder or the certificate holder is refused, the matter is to come summarily before the Court, there being no previous execution directed for the purpose of giving possession [of R. 98]. The great difficulty in my judgment is this:

Both the Court and the parties are apt to suppose that in order to get a warrant under R. 95 the question of the character of the possession of the person likely to be obstructed ought to be raised and decided. I am more particular in saying that that is not the intention of R. 95 because one of the Judges in the Allahabad case already mentioned seems to have taken that view and I see that in 1919 in the present case an order was made by me sitting on the original side purporting to be under R. 95 and purporting to direct Kiron Soshi to vacate. That order was afterwards set aside. But it appears to me that the correct way of working these rules is this: First of all, to find out whether the applicant claims to be within R. 95 or R. 96. If he does not, dismiss his application then and there and leave him to bring a separate suit.

If on any reasonable right he claims to be under R. 95 or R. 96, let him have a general warrant mentioning nothing about any particular person who is likely to give trouble; wait and see what particular person does give trouble when the officer of the Court comes to put the applicant into possession; and according to the claim of the person who there gives trouble, an application may successfully be made under R. 97. In my judgment, it would be unsafe for this Court to follow the exposition given by any of the Judges in the case cited from I. L. R. 46 Allahabad (1). The question in this suit is whether an application having been made to Groves, J., on 12th April 1923 by Khanna saying that in spite of repeated demands Kiron Soshi was unwilling to give him possession, the dismissal of that application meant that Khanna had one year only within which to bring his suit. In my judgment, that is not so. Khanna's application was not an application within R. 97; the order was not an order within R. 99 and this suit is not within R. 103 there having been no execution proceeding or no order made by the Court at any time directing that Khanna should be put into possession of the property on the strength of the sale certificate. The application may have been dismissed for this very reason.

One way to test the matter would be to take the case of a decree-holder who falls within O. 21, R. 22. He cannot get execution—Whether under R. 95 or otherwise without giving notice under R. 22. Can he then go informally and without even a warrant or a copy of the decree to demand possession and on refusal bring an application under R. 97 against anyone he finds in possession? I think not; on this point therefore the appeal fails, but as the appellant succeeds on the first point, the result is that the appeal must be allowed with costs and the suit dismissed with costs.

Pugh and S. B. Sinha—for Appellant.

N. N. Sircar and S. C. Mitter—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J.—This suit was brought, on 26th July 1921, by two persons of the name of Ray—mortgagees under an English mortgage, dated 13th February 1920 against two sets of defendants—against a first set as mortgagors and against a second set as puisne mortgagees. The suit was an ordinary suit for the enforcement of the mortgage. On 18th August 1921 a receiver of the mortgaged property was appointed; on 12th April 1922 a preliminary mortgage decree for sale was passed in the usual form. It was a decree under R. 4, O. 34, Civil P. C.

The usual form of mortgage decree on the original side of this Court is not literally and exactly in conformity with Form No. 4, Appendix D, Sch. 1 of the Code, which has reference to Cl. (b), R. 2, O. 34. It is usually necessary to direct the taking of accounts as contemplated by Cl. (a) of that rule. In the present case, apart from directions given for the benefit of the puisne mortgagees, the preliminary decree directed accounts to be taken of what would be due to the plaintiffs for principal and interest on a certain future date, and it further directed that the plaintiffs' costs of the suit should be taxed as between attorney and client. It then provided that, upon the defendants or any one of them, within a certain time, paying what should be reported to be due for principal and interest together with the plaintiffs' taxed costs with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from the date of taxation until realization, the defendants should get back the property. But that if such payments were not made by the time appointed, certain further interest and costs should be added as part of the amount payable to the plaintiffs under the decree; that the property be sold and the money to arise by the sale be paid into Court and applied first in payment of the amount payable to the plaintiffs under the decree, and so forth in accordance with R. 4, O. 34. In accordance with the rules of the High Court, a clause was inserted to the effect that, if the money to arise by the sale should not be sufficient, the plaintiffs should be at liberty to apply for a personal decree for the amount of the balance. In Courts other than the High Court, the costs of the suit are not referred to a Taxing Officer for taxation, but are summarily assessed and are inserted in the decree itself in the manner disclosed by Form No. 1, Appendix D.

The Registrar took the accounts under this decree and, on 21st August 1922, made his report stating what would be due for principal and interest on the security on 12th March 1923. The plaintiffs' solicitors however had not carried in their bill of costs for taxation at this stage. On 16th April 1923, the final decree for sale was passed which simply recited the preliminary decree and the fact that payment thereunder had not been made. It ordered the premises to be sold and gave leave to the plaintiffs to bid with the usual consequential directions. It may be noticed that the decree provided for the plaintiffs' costs of the suit subsequent to the preliminary decree and for taxation thereof. The present appellant thereafter took an assignment of the rights of the plaintiffs and obtained an order on 25th August 1924, substituting him in their stead as the plaintiff. The mortgaged property was thereafter sold by the Registrar in different lots, the last lot being sold to the present appellant on 27th February 1926. This sale was confirmed by an order of the Court made on 29th March 1926. On 4th December 1931, the appellant, by notice of motion, instituted the proceeding out of which this appeal arises. In this proceeding he asked for a personal decree to be passed against the mortgagor defendants for the sum of Rs. 2,67,513, as being the balance due to him after realization of the mortgaged property. The learned Judge has dismissed this application on the ground that it is barred under Art. 181, Schedule to the Lim. Act of 1908, which requires the application to be made within three years from the time when the right to apply accrues.

That Art. 181 is applicable was decided by this Court in Pell v. Gregory (1) and that the date from which time begins to run is the date of the order made under O. 21, R. 92, was decided in Krishna-bandhu Ghatak v. Panchkari Saha (2). Prima facie therefore the appellant's right to apply for a personal decree was barred on 29th March 1929. Before the learned Judge and before us the appellant has sought to avoid this conclusion by reason of the fact that he did not carry in his bill of costs for taxation till 1930 and 1931. The two allocaturs, he holds, are dated 9th May 1930, and 8th August 1931. This is the single point submitted for our consideration and it is the only point dealt with in the judgment of the learned Judge. Other points are taken in the memorandum of appeal, but we have not been asked to consider them. On behalf of the appellant, Mr. Pugh does not contend that there is any need in the High Court to have the costs of suit taxed before applying for a personal decree, which in this Court, in a case like the present, usually recites the amount of the net proceeds of sale, the amount of the plaintiff's claim for principal and interest and the difference between these two sums, and then directs the defendant to pay to the plaintiff this difference with decretal interest at 6 per cent per annum and also his costs of the suit. He contends however that he is not obliged to ask for a decree in this form, and that if we look at Form No. 11 of App. D as it stood in 1929, or Form No. 8 of the appendix as it now stands, we will find that the amount due to the plaintiff in respect of costs is contemplated as having been ascertained. He says accordingly that he is entitled to ask for a decree for a definite sum of money which would include everything including all costs except the cost of this application for a personal decree.

I agree with the learned Judge in thinking that this contention is unsound. The object of the personal decree is to give to the plaintiff a remedy not so far given to him by the preliminary or the final decree for sale; and to give him this remedy only after compelling him to give credit to the defendant for the sale proceeds. The fact that the forms contemplate that the costs have either been assessed at a specific sum by the earlier decrees or can there and then be assessed is explained by the circumstance that Courts in India have ordinarily no taxing master and no procedure for the carrying in of bills of costs for taxation. The High Court, on its original side, like the Courts in England, assesses costs on different principles and by a more elaborate machinery. Where it is clear that, apart from the costs, a heavy balance is due to the plaintiff upon his mortgage, the personal decree, which, for the first time makes the mortgagor liable for the payment of costs, is in no way different from any other decree which awards the costs of a suit. These costs are not like an award of damages, but are to be regarded as a liquidated amount capable of ascertainment. R. G. O. 34, speaks of "the amount due to the plaintiff," "the net proceeds of the sale" and "the balance." The rule makes no specific reference to the form and is not limited by the form which is provided merely for use and adaptation according to the circumstances of the case. Art. 181, Lim. Act, is a residuary article adapted to many different classes of application. The words in Col. 3 are only the expression of a broad Common law principle. They have to be interpreted and applied according to the substance of each case. In the present case, as it is not disputed that the plaintiff in the ordinary way could have obtained a personal decree in the ordinary form for the balance, including what was due to him for costs, I agree with the learned Judge in thinking that the argument for the appellant cannot be accepted and this appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 417 of 1928, Decided on 2nd March 1932, against original decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Zillah 21-Pargannas, D. 28th July 1928.

(a) Will—Construction—M executing will on 11th April 1868—Government promissory notes given to wife B, on her death to daughter D and on her death to daughter's sons—D having two sons K and J—K predeceasing both B and D—D who died after B making will of all her properties but not mentioning promissory notes—J taking conveyance from K's son regarding all properties in 1901—In 1922 K's son executing in very general terms deed of release in favour of J's wife to whom J by his will had given his properties in consideration for certain gift made by his wife—No mention of promissory notes even in this deed—Fact of promissory notes not disclosed to K's son till 1922—In 1926 K's son suing to recover his half-share in them—Will of M created gifts in praesenti and hence K and J took vested interest—K who was living after testator's death got absolute estate though enjoyment of it was postponed till death of B and D—Hence his right was not defeated though he predeceased B and D—Art. 120 applied to suit—K's son could claim advantage of S. 18, Lim. Act, since J who was his co-partner fraudulently concealed from him existence of promissory notes—Deed of release did not relinquish K's son's rights to promissory notes—K's son was not estopped from claiming his share in promissory notes—Limitation Act (1908), S. 18 and Art. 120—Evidence Act (1872), S. 115.

M, a Hindu testator, executed a will on 11th April 1868, which provided that certain Government promissory notes should devolve upon his wife B, on her death upon his daughter D and on her death upon the daughter's sons. The relevant provision of the will read as follows: "My wife, and on her death my daughter and on her death my daughter's sons shall, on my death be entitled to get the Government promissory notes exclusively belonging to me . . . neither my brother nor my nephews nor my brother's grandsons shall be competent to make any claim." D had two sons, K and J. K predeceased both his mother and grandmother. After the death of B, D died leaving a will regarding her self-acquired properties as well as those inherited from her father but no mention was made of the promissory notes. J took a conveyance from K's son (who is the plaintiff) regarding all his properties in 1901. J also made a will by which he gave all his properties to his wife (the defendant). In 1922 plaintiff executed in very general terms a deed of release by which he relinquished all claim against J's estate in consideration of a gift made by defendant. No mention of the promissory notes was made even in this deed. The fact of the existence of the promissory notes was not disclosed to the plaintiff till 1922. In 1926 plaintiff sued defendant for recovery of his half-share in the promissory notes.

Held: that the intention of the testator was to make gifts in praesenti only postponing the enjoyment thereof in the case of the daughter till the death of the widow, and in the case of the grandsons till the lives of the widow and the daughter were over. The will created an absolute estate in favour of the grandsons with the two life estates intervening. Hence, as plaintiff's father was alive when testator died, plaintiff's right to a half-share could not be disputed, though his father predeceased testator's widow and daughter: Hullifax v. Wilson, (1809) 16 Ves Jun 168, Ref. [P 256 C 2]

Held further: that the suit was governed by Art. 120 and that Arts. 123 and Art. 62 and 49 had no application: A I R 1932 P C 81 and 21 Cal 151 (P C), Rel on. [P 257 C 1]

Held further: that J and the plaintiff were copartners and therefore it was the duty of J to speak; and since he remained silent there was concealed fraud on his part on which the plaintiff could justly rely to get over the bar of limitation. The burden therefore would lie on defendant to show that plaintiff had clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constituted fraud. To discharge this burden it would not be enough to show that the plaintiff had means available to him for coming to know of the fraud. As the suit was well within six years from the time when fraud became known to plaintiff the suit was not barred: A I R 1929 Cal 250, Rel on. [P 258 C 1]

Held further: that the deed of release executed by plaintiff in favour of defendant, although expressed in very general terms did not relinquish the claim to the promissory notes as there was fraudulent concealment with regard to them on the part of J, under whom the defendant claimed: Jarris v. Duke, (1681) 1 Vern 20; Broderick v. Broderick, (1713) 1 P Wms 237, Ref.

Held further: that the deed of release and the deed of gift could not operate as estoppel against the plaintiff as it was not possible to hold that the defendant was misled into thinking that the plaintiff was giving up his right to the promissory notes: 20 Cal 296 (P C), Rel on.

[P 259 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 49—Art. 49 does not apply where half-share in moveable is sought to be recovered by declaration of title.

Article 49 is inapplicable in a case where a half-share in certain moveable is sought to be recovered on declaration of title, such a suit not being a suit for specific moveable property, which means property of which one can demand the delivery in specie. [P 259 C 2]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 18—What constitutes fraud—Effect of fraud.

Except when the plaintiff's knowledge is an ingredient of his cause of action, the plaintiff's ignorance of his right to sue does not prevent time from running against him. But it is otherwise if such ignorance is brought about by the fraud of the defendant. In order to constitute fraud there must be some abuse of confidential position, some intentional imposition, or some deliberate concealment of facts: a designed fraud, Judgment.—In this suit the plaintiff Probodh Chandra Sircar, asked for a declaration of title to and recovery of possession of an 8-annas share of certain Government promissory notes of the face value of Rs. 100,100, or in the alternative for the value thereof, together with interest thereon, and for other consequential reliefs. The Subordinate Judge having decreed the suit the defendant Swarnamoyi Dasi has preferred this appeal.

The parties are related thus:

On 11th April 1868 Ram Kamal Mondal executed a will (Ex. 1) under which he left an 8-annas share of his paternal properties to his brother Radha Mohan and the other 8-annas thereof to Iswar Chandra and Brajendra, the son and grandson respectively of his other brother Radharaman and, providing that Radharaman should pay Rs. 25 a month, and Iswar Chandra and Brojendra Rs. 25 a month, i. e. Rs. 50 in all, to Ram Kamal's widow, daughter and daughter's sons; he provided that Government promissory notes of the value of rupees two lacs odd, which had been dedicated to the worship of the ejmali deity Sridhar Jiu Thakur but stood in his name should, on his death, go to his brother Radhamohan who would perform the sheba of the deity with the interest thereof; he recited that he had already dedicated some of his self-acquired properties to the deity Sri Raghunath Jiu Thakur installed by him, but they proved insufficient; and he accordingly left some other self-acquired properties to his wife Bhagabati Dasi and on her death to his daughter and daughter's sons, so that the income thereof might be applied for the worship of the said deity and also for the maintenance and other necessary expenses of the daughter and the grandson enjoining them to perform the worship of the said deity in the said manner; and as regards other Government promissory notes which he had, that is to say besides those which had been dedicated to the Ijmali deity as aforesaid, he provided :

Excepting these, my wife Bhagabati Dasi and on her death my daughter and on her death my daughter's sons shall, on my death, be entitled to get the Government promissory notes exclusively belonging to me whose numbers are mentioned in the aforesaid Court papers, and in respect of those lastmentioned papers neither my brother, nor my nephews nor my brother's grandsons shall be competent to make any claim, and even if they do the same will not be accepted. It is these Government Promissory Notes, or rather an eight annas share thereof which the plaintiff alleges he is entitled to, which forms the subject-matter of the suit. A few more facts require to be stated. Ram Kamal died on 21st April 1868. Probate of his will was taken by the executors of whom his widow Bhagabati Dasi was one. On 6th August 1890 Bhagabati Dasi died. On 12th March 1891 the daughter Debraui filed an application for Letters of Administration (Ex. 10) alleging that Government promissory notes of the value of one lac one hundred which Ram Kamal had bequeathed in the aforesaid manner had been endorsed over to Bhagabati Dasi as she had a life interest therein, and that the said Government promissory notes were in her possession since Bhagabati Dasi's death. She obtained the Letters of Administration and her son Jadu Nath Sircar who held a power of attorney from her dated 3rd August 1878 (Ex. 12) bound himself as surety for her in that matter (Ex. 11). The plaintiff was born in 1881. His father Brojendra, brother of Jadu, died in 1884 or 1885. In 1892 Debraui died leaving a will (vide Ex. 3) in which no specific mention was made of these Government promissory notes, but it was said that she had moveable and immovable properties, as her stridhan, acquired from presents given to her from her father and her mother and that she had on her mother's death obtained certain moveable and immoveable properties under her father's will as his heir, from the income whereof she had also purchased some other properties of her own. She purported to make the will saying that all her properties, with the exception of those that she got under her father's will as his heiress, belonged to her absolutely. The properties which thus belonged to her absolutely were disposed of by the will. By the will she gave, subject to certain bequests, a moiety thereof to Jadu absolutely, and she provided that the other half, subject to an allowance for maintenance of Probodh's mother, was to be held in trust by Jadu for Probodh until Probodh attained the age of 25 years. The will provided that if Probodh behaved in a certain way he would be taken to have an absolute interest under the will, but in case Probodh died without any issue this moiety would go to Jadu and his heirs. On 3rd May 1893 Jadu obtained probate (Ex. 3) of Debraui's will. Probodh attained majority in 1899. It is common ground that by this time he had acquired vices and had contracted debts and gone astray and that it became impossible to restrain him in the wild career into which he had launched himself. Soon after he attained majority, that is to say, on 24th November 1901, Jadu took from him a conveyance of his entire properties. This conveyance is not before us, but it is said that it was for an adequate consideration. On 1st February 1915 Jadu died leaving him surviving his widow Swarnamoyee, the defendant in this suit, and a will by which he left all his ancestral and self-acquired properties to her in absolute right. Prior to Jadu's death Probodh had married, and he, his wife and his mother evidently were by this time in want, living mainly if not entirely on the bounty of Jadu. It is fairly clear that after Jadu's death, trouble from him was apprehended ; and in consequence of this apprehension Swarnamoyee, before applying for probate of Jadu's will, took a letter from Probodh, his wife and his mother (Ex. C) dated 3rd April 1915, in which it was said :

"The revered Jadu Nath Sircar left by his will all his ancestral and self-acquired properties to you for good in absolute right. We were his dependants and were supported by him. In order that there might be any difficulty in future as regards our maintenance he had made up his mind to settle with us Sm. Nityakali Dasi (the mother) and Sm. Pankajini Dasi (the wife) the properties purchased by him from Probodh Chandra Sircar. But on account of his sudden death he could not give effect to it. Now that we requested you for that purpose, you too out of affection for us have agreed to make a proper settlement and have said so. So we and our Probodh Chandra Sircar all convey our thanks and inform you that none of us have any objection or claim at all with regard to his estate. You may soon take out probate without any trouble and go on maintaining us. This is our prayer."

On 28th March 1922 two deeds of release were executed, one by Probodh (Ex. A) and the other by Nitya Kali Dasi (Ex. B), and it is said that on the same day Swarnamoyee executed a deed of gift in favour of Nitya Kali Dasi in respect of all the properties which Probodh had conveyed to Jadu in 1901. After the aforesaid documents were executed there appears to have been several litigations between the parties: two suits were brought by Probodh against Swarnamoyee to recover arrears of annuity due upon the term of Ram Kamal's will, and a suit was instituted by Nitya Kali against Swarnamoyee to recover a sum of money which she alleged she had kept with Jadu; but it is not necessary to state what the results of these litigations were. Thereafter on 1st October 1926 the present suit was instituted. The suit was resisted by the defendant upon various grounds amongst which such as have been urged before us in this appeal will now be dealt with. The first contention urged is put in the defendant's written statement in these words:

"This defendant further submits that as there is a provision in the will of Ramkamal Mondal deceased that his wife Bhagabati Dasi, and on her death her daughter, and on her death her daughter's sons, would acquire all his self-acquired Government Promissory Notes and as the said Bhagabati Dasi and Debrani Dasi were alive after the death of the said Ramkamal Mondal and as the plaintiff's father, the late Brojendra Nath Sircar, died during the lifetime of the said Bhagabati Dasi and Debrani Dasi, the said Brojendra Nath Sircar or the plaintiff did not or could not legally acquire any title to the self-acquired Government promissory notes which were left by the late Ramkamal Mondal."

The question is one of construction. It has been argued that the use of the word Tad avarthamane (on her death) and the omission of any restrictive words as regards the estates that were conferred on the wife, the daughter and the grandsons, indicate that not successive estates but substitutional estates were intended to be conferred. In other words, it has been contended that the whole object of the will was to keep these Government promissory notes away from the brother and his line and that nothing else was done by the will than to leave them to his widow, and then to his daughter and thereafter to his daughter's sons, as it would be in the case of intestacy. We are unable to agree in this view. Putting ourselves in the testator's arm-chair for the moment, as we are bound to do, we can conceive of no reason why the testator should think of mentioning the daughter and the daughter's sons if it was his intention to postpone the bequests themselves in their favour in that way; we think it was his intention to make gifts in praesenti in their favour, only postponing the enjoyment thereof in the case of the daughter till on the death of the widow, and in the case of the grandsons till the lives of the widow and the daughter were over. We have been asked to construe the words used in their natural meaning; it is true that it is not expressly stated in the will that the estate to the widow was for her life, or that the estate to the daughter was for her life, and it is also true that so far as the widow and the daughter are concerned the devise apparently is no more restricted in its character than in the case of the grandsons. But taking the whole of the bequest together and giving the words their natural meaning we are driven to the conclusion that what was meant was that it would go to the widow for her life, then to the daughter for her life and thereafter to the grandsons absolutely. In other words the intention was to create an absolute estate in the grandsons with the two life estates intervening, a thing not unknown or repugnant to Hindu law. The will, having regard to its date, is not governed by the Succession Act, but even if the principles of that Act are applied to it the same result is reached because the interests created are not "contingent" but "vested." The expression "on her death" must be taken to indicate merely the time when the gift over is to be reduced to possession and not the time when the right to such possession vests: see Hallifax v. Wilson (1). The principle underlying this rule is that no contingency is imported by the fact that the legacy is given after a life-estate in the property bequeathed. As nothing is more certain than that every person who lives must die, the death of a life-tenant is an event not contingent but certain.

But if the bequest had been not merely after the death of the life-tenant

but to such of her sons as may be surviving on her death, then clearly the condition of surviving or being alive at her death would be a condition precedent to the vesting itself and the bequest would be a contingent one. As the plaintiffs' father was alive at the testator's death the plaintiffs' right to a half-share of the Government promissory notes cannot, in our opinion, be disputed. (Here the judgment considered matter not material for this report, and taking up the question of limitation it proceeded as follows.) Be that as it may, the question of limitation really depends upon the article to be applied. On behalf of the appellant it has been contended that the article applicable is Art. 49 or Art. 62, and on the respondent's behalf it has been said that either Art. 123 or Art. 120 is the article to apply. That Art. 123 will not apply has now been conclusively settled by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ghulam Mohammad v. Ghulam Hussain (2). Their Lordships have said in that case :

"This article (meaning Art. 123) only applies where the suit is brought against an executor or administrator or some person legally charged with the duty of distributing the estate."

It cannot be contended that any such capacity or duty can be attributed to Swarnamoyee. In the case of Mohomed Reasat Ali v. Mt. Hasin Banu (3), in which a Mahomedan widow had sued to recover the cash and moveables left by her husband on the ground that she was her husband's heiress, their Lordships observed :

"This is not a suit for a distributive share of property (Art. 123), nor a suit for specific moveable property wrongfully taken (Art. 49). This latter article does not appear to be applicable to a suit to establish a right to inherit the property of a deceased person. Art. 120 provides for a period of limitation of six years in a suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the schedule."

Article 62, in our opinion, is wholly inappropriate. Art. 49 is, in our judgment, equally so in a case where, as here, a half-share in certain moveable is sought to be recovered on declaration of title, such a suit not being a suit for "specific moveable property, which means property of which one can demand the delivery in specie. In our opinion it must be held that the suit is governed by the residuary Art. 120. The plaintiff had six years from the date when the right to sue accrued. That right accrued to him when the half-share of the Government promissory notes became due to him and so the question is whether he can rely, as he does, on S. 18, Lim. Act. As regards the circumstances under which and the extent to which he may do so, the following proposition is well settled : Except when the plaintiff's knowledge is an ingredient of his cause of action the plaintiff's ignorance of his right to sue does not prevent time from running against him. But it is otherwise if such ignorance is brought about by the fraud of the defendant. In order to constitute fraud there must be some abuse of confidential position, some intentional imposition, or some deliberate concealment of facts : a designed fraud, by which a party knowing to whom the right belongs conceals the facts and circumstances giving that right. The right of the party so defrauded is not affected by lapse of time, or by anything done or omitted to be done, so long as he remains, without any fault of his own, in ignorance of the fraud which has been committed. In the case of Rahimboy Hubibboy v. Turner (4) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed :

"When a man has committed fraud, the onus is on him to show that the injured person had clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constituted fraud, at a time which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit. The burden is not discharged by proof of the fact that some hints and clues had reached plaintiff, which might have led to such knowledge."

It is not the defendant's case that Jadu had informed the plaintiff about his right to the Government promissory notes under the will. Indeed, that cannot be her case, because such a case would be repugnant to her contention that the plaintiff had no such right at all. In such circumstances it may safely be taken that the plaintiff's case that Jadu never disclosed to him his right to the Government promissory notes under the will is true. It is not also difficult to infer that when Jadu took the Government promissory notes endorsed over to himself and dealt with or disposed of them he never disclosed that fact to the plaintiff. Indeed, judging from the position that the plaintiff was occupying in the family and the relations which existed between him and Jadu and considering that Jadu took a conveyance from the plaintiff in respect of all his other properties evidently with a desire to save them from being wasted, it is inconceivable that Jadu would ever think of doing so. To establish that such non-disclosure constituted fraud three different attributes have been ascribed to Jadu. It has been urged that he was in the first place the karta of the joint family, and next, that he was a trustee appointed under Debrani's will, and thirdly, that he was the plaintiff's cosharer in the matter of the Government promissory notes.

Having regard to the recalcitrant career which the plaintiff had begun to pursue and the transaction in the shape of the purchase of plaintiff's properties which Jadu had made in 1901, it is difficult to attribute to Jadu, by reason of his being the senior male member of the family, the fiduciary character which is attributable to the karta of a Mitakshara joint family, even assuming that, so far as such a character is concerned, a karta of a Dayabhaga joint family does not stand on a different footing. The trust that Jadu was to hold the properties dealt with by Debrani's will on behalf of the plaintiff was clearly not in respect of the Government promissory notes. But a cosharer he certainly was for the will gave him only a half-share in the Government promissory notes, the other half belonging, under the will, to the plaintiff on the termination of Debrani's death. If during the lifetime of Debrani he got possession of the Government promissory notes from her he upon a true construction of the will, was but a sharer therein and could claim no higher rights and privileges than a partner or a cosharer could. A partner is always entitled to rely on the good faith of his co-partner. And a cosharer coming into exclusive possession of property belonging to himself and his cosharer will be presumed to have done so not only for himself but for his cosharer as well until there is ouster: see Biswanath Chakravarti v. Rabia Khatun (5). There was therefore a duty on the part of Jadu to speak, and if he remained silent when there was such a duty, there was concealed fraud on his part on which the plaintiff can justly rely to get over the bar of limitation: Betjammann v. Bet- jamann (6). Once this position is reached the burden would lie on the defendant to show that the plaintiff had "clear and definite knowledge of the facts which constituted fraud which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit." To discharge this burden, it is not enough for the defendant to show that the plaintiff had means available to him for coming to know of the fraud. As Rigby, L. J., observed in the case of Betjammann v. Betjammann (6):

"What is the duty of a man to inquire? To whom does he owe that duty? Certainly not to the person who has committed the concealed fraud. For a man in that position to come and say: 'you ought to have inquired, and if you had inquired, you would have found me out' is utterly opposed to every principle of equity."

The positive evidence which the defendant has brought to prove that the plaintiff in fact had knowledge of his rights under the will is not believable and what the defendant herself has said in her evidence as to the plaintiff having had every access to the persons and therefore having had every opportunity of knowing how matters really stood falls far short of making out facts on which it might be held that time began to run against the plaintiff. As the suit was instituted well within six years from 1922, when the plaintiff says he acquired knowledge of the facts, the claim, in our judgment is not barred.

Then it has been contended that the deed of release executed by the plaintiff in 1922 (Ex. A) absolves the defendant from her liability. But the deed is entirely silent as regards the Government promissory notes, and it is nobody's case that any claim to or repudiation of a liability in respect of the Government promissory notes, in respect of which the deed could be regarded as constituting a disclaimer, was, at the date of the deed, in the contemplation of the parties. We have read the terms of the deed with care, but notwithstanding the wide words in which they have been expressed we are not able to hold that they can be read as including a dispute which the parties never thought of at the time. The words of the deed run thus:

"Be it further stated that with regard to the management of my properties during my minority by my said father's elder brother, i. e., your husband, the said late Jadu Nath Sircar, as trustee on my behalf as well as any monies due to me that came into his hands or control in connexion therewith, as also with regard to any act done by him in connexion with my properties after my attainment of majority I did not make any claim or demand against your husband, and of this I informed your husband and yourself repeatedly long ago. But as there was nothing in writing about the same and as you demanded a written disclaimer from me with regard thereto, I accordingly hereby, etc."

Reading the deed as a whole it seems to us that its intention was to effect a release in respect of all claims arising on account of the properties described in the schedule to the deed and which had been taken by Jadu under the conveyance of 1901, and on account of all liabilities consequent on the management thereof and also all demands that could be made against Jadu for his dealings as trustee appointed by Deh-rani's will. But assuming that the words, which are very general and wide, may be read as including all claims of all kinds, the position is that the defendant who has obtained the properties left by Jadu by his will, can have no higher rights and equities in her favour than Jadu himself had. She is not in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value or an innocent third party. To her will apply all such considerations as could, in law and equity, apply to Jadu himself. The proposition is as old as the hills that a release shall be avoided where there is suppressio veri or suggestio falsi: see Jarris v. Duke (7) and Broderick v. Broderick (8). The proposition is expressed in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, §§. 217 and 219, thus:

"It is upon the same ground that a Court of equity proceeds where an instrument is so general in its terms as to release the rights of the party to property to which he was wholly ignorant that he had any title, and which is not within the contemplation of the bargain at the time when it was made. In such cases the Court restrains the instrument to the purposes of the bargain, and confines the release to the right intended to be released or extinguished.

... Nor is it in every case where even a material fact is mistaken or unknown without any default of the parties that a Court of equity will interfere. The fact may be unknown to both parties, or it may be known to one party and unknown to the other. If it is known to one party and unknown to the other, that will in some cases afford a solid ground for relief, as for instance where it operates as a surprise or a fraud upon the ignorant party. But in all cases the ground of relief is not the mistake or ignorance of the material facts alone, but the unconscientious advantage taken by the party by the concealment of them. For if the parties act fairly, and it is not a case where one is bound to communicate the facts to the other upon the ground of confidence or otherwise, there the Court will not interfere."

Lastly it has been urged that by reason of the fact that the defendant was induced to execute the deed of gift there is an estoppel against the plaintiff. The estoppel is pleaded thus in the written statement:

"The real fact is that the plaintiff, after he had sold all his properties to the defendant's husband made great efforts to get back the same from the defendant's husband Jadu Nath Sircar during his lifetime, and although the defendant's husband had a mind to make a gift of those properties in his favour he became displeased with the plaintiff on account of his ill-treatment and oppressive behaviour and did not execute such a deed in his favour. Subsequently after the death of this defendant's husband this defendant obtained the entire properties left by him in absolute right according to the provisions of her husband's will; whereupon the plaintiff entreated this defendant a good deal to make a gift of the properties sold by him and told him that he had no claim against her husband for the administration and management of his properties and for any work done by him during the time nor had he any claim for any money in that connexion and that he had no claim whatever in that connexion against the estate owned, held and left by him, and accordingly executed on 28th March 1922, the nadabi or deed of release, etc. (para. 13).

"This defendant relying on the statements of the release executed by the plaintiff, and also on his promise, made a gift of property worth at least two lakhs in the name of his mother for the benefit of him and his family; the plaintiff's claim is barred by waiver, acquiescence and estoppel and the plaintiff is legally debarred from bringing the present suit (para. 15)."

Strictly speaking, the averments set out above are not sufficient for a plea of estoppel. But it is not unreasonable to assume that they mean that the defendant in making the gift acted on the representation of the plaintiff that he would have no further claim if the gift was made; and inasmuch as she did make it the plaintiff cannot be permitted to turn round and run contrary to the representation that he then made. There are however several difficulties in the way of this plea of the defendant being allowed. In the first place the defendant who derives her title through Jadu cannot plead any higher estoppel than Jadu could, and in view of the concealed fraud that Jadu was guilty of, the defendant can hardly plead an estoppel of this character, which, after all, embodies a doctrine of equity. It had been pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Sarat Chandra Dey v. Go.

pal Chunder Lala (9) that the existence of the estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter on the part of the person making it, and in that way it does not matter whether the plaintiff's intention in making the representation was fraudulent or was due to mistake or misapprehension and it is enough that the defendant was misled. So far however as the present case is concerned the defendant can hardly be permitted to take the plea of estoppel, claiming as she does through Jadu, through whose concealed fraud the plaintiff was kept in ignorance of his real rights. Then again the essence of the doctrine is that the defendant should have been misled; but when none of the parties had any idea, at the time, of plaintiff's rights to the Government promissory notes and the representation did not expressly include such rights, it is not possible to hold that the defendant was misled into thinking that the plaintiff was giving up such rights.

In our opinion the contentions urged on behalf of the appellants cannot succeed. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs to respondent 1 only. The application not being pressed is rejected.

Appeals Nos. 277 of 1928 and 116 to 121 of 1929, Decided on 20th May 1932, against decree of Sub-Judge, Rangpur, D/- 3rd December 1927.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 116—Landlord and tenant—Tenant continuing to hold on payment of rent on expiry of term is in position of tenant holding over and 15 days' notice is sufficient—T. P. Act (1882), S. 106.

When persons hold under yearly leases but on the expiry of the terms thereof continue to hold on payment of rent to the lessor, their position is of tenants holding over and not of trespassers; and if there are no agreements to the contrary i. e., as regards the terms of holding over, or as to the period of notice for determining the tenancy, the leases should, under S. 116, be regarded as being renewed from month to month, though rent is being paid per year. 15 days' notice ending with a month of the tenancy would be sufficient: 32 Cal 123; A I R 1915 Cal 313 and 18 I C 844, Ref. [P 261 C 2]

Judgment.—These appeals arise out of certain suits which were instituted by the Secretary of State for India in Council for ejecting the defendants on service of notices to quit. The suits having been dismissed by the Court below, the plaintiff, the Secretary of State for India in Council, has preferred these appeals. Except as regards one of the suits which has given rise to F. A. No. 277 of 1928 the facts of the cases are very similar. In each of these other suits the facts are the following: The defendants were in possession of their respective plots for a long series of years under annual leases. In 1914 the plaintiff introduced a form of lease designating it as a license to receive which the defendants objected but they were told that the form would make no difference and they would be allowed to hold the plots as they did before under the leases. They held under the licenses the last of which expired on 31st March 1917. On 1st June 1917, the plaintiff gave them notices calling upon them to vacate by 31st July 1917.

In the suit in which the facts are special the original tenant was one Mr. Heather who came into possession under an agreement dated 1893. He transferred his holding to one Mrs. Claudius in 1900, and she, in her turn, sold it to defendant in 1906. Up to 31st March 1914, this defendant held under successive yearly leases. For the next three years he held under the annual licenses. Notices, as in the other cases, were given to him. A further notice was given to him on 30th September 1918, calling upon him to vacate by the last day of October 1918. The suits, it may be mentioned here, were instituted on 3rd May 1922, and have been dismissed on the ground that the notices given were not sufficient.

The appeals, in our opinion, should be dismissed, though not exactly for the reasons which the Subordinate Judge has given. In 1914 when the new forms of licenses were introduced the defendants objected to accept them. The Subordinate Judge held upon the oral evidence and also a letter (Ex. D) that the defendants were induced to sign the new license forms on the representation of the Agent and the Chief Engineer of the Railway that their position under the old leases would not be disturbed by their signing the new forms of licenses, and that therefore the licenses, obtained as they were under a misrepresentation, were not binding on them. They remained in occupation and continued to pay their rents up to 31st March 1917 after which no rent was accepted from them. On these facts the Subordinate Judge held that the relationship between the parties was as of tenants holding over on the expiry of yearly leases, and so Ss. 106 and 116, T. P. Act, being applicable, the tenancies having originally been created for purposes of residence and for holding shops, the defendants were entitled to 15 days' notice ending with a month of the tenancies. He was of opinion however that the notices that were given were not such as are required by S. 106, T. P. Act.

It has been contended before us in the first place that no notices were necessary because at the end of each year of the licenses and till another license was issued the position of the defendants was that of mere trespassers. Now the important provisions in the lease bearing upon this question are that if the lessee desired to continue in occupation after the expiry of the twelve calendar months for which the lease was granted he would have to give 15 days' notice of such intention before the period of the lease expired (Cl. 9), that if no such notice is given or if such notice is given but the lessor is not willing to grant a fresh lease, the lessee shall vacate and deliver up possession (Cl. 10), and that if within the term the land is required for railway purposes the lessee will have to vacate on three months' notice (Cl. 11). There is also a clause (Cl. 12) in the nature of a penal clause that if the lessee is guilty of breach of any of the sanitary and conservancy rules, the railway will have the right to resume possession without any previous notice. In the license there is no provision as to notices at all, but it is provided that if on the expiry of the license the licensor is not willing to purchase the structures the licensees would be bound to remove them within two calendar months from the determination of the license (Cl. 8).

Upon the evidence on which the Subordinate Judge has referred we think it is a fair view to take of the situation to hold that the defendants accepted the licenses on the understanding that their position as under the leases would not be affected. Their position therefore was as of persons who held under yearly leases but on the expiry of the terms thereof were holding over on payment of rent to the lessor. It may be observed here that the provision as to giving 15 days' notice of an intention to renew was never enforced in practice. If there was nothing else to be taken into consideration and if the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case, the leases on their expiry would under S. 116 of the Act have to be regarded as being renewed from month to month, though rent was being paid per year, in view of the provisions of S. 106 of the Act. The word "agreement" in the expression "an agreement to the contrary" in S. 116 has been held to mean an agreement as to the terms of the holding over: see Pratlokya Nath Roy v. Sarat Chandra Banerji (1) and Gobinda Chandra Saha v. Dwarka Nath (2). There having been no provision in the contracts between the parties what, if any, should be the notice in case the defendants were holding over, 15 days' notice ending with a month of the tenancy would be necessary and sufficient. It has been suggested on behalf of the respondents that the true position was that the defendants were holding under yearly leases coupled with an implied agreement that they would hold over from year to year and that therefore they were entitled to six months' notice. As has been pointed out in the case of Gobinda Chandra Saha v. Dwarka Nath (2), this is an ingenious attempt to substitute for a lease from year to year a tenancy for one year coupled with an agreement to renew it from year to year and such a lease would in effect be a lease from year to year, which in view of S. 107 cannot be created except by a registered instrument: see also Moti Lal v. Darjeeling Municipality (3).

1. (1905) 32 Cal 124.

On the assumption that the Act applied and that there was nothing else to stand in the way, the next question would be as regards the sufficiency of the notices that were issued. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the notices such as they were in this case cannot be looked upon as notices for termination of the licenses under S. 106 of the Act and so were invalid. It is not very clear as to why he was of that opinion. On examining the notices carefully we find that the following two objections can conceivably be taken: (1) that the notices proceeded on the footing that the defendants were trespassers and not lessees or licensees whose leases or licenses were to be determined by the notices; and (2) that instead of 15 days they gave two months' time. Neither of these objections can be regarded as well founded. The giver of a notice is not bound to admit the person to whom it is given as a tenant; a notice is good notwithstanding that the addressee is described therein as a trespasser: Ram Charan v. Hari Charan (4). Nor can it be reasonably contended that if two months' time is given where only 15 days' time is necessary, that invalidates the notice. After all, the requirements of S. 106 are very few. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have observed in the case of Harihar Banerji v. Ram Shashi Roy (5):

"Notices to quit though not strictly accurate or consistent in the statements embodied in them, may still be good and effective in law; that the test of their sufficiency is not what they would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances, touching the holding to which they purport to refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances; and further that they are to be construed not with a desire to find faults in them, which would render them defective, but to be considered ut res magis valeat quam pereat."

But there are two other difficulties in the plaintiff's way. It appears that after the notices were given fresh licenses were issued in favour of the defendants. These licenses on the face of them purport to run from the date of the agreement they embody, e. g., 23rd August 1917, 16th November 1917, 10th January 1918, and so on, all after the dates of the notices and the expiry of the period mentioned therein, and on the face of them they purport to enure for a period of one year. But we have been asked to take it that they were intended to be licenses for the year ending on this 31st March 1917, and that they were issued on the respective dates for the back periods, not having been timely issued for some reason or other. Of this however there is no evidence and the only materials which are pointed out in support of this explanation is that in Cl. 6 of the licenses it is stipulated the licensee would pay the fees, etc., as from the 1st day of April 1916, and in a schedule the date of expiration of the license is given as 31st March 1917. Neither of these materials by themselves would, in our opinion, conclusively establish that the licenses were for the year which had already expired. The respondents, on the other hand, say that the date of expiry mentioned in the schedule means the date on which the previous license expired. What the real facts are it is not easy to determine. But these matters cannot be disposed of on mere suppositions; there must be evidence adduced by the plaintiff to show how and why and for what period these licenses came to be issued or what was the necessity for issuing them after the period itself was over and after notices to quit had already been served. The necessity for explaining these matters becomes all the greater, where, as here, the plaintiff waits for nearly five years after serving the notices to quit and takes no action in the meantime.

The other difficulty in the plaintiff's way is created by the contention which was put forward on his behalf in the Court below and was overruled in that Court, but has been repeated with great force and insistency in this Court. It has been urged that in view of the provisions of the Crown Grants Act (15 of 1895) the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to Crown Grants. The Subordinate Judge has held that :

"there being no special contract the Crown Grants Act would not apply and the relation between the parties should be governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act."

The question is not free from difficulty, but we do not consider it necessary to decide it, because on the assumption that the plaintiff's contention is well founded the general law would apply. In no view of the case can it be said that the defendants were mere trespassers not entitled to notice. They were at least tenants by sufferance and so entitled to reasonable notice. Having regard to the fact that the defendants had permission under their lease, to build structures on the land, and the leases themselves provided for three months' notice within the term, we should think that three months' notice would be fair and reasonable. In the above view of the matter we think we must hold that the suits were not maintainable for want of reasonable notices to quit. Should the plaintiff desire to eject the defendants notices suggested above must be given.

The Subordinate Judge has dealt with a few other points and has recorded his conclusions thereon. As regards the question whether the notices that were issued were properly served his finding was in favour of the plaintiff. It is not necessary to go into this question, but we must say that as regards the notices meant for one of the defendants there is a considerable doubt. On the question whether the defendants are entitled to the prices of the structures which he has decided in favour of the defendants, his conclusion as regards the structures which have been on the land of the defendant Madhu Sudan Mookerjee since the time of Mr. Heather and Mrs. Claudius has been challenged before us. We are of opinion that the facts proved in the case though they do not lead to an inference of any permanent right on the part of the defendant nor create any estoppel against the plaintiff are sufficient to lead to the inference that the said structures were erected and allowed to continue with the tacit approval of the railway authorities. If this be the finding, as in our judgment it should be, then he is entitled to compensation under Cl. 4 of Mr. Heather's lease (Ex. A). We accordingly hold that the plaintiff's contention ought not to succeed. The result is that the appeals are dismissed with costs to the respondents, hearing fee being assessed at five gold mohurs in Appeal No. 277 and at two gold mohurs in each of the other appeals, except those in which there has been no appearance on behalf of the respondents or in which the Deputy Registrar's costs have already been paid.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 4 (3) —Order under S. 4 (3)—Subsequent suit to declare title to property declared to be sold is not governed by Limitation Act (1908), Art. 13.

In an insolvency proceeding started by one of the defendants, the petitioner for insolvency had claimed a certain interest in certain tea garden shares. The insolvency Judge passed an order under S. 4 (3) that the interest of the defendant should be sold. More than a year after this order, plaintiff who alleged that the shares were bought with his money filed a suit to have his title to the shares declared :

Ramendra Ch. Roy—for Appellants.

Naresh Ch. Sen Gupta and Bama Prasanna Sen Gupta—for Respondents.

Mallik, J.—The suit that has given rise to this second appeal was for declaration of the plaintiff's title to certain tea garden shares. The allegations on which the suit was instituted were that the tea garden shares had been purchased with plaintiff's money and that in an insolvency proceeding started by one of the defendants the petitioner for insolvency had claimed a certain interest in these tea shares, with the result that a cloud had been thrown on the plaintiff's title to those shares. The defence inter alia was that the shares were not the exclusive property of the plaintiff, but were the property of a firm of which the plaintiff and the defendants were the partners and that the plaintiff's suit having been instituted more than one year after the order had been passed by the insolvency Court in respect of the shares under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, the plaintiff's suit was barred under Art. 13, Limitation Act. Both these points taken by the defence were found by the Courts below against the defendants with the result that the suit was decreed in plaintiff's favour. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

On behalf of the appellants it was in the first place contended that the lower appellate Court was wrong in not having found that the tea garden shares were the joint property of the plaintiff as well as of the defendants. The question whether the shares were the exclusive property of the plaintiff or the joint property of the plaintiff as well as of the defendants was a question of fact, and the learned Additional District Judge in his judgment clearly found that the plaintiff was the sole owner of the garden shares in suit. The main contention of the learned advocate for the appellants however was on the question of limitation. His point as would appear from what I have stated before was that Art. 13, Limitation Act, operated as a bar to the plaintiff's suit. We do not think that there is much substance in this contention. The plaintiff instituted his suit not to have the order of the insolvency Court, whereby it had simply directed that the shares might be sold, set aside, but to have his title to these shares declared. The order which the insolvency Court passed was no doubt an order passed under S. 4, Insolvency Act. But it was an order passed not under sub S. (2), but under sub-S. (3) of that section. A perusal of the order passed by the insolvency Judge would show that he did not consider it necessary to decide the question of title, which question was left undecided to be decided by a competent civil Court. Having regard to that observation in the order passed by the insolvency Judge and regard being had also to the fact that all that the insolvency Judge ordered at the time was to sell the interest of the defendants in the shares whatever that interest might be the suit brought by the plaintiff was not, in my opinion, a suit to have the order passed by the insolvency Judge set aside. The order which the insolvency Judge passed under S. 4, sub-S. (3), Insolvency Act, was more for an expeditious disposal of the assets than any other purpose. A perusal of sub-S. (3) would show that before an insolvency Court passed an order to sell an interest, it does not actually hold that the petitioner for insolvency has such saleable interest. If the Court has any reason to believe that the petitioner for insolvency has such saleable interest, it can pass an order under sub-S. (3). Art. 13, Limitation Act, could not therefore, in my opinion, stand as a bar to the plaintiff's suit.

The only substantial contention urged before us on behalf of the appellants therefore fails. The appeal will accordingly stand dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 421 of 1930, Decided on 30th June 1931, against decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Khulna, D. 10th July 1929.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 48—Applicability of section explained.

If the rent is payable in kind and in the alternative in money at the option of the tenant S. 48 is applicable. But where the alternative money rent is recoverable at the option of the landlord S. 48 has no application.

[P 265 C 1, 2]

The relevant portion of a kabuliyat was in these words: "If we do not deliver paddy (as aforesaid) then we will pay to you within the said month as value of the said paddy Rs. 400 according to the present market rate. If we do not, then you will be entitled to realize the same amicably or by suit with interest thereon."

Saroj Kumar Chatterji — for Appellants.

Nagendra Kumar Dutt — for Respondents.

Suhrawardy, J. — This is an appeal by the landlords and arises out of a suit for rent based upon a kabuliyat. It appears that the defendants hold a jama of 12 bighas bearing a rental of Rs. 15. They let out this jama to the plaintiff at a rental of Rs. 15-4-0 and then took a sub-lease, agreeing to deliver 13 aris of paddy annually as rent, and in the alternative to pay Rs. 400 as the price thereof. The main contention of the defendants in the suit was that the plaintiffs could not recover rent higher than what they were entitled to under S. 18, Ben. Ten. Act, before its amendment in 1928. The section says:

"The landlord of an under-raiyat holding at a money rent shall not be entitled to recover rent exceeding the rent which he himself pays by more than 50 per cent when the rent payable by the under-raiyat is payable under a registered lease."

Here the lease is registered and if the section applies the plaintiffs will be entitled to get annually Rs. 15-4-0 and 50 per cent of it, that is Rs. 22-14-0, as yearly rent from the defendants. The trial Court held that the rent was not payable in money but in kind, and therefore according to the view expressed in some cases by this Court S. 48 (a) had no application. The lower appellate Court on a consideration of the kabuliyat has held that S. 48 of the Act applies and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover rent more than Rs. 22-14-0 a year. The case really turns upon the construction of the kabuliyat. The law that seems to be established from various decisions on this point is that if the rent is payable in kind and in the alternative in money at the option of the tenant, S. 48 is applicable. But where the alternative money rent is recoverable at the option of the landlord, S. 48 has no application. If the interpretation put by the learned Subordinate Judge is right, the case is covered by the decision in Ananda Chandra Roy v. Makram Ali (1). The relevant portion of the kabuliyat is in these words:

"If we do not deliver paddy (as aforesaid) then we will pay to you within the said month as value of the said paddy Rs. 400 according to the present market rate. If we do not, then you will be entitled to realize the same amicably or by suit with interest thereon."

In our opinion the Subordinate Judge has placed the correct construction on this kabuliyat. It fixes the rent at 13 aris of paddy yearly, but at the same time gives the option to the tenants to pay Rs. 400 as value of the paddy instead of the paddy. The kabuliyat in Ananda Chandra Roy's case (1) referred to above was also to the same effect. There the stipulation was:

"We shall deliver on the 30th Assin every year, a quantity of 27 maunds 30 seers of paddy at the rate of 3 maunds per kani of the chukti per annum (or) in the absence thereof a sum of Rs. 132 on account of the value of the paddy and shall deliver on the 30th Pous every year a quantity of 50 maunds of paddy at the rate of 4 maunds per kani per annum, and in the absence thereof pay a sum of Rs. 118, and we shall pay on account of the value of paddy and jute Rs. 250 and shall take receipts."

Brett, J., sitting singly held that the intention of the plaintiff in taking the kabuliyat was to realize a yearly rent of Rs. 250 whether it was paid in jute and paddy or in cash as stipulated. The contract was that a share of the produce or its value should be paid as rent. On Letters Patent appeal, Jenkins, C. J., agreed that the defendant who was an under-raiyat had the right to pay his rent in the form of money rent and the suit was framed for the purpose of recovering the money rent, and that the rights of the parties in relation to the recovery of that rent must be determined by reference to S. 48 and that the limit imposed by that section must be observed. In Kamaraddi v. Monmohini Dassya (2) the contract was to the effect that in default of payment of paddy, the plaintiff (landlord) would be entitled to realize Rs. 20 as the price of the paddy with damages and costs by instituting suits. Mookerji, J., in distinguishing Ananda Chandra Roy's case (1) from the case in question observed that in that case the tenant had the option to deliver a certain quantity of the produce or in the alternative money. But in the case before him there was a provision to the effect that if there was any default on the part of the tenant, the landlord would be entitled to realize a certain sum of money as the price of the paddy. This only accentuated the true position, namely, that the rent was payable not in cash, but in kind; and the contract only prescribed the measure of the damages which the landlord could claim in the event of default on the part of the tenant.

1. (1909) 3 I C 204.

2. A I R 1919 Cal 532=41 I C 973.

That case therefore is no authority in favour of the appellant. There the contract was for delivery of paddy and the landlord was given the option to recover the price of the paddy if any default was made in payment of the rent in paddy. In Ismail Pramanik v. Khedir Pramanik (3) the facts were different from those in the present case. There the defendant executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the plaintiff and took a sub-lease from him of the land for a period of nine years, stipulating to pay Rs. 20 as rent per year; the rent which the plaintiff was to pay under the lease in favour of the defendant was Rs. 2-12-0, and there was a further stipulation that the plaintiff would pay on behalf of and in the name of the defendant the rent due to the superior landlord. The defendant contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover Rs. 20 per year from the defendant under S. 48, Ben. Ten. Act. On a consideration of these facts it was held that the defendant was not an under-raiyat of the plaintiff; but was really a raiyat of the superior landlord and had come to an arrangement with the plaintiff for the payment of the interests due on the mortgage made in his favour by taking a lease of the land from the plaintiff who had the right under the usufructuary mortgage to possess it. It seems to me that the kabuliya in this case fixes the paddy rent and in default thereof money rent; either is to be payable by the tenant at his option. The case therefore comes within the principle enunciated in Ananda Chandra Roy's case (1). The view of law taken by the Subordinate Judge is therefore quite correct.

It has next been argued that the plaintiff was really a mortgagee and that therefore the principle in Ismail Pramanik v. Khedir Pramanik (3), referred to above, does not apply. The defendant no doubt said in his pleadings that the plaintiff was the mortgagee, that he had deposited the mortgage amount in Court and had paid off the plaintiff's dues. On this point the lower appellate Court has found that there was no evidence worth the name that the lease by the defendant to the plaintiff was in reality a mortgage, and that before the Court there was no dispute that the plaintiff was a raiyat holding at a money rent. The third point urged on behalf of the appellant is that the defendant was not an under-raiyat. But this point was not taken in any of the Courts below and we cannot allow it to be raised here in second appeal. From the judgment of the trial Court it appears that it was assumed and it was the case of both parties that the plaintiff had got raiyati right in the holding. Besides it is not the appellant's case that he had a right higher than that of a raiyat. But he says that he may be an under-raiyat and therefore S. 48 would not apply in this case. S. 48 applies to the case of an under-raiyat without reference to the status of the landlord. "Under-raiyat" has been defined in S. 4 of the Act as a tenant holding whether immediately or mediately under a raiyat, so that even if the landlord happens to be an under-raiyat himself, he must be holding under a raiyat and the tenant holding under him would be holding mediately under a raiyat. S. 48 does not say of a raiyat but says that the landlord of an under-raiyat cannot recover more than a certain percentage mentioned therein. This contention should also be overruled. Lastly it has been suggested that S. 48 of the amended Act should apply in this case as the judgment of the lower appellate Court was delivered after that Act had come into force. It is not necessary to discuss the point, for the judgment of the trial Court was delivered before the amendment, and S. 48 is not one relating to procedure only and has no retrospective force. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Graham, J.—The only point raised in the appeal is whether the rent payable by the defendant is limited by S. 48 (a), Ben. Ten. Act. The trial Court held that it was not so limited and gave a decree for the full amount claimed. On appeal that decision has been modified by the Additional Subordinate Judge, Khulna, who held, differing from the Munsif, that the plaintiff could not recover rent from the defendants at a rate exceeding the limit prescribed by S. 48 (a), that is, 50 per cent of the rent payable by the plaintiff. The rent payable by the plaintiff, according to the plaint, was Rupees 15-4-0 so that the plaintiff could not get more than Rs. 22-14-0 as rent. The appeal was decreed accordingly. The main argument advanced on behalf of the appellant is that the learned Additional Subordinate Judge ought to have held that S. 48 (a), Ben. Ten. Act, has no application in this case, as the kabuliyat on which the suit was instituted did not really create the relationship of landlord and tenant, but was an arrangement come to between a mortgagor and mortgagee. It is further contended that there was in reality no dispute between the parties, that they stood towards each other in the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, and that the Court of appeal below erred in holding that there was no evidence in support of any such relationship.

In my opinion this contention cannot be allowed to prevail, because it is clear that no such case was made before the trial Court. If that case was relied upon, it certainly ought to have been made before the Munsif, since it was the case of the defendants throughout that S. 48 (a) applied and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to get more than 50 per cent as mentioned in that section. A translation of the kabuliyat has been placed before us and there is nothing in it which appears to support the case of mortgage which is now brought forward on behalf of the appellants. In my judgment the decision of the Court of appeal below is right, and I agree with my learned brother that this appeal must be dismissed.

Judgment.—Two persons, Mafizuddin Ahmed and Jowadali Khondar, executed a security bond in favour of the Narayanganj Central Co-operative Sale and Supply Society Ltd. in connexion with their appointment as brokers for supplying jute to the society. They having incurred certain liabilities in connexion with their work as such brokers, the society referred the dispute to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies of the Dacca Division who appointed an arbitrator in accordance with the provisions of R. 22 framed under S. 43, Co-operative Societies Act (2 of 1922). The arbitrator made an award in the shape of a preliminary decree and thereafter in the form of a final decree for sale of the secured property. The award being put into execution objections were entered by judgment-debtor 1, Mafizuddin Ahmad. These objections were overruled and on that he has appealed. Two grounds have been taken in the appeal.

The first ground is that the reference under R 22, sub-R. (1) was ultra vires inasmuch as judgment-debtor 2, Jowadali, was never a member of the Society. This objection was not specifically mentioned in the statement of objections filed by the appellant in the Court below. It was raised before the Subordinate Judge who rejected it on two grounds: first, that the appellant was precluded from raising it because Jowadali himself had not contested the case; and second, that the objection not having been specifically taken in the statement of objections filed by the appellant was not entertainable, because the society had no opportunity of meeting it by adducing evidence, which was absolutely necessary in order to decide on the objection inasmuch as it involved a disputed question of fact. The first of these grounds is not tenable, but the second is a very reasonable one. We are of opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on this point ought not to be disturbed; the more so, because of certain materials to which our attention has been drawn and on which we are satisfied that the objection has no substance.

The second contention urged is that the reference was ultra vires inasmuch as the dispute was such as it was not between the society on the one hand and the two members on the other qua members, but only in their capacity as brokers, in other words, that the dispute, not being of a character referable to their membership but relating to transactions which they had entered into as brokers, was not one coming within the purview of the rule which enables the society to make a reference which may give jurisdiction to the Registrar to found the proceedings. An answer to this contention has been sought to be given by a reference to sub-R. (6), R. 22 which purports to give finality to an award unless called in question by way of an appeal within a given time. This sub-rule, in our opinion is not meant to take away the jurisdiction of an executing Court to inquire into the competency of the award on the ground of jurisdiction in the same way as of a decree which it has to execute and within such narrow limits as have been prescribed by the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Gora Chand Halder v. Prafulla Kumar Roy (1). But the real answer to the contention, in our opinion, is that the terms of sub-R. (1), R. 22 do not confine the dispute to such as may be referable to membership only. The view we take is supported by such decisions as Zamindars Bank, Shergarh Kalan v. Suba (2) and P. Dasaratha Rao v. C. Subba Rao (3). The appeal in the judgment cannot succeed. It is accordingly dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Berhampur by which the learned Judge had dismissed the plaintiff's application for a decree under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code. There were two defendants in the suit, the mortgagors who executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff in the year 1908. One of these, namely, defendant 1, had made a number of payments on account of the mortgage and had made endorsements in respect thereof on the bond stating that on account of interest these amounts were being paid. These payments continued right down to the year 1923. On 10th July 1920 the plaintiff instituted a suit upon the mortgage and thereafter having obtained a decree purchased the mortgaged property on 16th June 1922 and obtained sale certificate therefore on 25th July 1922. Thereafter on 24th November 1921, the plaintiff made the application under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code. The learned Judge refused the application in so far as defendant 1 was concerned upon the ground that although the said defendant had made the payments aforesaid the last of those payments had been made by him in 1923 which was more than three years before the institution of the suit. The learned Judge was of opinion that in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ganesa Lal v. Khetramohan Mahapatra (1), Art. 66, Lim. Act, applied to the application made under the said rule. It is true that there are certain observations in that decision which lend support to the learned Judge's view. But as has been pointed out in several cases in this Court since that decision was passed, amongst which may be mentioned the case of Balbhaddar Singh v. Budri Sah (2), the said observations can hardly be taken as deciding the question as to whether it was Art. 67 or Art. 116 that should apply. We are of opinion that having regard to the uniform trend of authorities which have laid down that six years' limitation provided for in Art. 116, Lim. Act applies to the case, the learned Judge's decision, in so far as defendant 1 is concerned, cannot be supported and must accordingly be set aside.

Defendant son was a minor and was represented in this appeal by his mother as his guardian. He has now applied to appear as a major and has been allowed to appear as such. As regards him the learned Judge held that it had not been proved that defendant 1 made the payments not only for himself but also on his behalf. The learned advocate appearing on behalf of the plaintiff has drawn our attention to the written statement which was filed by defendant 2's son in the mortgage suit, in which he stated that defendant 1 who was the elder brother of his father was the karta of the family of the defendants; that he used to look after all the properties of the defendants and that with the evil object of depriving defendant 2 of his properties, defendant 1 colluded with the plaintiff and got a mortgage deed executed by defendant 2 when he was in a drunken state. It has been argued that this statement is an admission made by defendant 2's son that defendant 1 was the karta of the defendants' family; and upon this argument it has been contended that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to adduce any evidence for the purpose of showing that defendant 1 had authority to make the payments on behalf of defendant 2's son. Our attention has also been drawn to the objection which the son of defendant 2 preferred to the application for a decree under O. 34, R. 6, and in which he made a statement, vide para. 2 of the grounds, that since the death of his father he had been living separately and in separate mess from defendant 1. It has been argued that from this statement it should be inferred that it was an admission or at least an implied admission that the two defendants lived jointly at the time of the death of defendant 2, the death of defendant 2 having taken place in August 1922.

It has been argued that payment appears on the bond as having been made by defendant 1 in 1921 when defendant 2 was alive and which date would be within six years from the date on which the suit was instituted. We have considered those arguments with care, but we are not able to hold that merely because of these statements, which may be explained upon more grounds than one, it was not the duty of the plaintiff to give some definite evidence showing that there was some authority on the part of defendant 1 to make the payments on behalf of defendant 2 or of his son. The pleadings no doubt are to a certain extent at variance with the evidence which the son of defendant 2 has adduced in the present case that his father was separate in mess from defendant 1 ever since 1314. That statement may or may not be correct. The learned Judge's argument that there were two mortgage deeds which showed that the two defendants were not joint is also not very convincing in the face of the fact the those documents came into existence after the date of the payment to which we have referred. It is also true that defendant 1 was allowed to a certain extent to act on behalf of defendant 2 in matters of execution of mortgage, taking of loan and things of that sort. But these circumstances do not necessarily mean that in the matter of payments which defendant 1 made and which would operate as acknowledgment of the debt, he had any authority to make such payments on behalf of defendant 2. For these reasons we are of opinion that in so far as the learned Judge dismissed the application for a decree under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code as against defendant 2's son he was right.

The result is that in our opinion the appeal is allowed in part. The decree of the learned Judge dismissing the application as against defendant 1 should be set aside and in lieu thereof a decree should be passed under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code in the usual terms as against the said defendant only. The decree of the learned Judge in other respects will stand. No order is made as to costs.

Order accordingly.

Appeal No. 58 of 1929, Decided on 1st June 1932, against decree of Third Sub-Judge, 24 Parganas, D/- 9th November 1927.

Bijankumar Mukerji and Manilal Bhattacharjya—for Appellants.

Judgment.—This appeal is against the decision of the lower Court as to the amount of cesses payable by the respondents. The material facts are that the latter hold a tenure under the plaintiff-appellants, the area of which was found, on measurement, in the year 1893, to be 2,102 bighas. The rent of this tenure was fixed at Rs. 1,511 in accordance with the terms of the contract between the parties; and, in the valuation-roll prepared under the Cess Act, the annual value of the tenure is entered as Rs. 3,913, and the rental as Rs. 1,511.

In 1911, the defendants, respondents here, sued for abatement of rent on the footing that a large area of the tenure had diluviated. The suit was carried to the Privy Council, and in 1922 a decree was passed under which the rent was reduced to Rs. 1,256-10-8-1/4. Plaintiffs have now claimed arrears of rent and cesses for the years 1329 to 1332 B. S. at this rate of Rs. 1,256 old, but allowed a deduction under S. 41, Cl. (2), Cess Act, on the basis of that figure, and not on the basis of the figure, Rs. 1,511, which is actually shown in the cess valuation-roll. The practical result is that they claimed from the defendants Rs. 205-4-18½ as cess, instead of Rs. 197-6-0, the amount payable according to the figures given in the valuation-roll. The Subordinate Judge has held that they are entitled to recover only the smaller amount. He has said in effect that the Courts cannot go beyond the valuation-roll, and that, until that roll is altered by the revenue authorities, it must be accepted as the basis of calculation for the determination of the cess actually payable. Hence the present appeal.

The question is one of first impression, and it is conceded that there is no authority to guide us. The actual wording of S. 41 (2), Cess Act, is that the tenure holder pays the entire amount of cess calculated on the annual value of the tenure, less a deduction to be calculated at one half the cess rate for every rupee of the rent payable by him for such tenure. At first sight it might seem that this means the rent actually payable for the tenure, irrespective of what is stated in the valuation-roll, and that there is a certain amount of inequity involved in allowing a deduction on the rent given in the valuation-roll, when a smaller amount is really payable or actually paid. But a careful reading of the provisions of the Act seems to us to indicate that its policy is to apportion the liabilities of the various parties on the basis of the valuation-roll, and that the superior is merely a conduit-pipe through which the contribution of the inferior ultimately passes to the Government. The annual value of an estate or tenure is ascertained either on the returns made by the parties themselves or arbitrarily by the Collector, and it is the duty of the latter, under S. 34 of the Act, to note the amount of revenue on which the deduction specified in S. 41 is to be calculated. Similarly, it is the duty of the owner of the estate to make a return of the tenure-holders under him, and of the rents which they pay. On the basis of that return, the deduction allowable under S. 41 (2) of the Act is entered in the valuation-roll. Where the rent of a tenure varies, as it has done in this case, so as to affect the liability to payment of cess as between the tenure-holder and his superior, it is open to the latter to proceed under S. 37 of the Act and have the valuation altered. Where, as in this case, the area of the tenure has decreased since its inception, its valuation presumably alters as well as the rent payable by the tenure-holder.

Since the liability to pay cess, as between landlord and tenure-holder, depends as much on the valuation of the tenure as on the rent payable for it, we are of opinion that, so long as the annual value remains unchanged, the cess payable by the holder of the estate remains unaltered. A part of that cess he realizes from the tenure-holder under S. 41 (2), but to allow him to increase the tenure-holder's contribution when the rent but not the valuation alters is to enable him to make an indirect profit in contravention of the principles of assessment on which the valuation-roll is based. The roll itself suggests that this view is the correct view. Col. 4 is headed :

"Revenue or rent or chaukidar tax on which abatement is to be allowed under S. 41."

In this column the rental figure is given as Rs. 1,511. We think the Subordinate Judge has taken the right view of the matter and we, accordingly, dismiss this appeal. There has been no appearance for the respondents and there will be no order as to costs.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17—Application for leave to amend plaint after trial and decision for review—When can be allowed pointed.

An application for leave to amend the plaint after the trial and decision of the case can be allowed provided the amendment which the plaintiff asks for will not materially alter the complexion of the case or a new cause of action will not thereby be substituted or any inconsistent title will not be in the issue or the new case will not in any way be antagonistic to the old one, and provided the Court is satisfied that the plaintiff is not acting mala fide and that the injury done to the defendant can be compensated for by costs or otherwise: A I R 1922 P C 219 and *Tildesley v. Judgment.—These two appeals have arisen out of two Suits No. 422 of 1922 and No. 293 of 1924, instituted by one Sitaram Das and one Harihajan Das, respectively, for succession to the Mahantship of an Akhra known as the Bara Digambar Akhra, situate at village Debi-pur in the district of Murshidabad. Mahant Bhagwan Das was its last mahant. He died on 19th Baisakh 1329 (2nd March 1922). No successor to the mahantship being apparent, the police appeared on the scene and took charge of the moveables and eventually an intestacy and escheat case was started in the Court of the District Judge. One Lakshmi Narain Das, amongst others, put in a claim alleging that he was entitled to succeed to the deceased mahant and that he had lent money to him shortly before he died, and further that since his death he had been performing the sheba and puja of the idols in the Akhra and was in possession of all its properties. He also applied to the Magistrate praying that the properties might remain in his possession so long as the rights of the rival claimants were not determined by a competent Court. On 6th July 1922 Sitaram Das instituted Suit No. 122 and in that suit Lakshmi Narain Das was appointed receiver on a security of Rs. 2,500. Suit No. 293 was instituted by Haribhajan Das on 27th September 1932, the plaint being registered under O. 33, R. 3, Civil P.C., on 22nd July 1924. The suits were tried together and were both dismissed. Haribhajan Das has preferred F. A. No. 290 of 1928 and Sitaram Das F. A. No. 343 of 1928.

F. A. No. 290 of 1928.—Appeal No. 290 will be dealt with first. (After discussing the evidence in this case, the appeal was dismissed on facts and the judgment proceeded.)

F. A. No. 343 of 1928.—The plaintiff Sitaram Das claimed to succeed to Bhagwan Das on the allegation that he was spiritual cousin to the latter in the second degree. The following genealogy represents the case that he made:

Keshab Das

Sriram Das	Kanhar Das
Baldeo Das	Gomoti Das
Bhagwan Das	Sitaram Das

He alleged that the right to succeed to the mahantship of the Akhra and the shobaitship of the dieties installed there is governed by the relationship established by initiation by mantra. He alleged that there was no other person, at any rate no other Brahmin, who had mantra relationship with Bhagwan Das excepting himself. He alleged also that he was initiated by mantra by Gomoti Das whose name appears in the table above. In his evidence he deposed that he had not seen Kanhar Das, the Guru of Gomoti Das; but had heard about him from the latter and also from Bhagwan Das, and had also heard his name pronounced at the time of the annual Sradh. He examined a number of witnesses to support this genealogy. (After mentioning the witnesses examined and their evidence the judgment proceeded). The Subordinate Judge upon the evidence before him found Ex. 4 to be a forgery and held that the witnesses examined in support of the genealogy set up on behalf of the plaintiff was not trustworthy, and that on the other hand the contents of a will which Gomoti Das made would point to the plaintiff not having been a Gurubhai of Bhagwan Das. On these findings he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. After the trial and decision of the case, the plaintiff put in an application for review, putting forward the following genealogy as having been gathered by him from some old documents as regards the genuineness of which no question could arise and which he alleged had been recently discovered by him. This application was rejected :

Damodar Das

Keshab Das	Shanta Das
Sriram Das	Kanhar Das
Baldeo Das	Gomoti Das
Bhagwan Das	Sitaram Das

In these circumstances the plaintiff as appellant in this appeal has asked for leave to amend his plaint by inserting therein the above genealogy and for an order for further trial of the suit thereafter. Before considering the question whether the plaintiff's prayer should be granted it is necessary to see whether defendant 1 has succeeded in showing that he has any title to the mahantship, for if he has done so it would be unjust to allow the plaintiff to fight him on an altered case a second time and the plaintiff's prayer must be refused on that ground alone. His case was that Keshab Das was a mantra disciple while one Mukunda Das was a pupil disciple of Swarup Das and that the two disciples agreed between themselves that they would succeed to each other generation after generation, in the absence of a mantra disciple, and in support of this agreement he produced a document Ex. D. The Subordinate Judge has found this document to be a forgery and the story of the agreement to be false. We have examined the document itself and the reasons upon which the Subordinate Judge has come to this conclusion and we are in entire agreement with his opinion. It has not been suggested that but for this agreement or but for the absence of a mantra disciple defendant 1 who is a pupil disciple only can have any claim. The Subordinate Judge found further that defendant 1 is a Nimayat Baisnav, and not a Ramyet Baisnav like Bhagwan Das and in that view observed:

"The plaintiff was of the same community, and the late Bhagwan Das as a member of the same community with him could claim to succeed to him in preference to defendant 1 who was not of the same community with him."

With this finding and observation however we do not agree; we think the materials in support of them are not sufficient for holding that defendant 1 is not a Ramayet but a Nimayet Baisnav. Even then defendant 1 will have to establish that there is no mantra disciple of Bhagwan Das and that he himself is a pupil disciple of the same Swarup Das who was the Guru of Keshab Das. This therefore is not a case in which defendant 1 has established his own claim to the mahantship. If therefore he is to remain in possession, he will do so because anybody has not yet succeeded to prove a title thereto. The plaintiff, on the other hand, supported his claim by false evidence, oral and documentary, and this by itself should make us feel extremely unwilling to allow him an opportunity to amend his pleading. We have accordingly considered with care and not without some anxiety whether such leave should be granted. The plaintiff claimed to be a mantra disciple of Gomoti Das and this he has succeeded in proving.

He has also proved that Gomoti Das was a mantra disciple of Kanhar Das, which was his case. The falsity of his defence lay only in his attempt to connect Kanhar Das with Keshab Das. He alleged that Kanhar Das was a mantra disciple of Keshab Das; whereas what he wants now to show is that Keshab Das and Kanhar Das were spiritually related in a different way, namely, that Keshab Das, spiritual Guru, was one Swarup Das who himself was a mantra disciple of Damodar Das and that Swarup Das had another mantra disciple named Shanta Das, and Shanta Das' mantra disciple was Kanhar Das. The documents which he now wants to rely on are unimpeachable and they do contain these names as so related. Whether the identity of these persons will be established or not is a different matter. The adverse inference which the Subordinate Judge has drawn from the contents of the will of Gomoti Das, in our opinion, does not necessarily follow and so is not a sound one. In these circumstances it is not possible to hold that the amendment which the plaintiff asks for will materially alter the complexion of the case, or that a new cause of action will thereby be substituted or that any inconsistent title will be in issue, or that the new case will in any way be antagonistic to the old one. After all, as the Judicial Committee pointed out in the case of Ma Shwe Mya v. Moung Mo Anaung (1):

"All rules of Court are nothing but provisions intended to secure the proper administration of justice and it is therefore essential that they should be made to serve and be subordinate to that purpose, so that full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised."

The question how far the conduct of a party, such as there has been of the plaintiff in this case, should disentitle him to leave to amend his pleadings is one on which there is and can be but little authority. Two of the Judges who were most liberal in granting such leave were Bramwell, L. J., and Bowen, L. J., Bramwell, L. J., in Tildesley v. Harper (2), said:

"My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide or that by his blunder he has done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated for by costs or otherwise."

Bowen, L. J., in Cropper v. Smith (3), said:

"It does not seem to me material to consider whether the mistake of judgment was accidental or not, if not intended to overreach. There is no rule that only steps or accidental errors are to be corrected. I reserve to myself the right to consider how a case should be dealt with where there has not been merely a mistake but an attempt to mislead. I do not see here any attempt to mislead."

1. A I R 1922 P C 249=48 I A 214 = 48 Cal 832=68 I C 914 (P C).

2. (1878) 10 Ch D 893 = 48 L J Ch 495 = 33 L T 552=27 W R 249.

These observations would seem to suggest that if a false defence is deliberately taken up and persisted in, leave to amend should not be granted. And that must be so, for no Court would be justified in exercising its discretion, however wide a discretion it might have, which may encourage perjury or forgery by letting the party feel assured that however unclean his conduct may be, the discretion will ultimately be used in his favour. But the present case is exceptional in its features: the falsity of the claim does not extend to the whole of the title that was set up but was only confined to one particular link in the entire chain, and defendant 1 can hardly complain of the perjury and forgery that he had to combat with for he readily met them with a forgery very cleverly contrived. Bearing in mind the object of the legislature in enacting O. 6, R. 17 of the Code and considering all the facts and circumstances of the case, we think there is more in favour of the plaintiff than against him and that it would be more in furtherance of justice if we allowed the amendment than otherwise. Such leave however should be dependent on the payment by the plaintiff to defendant 1 of all costs in the litigation within four months from today.

The result is that we allow the appeal and the application filed by the plaintiff and direct that if within four months from today he pays to defendant 1 the entire costs as detailed in the decrees of the Court below and of this Court the decree of the Court below will be set aside and he will be allowed to amend his plaint but only to the extent of putting in the genealogy now put forward by him and of such alteration in his pleadings as may be consequential upon it. On the amendment being made notice thereof will be given to defendant 1 who will be allowed to put in a fresh defence should he consider it necessary to do so. Proper issues will thereafter be framed and the suit will be tried afresh. Defendants 2 and 3 will no longer be treated as parties to the suit. If the order as regards the payment of costs is not complied with, this appeal will stand dismissed with costs to defendant 1. The cross-objection is dismissed without costs.

K.S. Order accordingly.

Original Civil Suit No. 930 of 1928, Decided on 19th May 1932.

(a) Decree—Setting aside—Falsity of claim or perjured evidence is no ground.

The mere fact that the claim, on which the prior decree has been passed, is a false claim or that the decree had been obtained on perjured evidence is no ground for setting aside a decree: A I R 1927 Cal 84, Rel on. [P 276 C 2]

* (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R 13—Plaintiff giving wrong address of defendant, but taking no part in service of summons — Service is not deliberately suppressed nor is decree obtained by fraud—Decree, setting aside, Fraud.

If a plaintiff in an action gives a wrong address of the defendant and takes no part in serving the summons on the defendant, the giving of the wrong address itself would not prevent the defendant from appearing before the Court to defend the suit and the plaintiff cannot be charged with having deliberately suppressed the service of summons or having obtained the decree by fraud, even though he may have had some cause for suspecting that the service effected on the defendant at the address given by him might not have been good service: 21 Cal 612, Rel on. [P 277 C 1, 2]

J. C. Hazra and S. P. Mookerjee—for Plaintiff.

Arun Sen—for Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this case sues for a declaration that the ex parte decree, dated the 21st day of June 1927, and made in Suit No. 2748 of 1926, of the Court of Small Causes, Nagpur, is inoperative and not binding on him, and for an order that the said decree should be set aside. He further claims a sum of Rs. 5,000 as damages suffered by him by reason of his arrest in execution of that decree. The plaintiff is a pleader of the District Court of Alipore and ordinarily resides at No. 107/1, Mechua-bazar Street. From 1st February 1926, to 18th June 1926 the plaintiff was employed as a manager of the International Commercial Co., Ltd., which had its office at No. 84-A, Clive Street, in Calcutta. On 7th May 1926 the plaintiff, as manager of the company, had, by a letter addressed to the defendant, appointed him the agent of the company at Nagpur, on a monthly remuneration of Rs. 50 from 10th May 1926.

On 21st March 1928 the plaintiff was arrested in Calcutta, by a bailiff of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, in execution of a decree passed against him by the Court of Small Causes, Nagpur, on 21st June 1927. On the same day the plaintiff was released, on his depositing with the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, a sum of Rs. 250, under protest. In his plaint, the plaintiff has alleged that he was not served with any writ of summons in the Nagpur suit, nor had he any knowledge of the institution of the suit and he makes the case that the decree in the Nagpur suit was fraudulently obtained by the defendant on certain false representations, namely : (a) that it was the plaintiff who had appointed the defendant manager of the company, whereas, in fact, as the defendant knew, the plaintiff merely acted as an agent of the International Commercial Co., Ltd., in the matter of the appointment ; (b) the defendant had been appointed manager of the company at Nagpur, whereas he had been merely appointed an agent of the company ; and (c) a sum of Rs. 500 had been paid to the company by the defendant as and by way of deposit, whereas Rs. 300 only had been paid, and that for the purpose of investing in shares of the company. The plaintiff further alleged that the service of the writ of summons was fraudulently suppressed by the defendant and no notice was served on the plaintiff prior to his arrest.

The plaintiff's case is that the defendant had knowingly given a false address of the plaintiff in the Nagpur Court and had falsely stated in the Nagpur plaint that notice of termination of the defendant's services was given to the plaintiff on 26th August 1926. The plaintiff complains that the defendant had fraudulently procured his arrest in execution of the decree by making false allegations in a petition filed by the defendant in the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, dated 20th March 1928, to the effect that the plaintiff had delayed payment and was about to leave the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, to avoid the execution of the decree.

In para. 1 of the written statement, the defendant denies all the allegations contained in the plaint. He then goes on to say that he had no knowledge that the plaintiff ordinarily resided at No. 107/1, Mechuanbazar Street, Calcutta, and that the only address of the plaintiff known to the defendant at the time when he instituted the suit in the Court of Small Causes, Nagpur, was that of the plaintiff's place of business at 84-A, Clive Street. He denies that the plaintiff was really an employee in the International Commercial Co., Ltd., or that his services were dispensed with on 18th June 1926, or that after that date the plaintiff ceased to have any connexion with the said corporation or its affairs. The defendant's case is that the plaintiff had represented to him that the plaintiff was the principal and all in all of the company, that the plaintiff had induced the defendant to enter into a contract of service with the plaintiff in his individual capacity, and on false pretexts had led the defendant to part with Rs. 500 on the understanding that the money would be refunded on the termination of the defendant's services. The defendant alleged that he gave a notice to the plaintiff on 26th August 1926, signifying his intention not to serve the plaintiff any longer and demanding the return of the Rs. 500. As the plaintiff failed to pay the defendant's dues in spite of repeated demands, the defendant was, on 10th October 1926, compelled to file a suit in the Court of Small Causes, Nagpur, for the recovery of Rs. 632-3-0 due from the plaintiff. He asserted that the summons in the suit was duly served on the plaintiff and he denied that the decree had been obtained by fraud.

After the passing of the decree and in March 1928 the defendant alleges he came from Nagpur and saw the plaintiff several times in Calcutta and asked him to pay off the decretal amount which the plaintiff had promised to pay. While at Calcutta, in March 1928, the defendant learnt that the plaintiff was going to leave the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, and the defendant bona fide took steps to execute the decree which had been sent to the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, for execution. The defendant denies that he had been guilty of any wrongful conduct in taking steps in execution. The defendant has submitted that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. On these pleadings certain issues were submitted and accepted on behalf of the parties, which I need not set out here.

The main questions for determination are whether the decree passed on 21st June 1927 was obtained by fraud and whether this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit. Learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiff has sought to attack the decree, broadly speaking, on the grounds: (a) that the claim against the plaintiff in the Nagpur suit was a false claim founded on false allegations and the defendant knew that he had no cause of action against the plaintiff; and (b) that the defendant had fraudulently suppressed the service of the writ of summons and had knowingly given a false address to the Nagpur Court for service of the writ on the plaintiff. (His Lordship after considering the oral evidence which was not satisfactory proceeded to consider the documentary evidence.) The plaintiff has tendered a certified copy of the plaint and the order sheet in the Nagpur suit as also a certified copy of the writ of summons alleged to have been served on the plaintiff. An examination of the plaint shows that there were two defendants in the Nagpur suit: (1) The Managing Director, the International Commercial Co. Ltd., 84/A, Clive Street, Calcutta, (2) T. N. Banerji, Manager of defendant 1; and the claim was for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 632-3, details of which were given. No separate address was given of defendant 2 in the plaint.

The writ of summons which was issued was addressed to T. N. Banerji, c/o The International Commercial Co. Ltd., 84/A, Clive Street, Calcutta. On the back of the writ there is an endorsement by the bailiff of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, to the effect that on 27th November 1926, he served the summons on the defendant's assistant, who accepted service but refused to sign the original, at No. 84/A, Clive Street, Calcutta. It is rather difficult to understand how, when the evidence shows that the writ against the Managing Director of the company, who was defendant 1 to the suit, was returned unserved on 19th November, with a report that the business of the company had been closed, there could have been any service of the writ on Banerji at the office of the company. The order sheet makes it clear that, on 11th February 1927, the present defendant had taken time to make inquiries with regard to the company and that a fresh summons was taken out for service on defendant 1 in the Nagpur suit on 10th March 1927, which was made returnable on 21st June 1927. On 21st June 1927, the plaintiff gave up his claim against defendant 1 and obtained an ex parte decree against Banerji. (His Lordship then discussed the merits of the Nagpur suit and proceeded). With regard to the question as to whether the defendant knew the plaintiff's residential address at the time when he instituted his suit in the Nagpur Court, I must say I am unable to accept Banerji's story that the defendant had seen the plaintiff's private address in some book or paper of the company when the defendant had interviewed the plaintiff prior to his appointment and, on the evidence, I am not prepared to hold that Raizada knew the plaintiff's residential address prior to the passing of the decree. I see no reason for refusing to accept Raizada's positive testimony that the only address of Banerji known to him at the time of the institution of the Nagpur suit was the address at 84/A, Clive Street. (His Lordship then considered the contentions of the parties and proceeded). I do not think, on the authorities, there can be any real doubt that the mere fact that the claim, on which the prior decree has been passed, is a false claim or that the decree had been obtained on perjured evidence is any ground for setting aside a decree. Muk-tamalr Dasi v. Ram Chandra Dey (1). Nor is there any question that a fresh suit will not lie to set aside a decree on the ground of mere non-service of summons. Narsingh Das v. Rafikan (2).

I do not propose to review all the cases bearing on this subject, nor to discuss in detail the authorities cited before me. I think I should be guided by the principle laid down in Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (3). In my view, the plaintiff in this case will only be entitled to have the Nagpur decree set aside if he can satisfy the Court that the decree had been obtained by fraud practised by the defendant and that the plaintiff was prevented by reason of the defendant's fraud from placing his case before the Nagpur Court. On the facts, I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to make out his case. As I have already indicated, I am unable to hold that the defendant, at the time of the institution of the Nagpur suit, knew that the plaintiff's connexion with the company had ceased or that the writ of summons on Banerji could not be served at 84/A, Clive Street, nor am I prepared to hold that the defendant had come to know the plaintiff's residential address at any time prior to the passing of the decree. I hold that Raizada was not guilty of knowingly giving a false address of the plaintiff to the Nagpur Court or of fraudulently suppressing service of summons. The writ of summons in the Nagpur suit was, in the ordinary course, transmitted by the Nagpur Court to the Calcutta Court of Small Causes for service on Banerji at the address given on it and the return of the bailiff of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes purports to show that service was in fact effected on one of Banerji's assistants at 84/A, Clive Street.

1. A I R 1927 Cal 84=97 I C 879.
2. (1910) 37 Cal 197=5 I C 198.
3. (1891) 21 Cal 612.

It has not been shewn, nor attempted to be shewn, that Raizada had anything to do with the actual service of the summons on Banerji, nor has there been any suggestion made that Raizada had procured a false return of service. I think Raizada is well entitled to take his stand on the fact that the return of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes showed that the summons had been served and that the Court at Nagpur had chosen to accept the service of summons in the manner indicated on the return as good service and had proceeded to pass a decree on that footing. To my mind, the question as to whether Raizada gave a false address for service on Banerji or an address which he may have had reason to believe was not the correct address cannot affect the position very much. If a plaintiff in an action gives a wrong address of the defendant and takes no part in serving the summons on the defendant, the giving of the wrong address by itself would not prevent the defendant from appearing before the Court to defend the suit. In such a case, in the normal course of events, the summons should come back unserved and, in the absence of proof that the summons had been duly served, no Court would pass a decree. The return of the bailiff of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes does show that service was effected on Banerji in a certain manner. The Nagpur Court has accepted it as good service on Banerji and has thought fit to pass a decree on that footing. Once it is conceded that Raizada had nothing whatsoever to do with the actual serving of the summons, it becomes evident that he cannot be charged with having deliberately suppressed the service of summons or having obtained the decree by fraud, even though he may have had some cause for suspecting that the service effected on Banerji at 84/A, Clive Street, might not have been good service.

In my judgment, the decree of the Nagpur Court was not obtained by fraud and cannot be set aside. The plaintiff has not been able to prove that there has been fraudulent suppression of summons or that he was prevented by reason of any fraud on the part of the defendant from placing his case before the Nagpur Court. I regret very much the conclusion to which I have come, as I cannot help feeling that Banerji had no opportunity of contesting the Nagpur suit and that he had a substantial defence to put forward. I think that, if an application had been made to the Nagpur Court under the provisions of O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., the ex parte decree, made by that Court, would, in all probability, have been set aside. The plaintiff however has chosen not to go to the Nagpur Court and has sought to set aside the decree in this suit, on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud. I have held that he has failed to make out his case and the consequence is that the decree stands. Learned counsel for the defendant had raised a point as to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain this suit. I do not think there is any substance in that point. The cases Indian Provident Co. Ltd. v. Govinda Chandra Das (4) and Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (5) furnish clear authority that this Court has jurisdiction on the facts of this case and I hold accordingly. Mr. Hazra for the plaintiff admitted, at the very outset, that the plaintiff's claim, in so far as it relates to damages for wrongful arrest, must depend on the plaintiff succeeding in having the Nagpur decree set aside on the ground of fraud. Having regard to the conclusions I have arrived at, there can be no question therefore of the plaintiff getting any decree for damages. In the result, the suit fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The same conditions, which may at one time create an emergency, may, whether they continue or disappear, be regarded as again creating an emergency. There is nothing in S. 72 which may be construed as indicating that an Ordinance, which, under it, is to remain in force for six months, cannot be repeated. And hence S. 77, Special Powers Ordinance 10 of 1932, is not ultra vires: A I R 1931 P C 111, Rel on. [P 279 C 1]

* (b) Press Emergency Powers Act (23 of 1931), S. 23 — Newspaper describing agency which has opposed and humiliated India and has been persecuting her by keeping her under subjection — These expressions can refer only to Government — These expressions are therefore objectionable under S. 23.

For a subject nation to pray to Srikrishna on a "Janmashtami" day for attainment of political freedom is not a thing which can be legitimately condemned. But for an innocent sentiment of such character, expressions such as "uplifted hand of oppression," "oppressed and humiliated India," "India persecuted and under subjection" and "Piteous wail of a suffering people" will have no place and would be wholly inapposite. These expressions assume the presence of an agency which has oppressed and humiliated her, has uplifted its hand for oppressing her further, and has been persecuting her by keeping her under subjection and being heedless of the piteous wails of her suffering people. The only agency for which it is possible to behave in that way is the Government established by law, and the expressions, having been used with reference to it, obviously tend to bring it into hatred or contempt and are calculated to excite disaffection towards it.

K. C. Chakravarty—for Applicants.

A. K. Koy and S. M. Bose—for the Crown.

Mukerji, J.—This is an application under S. 23, Press (Emergency Powers) Act 23 of 1931. Petitioner 1 is the printer and publisher of a newspaper "Dainik Nayak" and petitioner 2 is the keeper of the "Swadesh Press" in which it is printed. The Local Government having, by orders made on 1st October 1932, declared forfeited to His Majesty a sum of Rs. 100 out of the security deposit of Rs. 500 made by petitioner 1 and the whole amount of the security deposit of Rs. 100 made by petitioner 2, in the exercise of their powers under S. 8, sub-S. (1) and S. 4, sub-S. (1) respectively of the said Act, the petitioners have made this application to set aside the said orders. The offending article appeared in the issue of the said newspaper of date 24th August 1932. Two passages in that article appeared to the Governor-in-Council to contain words of the nature described in sub-S. (1), S. 4 of the Act, as amended by S. 77 of the Special Powers Ordinance No. 10 of 1932, as those words, in the opinion of the Governor-in-Council:

"tend to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty's Government."

The first contention urged on behalf of the petitioners is that S. 77, Special Powers Ordinance No. 10 of 1932, was ultra vires. The argument is that Cls. (c) to (i) of this section, but for the words "or which tend, directly or indirectly," which precede the clauses, are mere reproduction of Cls. (c) to (i) as contained in S. 63, Special Powers Ordinance No. 2 of 1932, and inasmuch as the latter Ordinance was promulgated on 4th January 1932, and the former on 30th June 1932, the reproduction of the clauses had the effect of prolonging the life of the earlier Ordinance against the express provision of S. 72, Government of India Act, as amended in 1919, which says that an Ordinance so promulgated shall be in force for six months only from the date of its promulgation. It has been argued also that if it is a state of emergency that gives the Governor-General authority to promulgate an Ordinance, the emergency which was caused by the conditions which existed on 4th January 1932 cannot be said to have continued as an emergency till 30th June 1932, because during the interval that elapsed there was ample time to have recourse to the legislature for such enactment as may have been necessary to meet the situation. The contention, in my opinion, is not well founded. It assumes that once a situation of emergency is created, it is the same emergency that continues; on the other hand, the same conditions, which may at one time create an emergency, may, whether they continue or disappear, well be regarded as again creating an emergency. Whether at any particular moment there is a state of emergency or not is a matter entirely for the Governor-General to judge: see Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1). And there is nothing in S. 72, Government of India Act, which may be construed as indicating that an Ordinance, which under it, is to remain in force for six months, cannot be repeated.

The next contention of the petitioners is directed to establish that the passages which are said to be objectionable are not really so, if they are properly read and understood. Some objection has been taken to the translation of the article, it being said that the word "dharma" should be translated as "religion" and not "righteousness," and the word "adharma" as "irreligion" and not "un-righteousness" or "evil," and that "Murari" means not "slayer of Mura" but only "enemy of Mura." I am prepared to concede that such meanings as the petitioners suggest are more literal. So far as "Murari" is concerned it is only an appellation of Sri Krishna and no sinister inference need, in any case, be drawn from the use of the word. As regards "dharma" and "adharma" I see no point in the difference as to their meaning, for "righteousness" is but the practical manifestation of "religion," and "religion" and "righteousness" are, in a sense, synonymous when used with reference to conduct of human beings or institutions.

Learned advocate for the petitioner, as I understand his arguments, desires us to read the article as meaning that as India at the present moment is being oppressed by wrongs done to her by her own people or by a section of her people on account of the irreligious lives into which they have plunged themselves, the writer was invoking Sri Krishna to manifest Himself on earth once again as He had bound Himself by promise to do when the cup of sin and iniquity would be full to its brim, and to destroy the irreligion that was being practised by her people and deliver her from her present miserable plight. He desires us to hold that Janmashtami, which is the day on which Sri Krishna was born, is an occasion when one may not inappropriately be given to thoughts of this nature, because He took His birth to destroy those forces which were the embodiment of "irreligion" and lust of power, such as Kansa and Duryodhana. He has argued that the expression "to set your mother in chains free from her shackles" has been used metaphorically to mean the deliverance of India from such prejudices and irreligious practices as have conduced to hamper her progress. I am of opinion that the article cannot possibly bear such an interpretation.

It is quite true that Janmashtami is a day for pious thoughts and wishes, and I am prepared to concede that for a subject nation to pray to Sri Krishna for attainment of political freedom is not a thing which can be legitimately condemned. But for an innocent sentiment of such character, expressions such as "uplifted hand of oppression," "oppressed and humiliated India," "India persecuted and under subjection," and "piteous wail of a suffering people" will have no place and would be wholly inapposite. It is possible that one will not be far wrong if he attributes the present condition of the country to want of reverence for religion, but the expressions to which I have referred clearly indicate something very different from that as being what is actually meant. The expressions assume the presence of an agency which has oppressed and humiliated her, has uplifted its hand for oppressing her further, and has been persecuting her by keeping her under subjection and being heedless of the piteous wails of her suffering people. The only agency for which it is possible to behave in that way is the Government established by law, and the expressions, having been used with reference to it, obviously tend to bring it into hatred or contempt and are calculated to excite disaffection towards it.

We have been asked to read the quotations from the Geeta which are to be found in the article in the light of their context. This, of course, we have to do, but I do not see what advantage the petitioners gain thereby. The Geeta no doubt embodies in its sayings the highest and noblest of truths. The three quotations are from the sayings of Sri Krishna in circumstances which, if they are at all taken into consideration, would put a still worse complexion on the article under consideration. In my judgment therefore the application should be dismissed.

Misc. Case No. 160 of 1932, Decided on 16th January 1933.

* * (a) Ordinance (10 of 1932), S. 80—Sentence imposed under Ordinance (2 of 1932) continues to have effect even after its expiry.

The expression "anything done in pursuance of any provision" of such and such Ordinances covers the case of penalties inflicted under Ordinance 2 and the other expiring Ordinances referred to in Ordinance 10, and sentences imposed under the expiring Ordinance do continue to have effect even after the date of its expiry.

[P 281 C 1, 2]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Penal Statute—Penalties under statute are not affected by repeal of statute.

Penalties that have been incurred while a statute is in force, are not (in the absence of an express provision to the contrary), affected by the mere fact of the statute having ceased to be in force by express repeal or by expiration by effluxion of time: Stevenson v. Oliver, 8 M & W 231, Rel. on.

[P 281 C 2]

* (c) Government of India Act (1915), S. 72—Sentences under Ordinance are not intended to expire with the Ordinance.

It is not the intention of the Parliament in limiting the duration of an Ordinance to six months to limit also the sentences of imprisonment that might be imposed under any such Ordinance to sentences that would expire with the expiry of the Ordinance. There is nothing in the wording of S. 72 to justify such a conclusion, although no such proviso may have been inserted in the Ordinance. [P 282 C 1, 2]

(d) Interpretation of Statutes—Penal Statute—Rule laid down.

No doubt a penal statute should be strictly construed but it is nonetheless true that every statute, whether penal or not, should be construed in a manner consistent with common sense, and that if the intention of the legislature is not apparent from the words of the statute itself, it ought to be presumed to have been such as is consistent with reason and justice.

[P 282 C 2]

N. K. Basu and Ramendra Chandra Roy—for Petitioner.

Advocate-General and J. K. Mukerji—for the Crown.

Patterson, J.—The petitioner was convicted under S. 21, Ordinance 2 of 1932, on 12th March 1932 for having disobeyed or neglected to comply with an order that had been made by the District Magistrate of Bakargunj under S. 4 of that Ordinance and that had been duly served on the petitioner on 4th March 1932. He was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 18 months and to pay a fine of Rs. 150 and in default to undergo a further term of imprisonment for three months: he is now serving out his sentence in the Dum Dum Special Jail. By this Rule the Superintendent of the Jail has been called on to show cause why the petitioner should not be set at liberty on the ground that the provisions of S. 21, Ordinance 2 of 1932, authorizing the Court to pass sentences of imprisonment which would continue beyond the date of expiry of the said Ordinance are ultra vires of S. 72, Government of India Act of 1919, and also on the ground that the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for 18 months passed on him ceased to have effect after the said date. It appears that Ordinance 2 of 1932 came into force on 4th January 1932 and that it remained in force up to and including 3rd July 1932, on which date it expired under the provisions of S. 72, Government of India Act, which limit the duration of an Ordinance under that section to a period of six months. It further appears that before the expiry of Ordinance 2 of 1932 another Ordinance (Ordinance 10 of 1932) was made by the Governor-General in Council under S. 72, Government of India Act, and that it came into force on 30th June 1932. This Ordinance, among other things, re-enacted the provisions of S. 4, Ordinance 2 of 1932, and also the provisions of S. 21 of that Ordinance, while S. 80 contained a saving clause to the effect that anything done in pursuance of any provision of Ordinance 2 should be deemed to have been done in pursuance of the corresponding provision of Ordinance 10.

Now S. 72, Government of India Act, lays down that an Ordinance made under that section shall for the space of six months from the date of its promulgation have the like force of law as an Act passed by the Indian legislature, and that the power of making such Ordinances is subject to the like restrictions as the power of the Indian legislature to make laws. That being so the two Ordinances with which we are now concerned may, for the purposes of the present case, be regarded as standing on precisely the same footing as if they had been temporary Acts passed by the Indian legislature. Ss. 4 and 21, Ordinance 2, are perfectly clear and unambiguous, as are also the corresponding provisions of Ordinance 10, and this being so, it must I think be held that S. 80, Ordinance 10, provides a complete answer to the petitioner's contention that at any rate since 3rd July 1932, (the date on which the Ordinance 2 expired), he has been illegally detained in custody. It has been urged on his behalf that if, apart from the provisions of Ordinance 10, he would have been entitled to be released from custody on the expiry of Ordinance 2, the terms of S. 80 of the former Ordinance are not sufficiently clear and precise to justify his further detention. It is contended that if the intention of the legislature, (the legislature in the present instance being the Governor-General), was that sentences imposed under the expiring Ordinance should continue to have effect even after the date of its expiry, it should have expressed its intention with greater clearness and should not have left it to be gathered by inference; that the words of S. 80 do not make it at all clear that such was the intention; and in particular that the words "anything done," as used in that section, do not include penalties. I do not agree with these contentions: I cannot imagine any more comprehensive expression than "anything done in pursuance of any provision" of such and such Ordinances, and it seems to me to be perfectly clear that this expression covers, and was intended to cover, the case of penalties inflicted under Ordinance 2 and the other expiring Ordinances referred to in Ordinance 10.

The conclusion stated above is of itself sufficient for the disposal of this Rule, but as the question of the competence of the Governor-General to authorize the Courts by means of an Ordinance to pass sentences of imprisonment for terms extending beyond the date of expiry of such Ordinance has been raised by this Rule and has been fully discussed before us, I think it is desirable that this question should be decided. If the Ordinance had been expressly repealed, the question would probably have presented very little difficulty in view of the provisions of S. 38, Cl. (2), Interpretation Act of 1889 and of Ss. 6 and 30, General Clauses Act of 1897, but although these provisions do not apply in terms to the case of a temporary statute the term of which has expired, it may very reasonably be contended that they merely give statutory expression to a rule of construction which was already in existence and which applied with equal force to statutes that had been expressly repealed and to temporary statutes the terms of which had expired. This rule of construction was recognized in England as far back as the year 1841 in Stearns v. Oliver (1), in which a question similar to the one now under consideration arose with reference to the effect of the expiry of an Act on rights acquired while the Act was in force.

The learned Judges who dealt with that case were of opinion that not only rights acquired under a temporary Act, but also penalties imposed thereunder, would survive its expiration. The principle underlying their decision appears to have been that transactions that have been completed, rights that have been acquired and penalties that have been incurred while a statute is in force, are not (in the absence of an express provision to the contrary), affected by the mere fact of the statute having ceased to be in force, a principle which has since received statutory recognition in the Interpretation Act of 1889 in the case of express repeal, though not as yet in the case of expiration by effluxion of time. This rule seems to me to be founded not only on considerations of convenience, but also of reason and justice, and it ought in my opinion to be kept prominently in mind in endeavouring to decide the question now under consideration.

The question is really one of construction, and relates mainly to the construction of S. 72, Government of India Act. S. 21, Ordinance 2 of 1932, authorizes the imposition of sentences of imprisonment that may extend to two years, and is clearly within the competence of the Indian legislature to create offences by statute and to make them punishable in this manner: it was therefore prima facie within the competence of the Governor-General to make and promulgate an Ordinance containing provisions of this character. The question is whether it was the intention of Parliament in limiting the duration of an Ordinance to six months, to limit also the sentences of imprisonment that might be imposed under any such Ordinance to sentences that would expire with the expiry of the Ordinance. There is nothing in the wording of S. 72 to justify such a conclusion, and in my opinion Parliament cannot possibly have intended anything so unreasonable. To hold otherwise would be to hold that Parliament intended not only to prevent the Governor-General from authorizing the Courts to impose such sentences of imprisonment as might be necessary for the purpose of dealing effectively with the emergency the existence of which the promulgation of an Ordinance pre-supposes, but also that the maximum sentences of imprisonment that the Courts might be authorized to impose should vary from six months rigorous imprisonment in the case of convictions on the date on which the Ordinance came into force, to imprisonment till the rising of the Court, or something equally futile, in the case of convictions on the date on which the Ordinance was due to expire. The consequences of such an interpretation have only to be stated for its absurdity to become apparent, and I have no hesitation in holding that the interpretation that the petitioner would have us put on S. 72 cannot possibly be the correct interpretation.

It is true that a penal statute should be strictly construed, but it is nonetheless true that every statute, whether penal or not, should be construed in a manner consistent with common sense, and that if the intention of the legislature is not apparent from the words of the statute itself, it ought to be presumed to have been such as is consistent with reason and justice. If the test be applied to the provisions of S. 72, it is clear that the legislature can never have intended that sentences authorized by an Ordinance should not extend beyond the term of the Ordinance, or that such sentences should automatically expire with the expiration of the Ordinance. The section will not bear the interpretation sought to be put on it by the petitioner, and that interpretation cannot be accepted as correct. It was also suggested on behalf of the petitioner that as an Ordinance is necessarily based on the existence of a state of emergency it ought to cease to have effect as soon as the emergency is over, and that sentences imposed under the provisions of an Ordinance ought logically to terminate with the termination of the Ordinance. The argument is clearly fallacious for the reasons already indicated, and does not call for further comment.

Before leaving the case I ought perhaps to refer to another argument that was urged by the learned advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioner. It was pointed out that the Defence of India Act of 1915 and the Emergency Powers Act of 1920 were temporary statutes which, like Ordinance 2 of 1932, contained provisions by which offences were created and made punishable with imprisonment and that both these Acts contained special provisos to the effect that penalties imposed thereunder should not be affected by the expiry of the Acts, or (in the case of the Emergency Powers Act) of the regulations framed thereunder. It was contended that the fact that such provisos were considered necessary in the case of those two Acts show that if it is intended that punishments inflicted under the provisions of temporary statutes should be given effect to after the expiry of those statutes, it is necessary that this should be specifically stated. I do not agree with this contention, for having regard to the rule of construction indicated in Steavenson v. Oliver (1) and already referred to in the earlier portion of this judgment, I am of opinion that the provisos in question were not really necessary and that they were merely inserted (as is frequently done in the case of provisos and saving clauses) as a precaution against misinterpretation of the intention of the legislature. Moreover I find that out of some 12 Ordinances promulgated between 1922 and 1932 by which inter alia offences were created and penalties provided, only two, (viz.: Ordinances 4 and 8 of 1930), contain provisos of the nature indicated above. These two Ordinances related to martial law and empowered the military authorities to frame regulations creating offences and imposing penalties, but I have been unable to discover any possible reason why the provisos in question were inserted in these two Ordinances and not in the others. In these circumstances I do not think it is possible to draw any such inference as the learned advocate for the petitioner would have us draw from the fact that the Emergency Powers Act and the Defence of India Act contain provisos of the nature indicated above.

The petitioner has in my opinion failed to show that the sentence of imprisonment passed on him was illegal or that it ceased to have effect on the expiry of the term of the Ordinance. The rule ought therefore to be discharged.

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Construction—True meaning of passage may be found by comparison with other provisions.

The true meaning, exact scope and significance of any passage occurring in a statute may be found not merely in the words of that passage, but on a comparison of the same with other parts of the statute, and the intention of the Legislature ascertained in that way: River Wear Commissioners v. Adamson, (1877) 2 A C 743 and Easter Co. v. Comptroller of Patents, (1898) A C 576 Ref. [P 283 C 2; P 284 C 1]

Naresh Chandra Sen Gupta and Shamadas Bhattacharjee—for Petitioner.

Bijan Kumar Mukerjee and Apurba Charan Mukherjee—for Opposite Parties.

Guha, J.—The Rules issued by this Court in the cases before us, were directed against an order of the Munsif, First Court, Howrah, passed in Miscellaneous Cases Nos. 117 and 131 of 1931, granting relief to the opposite party, on applications made by them, purporting to be under S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, for realization of landlord's fee and compensation, as mentioned in that section. The applications were made on the footing that the petitioners in this Court were the purchasers of portions of occupancy holdings of which the opposite party were the landlords. The applications so made were resisted by the tenants, petitioners before us. The decision of the Munsif went against them, and this Court was moved to set aside the order of the Court below. The question argued before us on behalf of the petitioners was that the Court below acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction in going into complicated questions of title and status of the tenant otherwise than in a suit properly framed for the purpose. It was contended that recovery of landlord's fee and compensation, as provided by S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, must be by a suit instituted for that purpose, and not by an application.

There was no doubt that S. 26-J, as it stands, does not expressly mention the procedure to be followed for the purpose of recovery of landlord's fee and compensation. The intention of the Legislature however is to provide a procedure of a summary nature in the matter of realization of the balance of the fee payable on transfer under Ss. 26-C to 26-E, Ben. Ten. Act; and that intention is clearly expressed in S. 188 of the Act, definitely enumerating the filing of an application under S. 26-J as one of the acts which the law authorizes co-sharer landlords to do, acting together, or by an agent authorized to act on their behalf. The true meaning, the exact scope and significance of any passage occurring in a statute may be found not merely in the words of that passage but on a compari-sion of the same with other parts of the statute, and the intention of the legislature ascertained in that way: see River Wear Commissioners v. Adamson (1) and Easter Co. v. Comptroller of Patents (2). In our judgment therefore the landlords were entitled under the law to recover the balance of transfer fee together with compensation, as mentioned in S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, by means of an application, as made in the case before us. It may be mentioned that the decision we have arrived at, on the question of interpretation of S. 26-J, Ben. Ten. Act, arising for consideration in the case before us, is in consonance with the view expressed by this Court previously on the subject: see per C. C. Ghose, J., in the case of Hari Mihan Sarkar v. Lokenath Mukerji, Civil Revision Case No. 768 of 1931 decided on 3rd February 1931 and per Jack, J., in the case of Srinath Bose v. Dehendra Nath (3). The Rules are discharged and the order of the Court below is confirmed. We make no order as to costs in these cases.

Bengal Village Self-Government Act (5 of 1919), Ss. 4 and 31—S. 31 does not apply to private lands.

Though "road" as defined in S. 4, Cl. Syed Nasim Ali—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal relates to a suit for recovery of khas possession of lands on declaration of plaintiff's title thereto. The plaintiff and the defendants are all residents of the village Palibari. The plaintiff's case is that the lands in Sch. 1 formed a public Gopat lying to the south and west of his tank adjoining his homestead. At the request of the villagers the plaintiff re-excavated the tank and there was an agreement between the plaintiff on one side and certain persons representing the villagers on the other by which the villagers gave up the right to the aforesaid Gopat and in exchange the plaintiff agreed to make a new path on the land of his tenancy lying on the other two sides of the tank. This land is described in Sch. 2. This arrangement was approved by the Union Board at a meeting and the plaintiff took settlement of the land in Sch. 1 from the landlords. His possession however over the land of Sch. 1 was resisted by the defendants who instituted a case under S. 133, Criminal P. C., and it was decided against the plaintiff. The plaintiff therefore sued for declaration of his title to the land of Sch. 1 and for recovery of possession thereof. Amongst the several defendants a few supported the plaintiff's case and the rest contested it. The trial Court found that the arrangement as per Ex. 6 upon which the plaintiff based his case was a matter between the plaintiff on one side and some villagers on the other and that these villagers did not act in a representative capacity. The villagers as a whole therefore did not lose their right of way over the land in Sch. 1 and in that view the trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Munsif on practically the same grounds. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiff.

In this appeal the learned advocate for the appellants concedes that he cannot base his case on the aforesaid arrangement as evidenced by the document Ex. 6. But he contends that this arrangement was ratified by the Union Board at a meeting under S. 31, Bengal Village Self-Government Act 5 of 1919, and therefore it ought to prevail. This argument does not seem to have been made at the trial, but it was made before the District Judge and he thought that S. 31 of the Act did not apply because the land was private property. It is pointed out "road" as defined in S. 4, Cl. (8) of the Act means "any road" street or passage whether a thoroughfare or not over which the public have a right of way and it is contended that this means that "road" as defined in the Act may extend over private property. Nevertheless S. 31 of the Act provides that the Union Board shall have control of all roads, etc., within the Union, not being private property and not being under the control of the Local Government, or the District Board or the Local Board. Therefore private property is expressly excluded by this section. This I think is consistent with reason, because the various things which the Union Board is empowered to do under this section according to Cls. (a) to (f) are things which cannot be done with respect to privately owned lands. Mr. Nasim Ali pointed out that there is no provision for compensation for private owners, if their land is to be taken by the Union Board while directing a road. He has drawn my attention to an English case of 1877, namely, Wells v. London Tilbury and South-end Railway Co. (1). There the Act that was sought to be interpreted expressly recited that it was expedient that the rights of way in respect of certain footways which crossed the railway on the level should be extinguished, but no provision for compensation was made.

It was held that upon the true construction of the Act, it did not interfere with private rights of way, but only with public rights of footway. To the same effect are the remarks in another English case, namely, The Attorney-General v. Horner (2). In the present case no doubt the zamindar has been made a party but he was no party to the arrangement upon which the plaintiff based his claim for relief. As regards the land in Sch. 2 the plaintiff was only a tenant and it has been found by the Courts below that the new diversion over the land of Sch. 2 has not yet been carried out and as a matter of fact the plaintiff does not claim any relief in respect of land in Sch. 2. Another difficulty in the way of the appellant is that this point which is based upon the resolution passed by the Union Board does not stand on proper evidence, for the simple reason that the resolution itself has not been put in evidence. There is only the deposition of the President and it goes to show that the Union Board apparently acted under the impression that all the villagers had agreed to the diversion and this, it has been found, was not the case. In the circumstances I do not think there is any force in the contention on which this second appeal has been argued. I have however some sympathy for the plaintiff-appellant. I dismiss this appeal, but at the same time I order that each party do bear his own costs in this Court.

—Opposite Parties.

Civil Rules Nos. 1100 and 1224 of 1931, Decided on 2nd May 1932, against order of Dist. Judge, Berhampur, D/- 25th May 1931.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 13—Rent decree—Tenure sold in mortgage decree—Purchaser offering rent, but refused—Landlord suing old tenant for arrears accruing after purchase and purchasing land himself—Purchaser can deposit decretal amount and set aside sale to landlord—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 89.

A permanent transferable tenure was sold in execution of a mortgage decree. The purchaser offered to pay rent to the landlord in respect of that holding. But the latter refused to accept it and sued the old recorded tenants for arrears of rent. Portion of these arrears had fallen due after the tenure was sold to the purchaser in the mortgage sale. The landlord however obtained a rent decree and in execution thereof himself purchased the holding.

Held: that the decree obtained by the landlord was not a rent-decree nor the sale, a rent-sale. O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., was applicable, and the decretal amount could be deposited by the purchaser at the mortgage sale and the sale to the landlord set aside: A I R 1930 P C 193, Rel on. [P 286 C 2]

Judgment. — These Rules have been issued upon the opposite parties to show cause why an order refusing to set aside two sales in execution of two decrees for arrears of rent should not be reversed. The petitioner is the purchaser at a mortgage execution sale of the two transferable permanent tenures in question. The landlords subsequently purchased these tenures in execution of decrees for arrears of rent and it is admitted that a portion of the arrears claimed in the rent suit fell due after the petitioner purchased the tenures in the mortgage sale. The landlords ignored the petitioner and sued the recorded tenants for the entire rent, and the question is whether the decrees in rent suits were rent decrees or money decrees. This case came up to this Court on a previous occasion and it was referred back for determination whether the decrees were rent or money decrees. The trial Court found that they were rent decrees, inasmuch as the Court found the landlord's fee had not been paid under the procedure laid down in S. 13, Ben. Ten. Act. He came to this conclusion from the statement of the landlord and from the facts that in the order sheet of the mortgage execution case there was no record that the landlord's fees had been paid.

The appellate Court came to the same finding and dismissed the applications, it being held that the petitioner could not come under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. The Courts below seem to have overlooked the provisions of Bengal Council Act 1 of 1903 which lays down that no transfer shall be deemed to be invalid merely on the ground that the landlord's fee prescribed by S. 12 or S. 13 has not been paid. It is doubtful also whether they gave sufficient weight to the presumption that arises under S. 114, Evidence Act, that the procedure laid down in the Code was carried out by the Collector at the time of confirmation of sale. But apart from that, we have the evidence of the mortgagee that after the petitioner's purchase he approached the Tahsildar as well as the landlord to pay rent as manager of the petitioner, telling them of the petitioner's purchase, but they did not accept the rent. The trial Court held that this being no compliance with the provisions of S. 13, Ben. Ten. Act, S. 12 of the Act had no application in the present case. But there can be no doubt on this evidence that the landlords were perfectly well aware of the transfer at the mortgage sale and by bringing the suit for rent against the former tenants only they were claiming money which is not really rent, for admittedly a portion of the money claimed as arrears of rent fell due as after the transfer of the holdings and was not rent. In these circumstances the sale cannot be regarded as rents sales. If any authority is required for this view it is to be found in the case of Jitendra Nath Ghose v. Mon Mohan Ghose (1).

There it was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council that under the Tenancy Act of 1885 instead of the transferee being bound to go to the landlord to get his name recorded, it was provided that a voluntary transfer must be made by a registered instrument and that before registration a fee was to be paid by the transferee and notice given by the Registration Office through the Collector to the landlord or, in the case of an execution sale, by the executing Court. In this state of the law their Lordships can see no foundation for the contention that a landlord can ignore all transfers of the tenure and rely upon decrees obtained by him against persons whom he chooses for his own purposes still to record as his tenants, though he knows or must be taken to know that their interest in the tenure has ceased. They point out that according to the decisions of the Board in Surapati Roy v. Ram Narayan Mukerji (2) and Chintamani Dutt v. Rash Behari Mondal (3), the original tenure holders would no longer be liable for the rent and that an effective decree therefore could only be obtained against the transferees. The Rules must accordingly be made absolute and the petitioner's applications under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., are allowed. The sales will be set aside, as the petitioner is said to have deposited the amount referred to under the provisions of that rule. Each party will bear its own costs.

RANKIN, C. J. AND MITTER, J.

Gobardhandas and another — Defendants—Appellants.

v.

Gopaldas Modi and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Appeals Nos. 22 and 24 of 1932, Decided on 29th April 1932, from original order in Suit No. 1517 of 1929.

(a) Executor—Executor taking money for himself—Court has power to pass interlocu- tory order directing him to bring amount in Court or furnish security.

After a testator's death G and D, two of the executors and also residuary legatees under the will, drew large sums of money belonging to the estate. Disputes having arisen between the executors, an administration suit was filed and, by consent, D and H were appointed receivers in that suit with liberty to divide the properties among the residuary legatees, after providing and securing payment of the liabilities of the estate and of the legacies. Shortly thereafter, another order was made removing the two receivers and appointing the Official Receiver in their place. Then the widow of the testator, brought an application, asking that D and G be directed to bring into Court the sums they had taken :

Held : that the Court had the power after considering the affidavits filed by the parties to pass the interlocutory order directing them to bring the money in Court or furnish security for the same : English cases referred.

(b) Executor—Executor being also residuary legatee taking money for himself before paying debts and legacies is breach of trust.

An executor, who is a residuary legatee, is not entitled, to help himself out of the residuary estate without making provision for the debts and specific legacies and other matters which are prior thereto. It is only after these matters have been cleared that the estate of the testator becomes the property of the residuary legatee. Hence where an executor who is also a residuary legatee takes the money for himself before paying debts and legacies, it is a breach of trust on his part and no question of title arises : Fordham v. Wallis, (1853) 10 Hare 217, Ref.

Pugh, S. R. Das and S. C. Roy—for Appellants.

N. N. Sircar, C. L. Jhoonjhoonwalla, S. N. Banerjee, H. C. Majumdar and P. N. Banerjee—for Respondents.

Rankin, C. J.—Two appeals are before us—Nos. 22 and 24 of 1932. They are brought respectively by Lala Gobardhandas and Lala Dinanath, two persons, who, with other three, are the executors of the will of one Raghumull Khandolwal, who died on 5th September 1926, probate being taken of his will on 10th January 1927. Raghumall appears to have died a wealthy man and, by the provisions of his will, he, first of all, directed that the residue of his property should go to certain persons. The two appellants before us were his nephews and they were to get an equal one-fourth share, his wife was to get another and his daughter, married to one Hansraj, was to get another. They were to be entitled to carry on the business in equal shares and were to be entitled to the goodwill and so forth in equal shares. There were various legacies and five persons were appointed executors and trustees—the two appellants, Hansraj, who had married his daughter, one Gopaldas Modi, who afterwards became the plaintiff in this suit, and the widow. These persons were to act by majority, they were to act by resolutions passed at meetings or by resolutions passed by circulation. The testator having died in September 1926, we find that trouble first began when the plaintiff in the present suit was brought on 29th July 1929, the plaintiff being Gopaldas Modi, one of the executors. The plaintiff asks for administration of the estate and the grounds, upon which the administration is asked for, are not only that the executors are quarrelling among themselves and not only that the administration of the estate is not proceeding, but that the estate is getting into difficulties, being unable to meet the claims on it and that the debts and liabilities are not being dealt with.

Among other reasons stated in the plaint of July 1929, one is that the executors—the defendants Dinanath and Gobardhandas—are wrongfully withdrawing large sums of money from the estate claiming to be entitled thereto as residuary legatees and to that allegation the appellant Dinanath says that he has not wrongfully withdrawn any money, but that he has taken small loans from the estate with the consent and approval of the plaintiff and his other co-executors and executrix. The appellant Gobardhandas, in his written statement, gives a traverse in which he denies that he ever wrongfully withdrew any money from the estate. Thereafter there was a petition brought for the appointment of a receiver and the first order that was made on that matter was an order by consent. The application was by the widow, Srimati Bhagabati Debee, who was one of the defendants in the suit, and she made various charges, the gist of which is to be found for the present purpose in para. 27 of her petition. She said that Dinanath in collusion with Gobardhandas—although the suit was still pending and the debts and legacies had not been paid—had borrowed money in the name and on behalf of the estate at Delhi and had withdrawn a lakh of rupees out of the estate and that Gobardhandas had withdrawn a sum of about Rs. 60,000, that they had not repaid the moneys and that the estate was in a bad condition. So she was alleging that, pending the actual proceedings in the suit for administration, the two appellants had been helping themselves to the money of the estate by means of the Delhi firm. It may here be explained that, by a resolution of the executors, Gobardhandas, who lived at Delhi, was made responsible for the Cawnpore branch—Dinanath being responsible for the Delhi branch. As a result of that application, an order was made by consent, by which Hansraj who, as one may put it, was on the side of the plaintiff, and Dinanath were appointed joint receivers and the order gave these receivers liberty to divide the properties amongst the residuary legatees, after providing and securing payment for the liabilities of the estate and payment of general and pecuniary legacies; that order was dated 24th March 1931, and, shortly after that, another order was made removing these two persons as receivers and appointing the Official Receiver to be the receiver in their place and stead and to take possession of the estate immediately, that order being dated 16th June 1931.

Thereupon, in January 1932, Srimati Bhagabati Debee, the widow, brought a motion before the learned Judge, asking that Dinanath be directed to bring into Court the sum of Rs. 1,49,000 and Gobardhandas the sum of Rs. 54,299. The case made by the affidavit in support of the motion is on the following lines. After the appointment of the Official Receiver, inspection has been obtained of the Delhi books of account and the Delhi books of account are discovered to show that, in the Sambat year 1987, Dinanath, who was in charge of the Delhi firm and whose books of account these are, is debited in that year with Rs. 1,23,339—money which he has taken from that firm. There is another sum debited in the workshop account book and there is a further sum in the account of this year taken from the Calcutta account book and debited to the Delhi office, where it should have been debited to Dinanath's account. It is further brought out that, in the year 1928, a sum of Rs. 7,025 has been paid out on account of Dinanath, though it has been wrongly put in the bad debts account. In this way, there is very nearly one and a half lakhs of rupees shown by Dinanath's own books in the Delhi business to have been taken by Dinanath from the estate. I may here point out that not only is there shown a sum of Rs. 7,025 transferred in the bad debts account, which appears to have been taken in 1928, but the largest item—an item of Rs. 1,23,339 does not come into these books to the debit of Dinanath, until the Sambat year 1987—presumably after that had been concluded—which corresponds to the period from 31st March 1930 to 31st March 1931. In the Delhi books, so far as Gobardhandas is concerned, we find some Rs. 2,000 odd in bad debts account taken in 1928; but the other items which come to his debit in the Delhi books are, first of all, a debit of Rs. 46,000, then afterwards a debit which has come to the Delhi office from Calcutta of some Rs. 5,810. It may here be observed that it is quite clear from these accounts alone that the original allegation in para. 27 of the application for the appointment of a receiver was only too plainly justified, namely that, apart altogether from any small sums that might have been taken in 1928 since the plaint was brought in July 1929, these two people would appear to have been repeatedly helping themselves to as much of the testator's estate as they could very well manage to take, after exhibition had been completely made of the risky condition of this estate and the chance that it would be insolvent in the end.

I come therefore on this footing to see whether this Court has power, on the principles applicable to interlocutory orders, to make the order which the learned Judge has made. The learned Judge has taken the view that it is quite impossible still to say whether this estate will turn out to have enough money to pay the debts and the specific legacies. There has been hard swearing on both sides. The applicant says that the valuation for probate of the estate appears to show a deficiency of some Rs. 5,00,000. The appellants, on the other hand, maintain that the assets of the estate instead of being Rs. 11,00,000 will be Rs. 20,00,000 and that there will be a large sum, as they hope, to come to the residuary legatees. The learned Judge regards that, as entirely speculative and he thinks that, at all events, he ought to act upon the footing that there is the serious probability to be faced that the prior claims on this estate will more than exhaust the whole of the assets. In these circumstances, he comes to the conclusion that the Court would not withhold some protection to the creditors and others whose interests are really at stake. He says:

With regard to unfairness, it is probable that at one time all the family thought that a surplus would remain and they all agreed to the course upon which these two respondents embarked. At that time the only people likely to suffer, if anybody was to suffer at all, were the creditors and, had this family not fallen out among themselves, no doubt this claim for refund would never have been made.

When he comes to make the order, he directs that the present appellants should bring the respective sums taken by them into Court, but he gives them the alternative of finding security for the amounts. This may or may not be a logical alternative; but the learned Judge explains that he does this because the rest of the family "undoubtedly approved the course that was originally taken" and because "a refund in cash will undoubtedly be a hardship on the respondents."

I have pointed out that the evidence in this case goes to show that the great bulk of the money was drawn out after this suit had been instituted and I am not prepared to give the smallest attention to the suggestion that the sums of money, which we have to deal with, are sums in respect of which either of these appellants can, as a matter of fact, apart from the ineffectiveness of such a point in law, take shelter under consent of other parties. There is some evidence, upon which it may turn out to be true, that the appellants were not the only people who had been irregularly helping themselves to the estate of the testator whenever any part of that estate came within reach, but there appears to be not a tittle of evidence in support of the allegation that either of these appellants got the consent of the executors as a body formally or informally to any single one of the drawings in respect of which they are now called upon to refund.

In that state of affairs it has been pointed out to us by Mr. Pugh, appearing for Gobardhandas, and Mr. Roy, appearing for Dinanath, that our powers on an interlocutory motion—even in a case where an administration order has already been made in respect of Raghumull's estate—are limited by certain principles. We have been referred to the case of Freeman v. Cox (1), where it has been laid down that for interlocutory purposes in such a case as the present the defendant should only be ordered to pay money into Court which he does not dispute to be owing and which he admits to be in his hands. There is a case In re Benson (2), which Mr. Pugh says is the highwater mark of orders of this character, and Mr. Pugh suggests that the order of North, J., in that case was hardly consistent with subsequent decisions in the Court of appeal. We have been asked to consider the case of Hollis v. Burton (3), and, in particular, the case of Neville v. Mathewman (4), where it is said that the money must be in the hands of the defendant and that there must not be any bona fide dispute about title and another case of Nutter v. Holland (5), which turns out however to have reference to another jurisdiction altogether, namely, to the jurisdiction of the Court on an originating summons, the governing condition of which is that, upon an originating summons, the trustee will not be held answerable on the footing of default. Finally, the case of Crompton & Evans' Union Bank v. Burton (6) has been put before us as an authority for the proposition that the appellant, in a case like the present, would have a complete defence to such a motion by saying "true, I have had the money; but I have paid it away."

Now, it appears to me that the general teaching of these cases is this: that we have to go to the evidence upon this motion from the point of view of seeing what exactly the facts are according to the appellants themselves. The doctrine is that the plaintiff cannot get a remedy prior to the hearing of the suit by a "battle of affidavits." In the present case, there have been affidavits and we have to see exactly how much of "battle" these affidavits disclose. (His Lordship then considered the affidavit in support of the motion, and that on behalf of Gobardhandas, and proceeded.) We have then to consider whether there is very much in either of the two points that were taken on Gobardhandas's behalf: can we hold our hands on the ground that Gobardhandas has a bona fide dispute of title, or can we hold our hands on the ground that Gobardhandas has satisfied us sufficiently for the present purpose, that, though he took the money, he has not got it now? There is no question about title. It does not matter whether this executor says that he has borrowed the money from the testator's estate or whether he says that he has helped himself in anticipation of his share in the residuary estate. As a mere matter of law, we know that that money, if it is in his hands, is money which he has obtained by breach of trust. There is no arguable question as to the right of an executor, who is a residuary legatee, to help himself out of the residuary estate without making provision for the debts and specific legacies and other matters which are prior thereto. It is only after those matters have been cleared that the estate of the testator becomes the property of the residuary legatee.

We have been referred to the case of Fordham v. Wallis (7), where it was said that a payment by the executor to the residuary legatee, while the debts remained unpaid, was an absolute and unqualified breach of trust. In the present case, not only there was a breach of trust on the part of the executor who did it but it was a breach of trust on the part of the executor who took the money for himself. There is therefore nothing in the question of title. It does not matter for the present purpose what this executor disputes on the question of title. (After examining the affidavits, the judgment proceeded.) In these circumstances, it seems to me that we will not be at all straining our powers if we uphold the order which the learned Judge has made. I think that these appeals should be dismissed with costs.

As proceedings to enforce the order have already been taken, I think, that it is not necessary to limit too short a time within which the appellants should give security. The appellants are at liberty to complete the securities to the satisfaction of the Registrar within one month from today. This order is not to interfere with any of the execution proceedings unless and until the securities are lodged. When they are lodged, the appellants will have liberty to bring those execution proceedings to an end.

Appeal No. 321 of 1931, Decided on 15th June 1932, against appellate order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Midnapur, 10/- 29th June 1931.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Plea of suspension of rent on account of dispossession by landlord—Onus is upon tenant to prove dispossession and not upon the landlord to prove restoration where finding in previous suit was that tenant was dispossessed by landlord.

In cases where the question of suspension of rent arises on account of dispossession by landlord in respect of the whole or a part of the demised premises, the onus is upon the tenant to prove eviction and the extent of such eviction, and that it relates to the period for which rent is claimed by the landlord. If the landlord seeks to recover rent on the footing that the tenant was in possession of the entire area demised, the question of eviction must be decided on the facts and circumstances of the particular case before the Court, irrespective of the decision in the previous case. It would not be right to lay down as a proposition of law generally that the dispossession found in a previous suit should be deemed as against the landlord to continue up to the time of the institution of the subsequent suit for rent, and that there was any presumption against him which it was for the landlord to rebut by proof of facts showing that effective steps had been taken to restore the tenant to possession of the lands from which he was found to have been dispossessed in a previous litigation: A I R 1931 Cal 537 and 41 Cal 493 (P C), Foll.; 9 I C 568, Dist. [P 292 C 1, 2]

Joges Chandra Roy, Panchanan Ghose, Durgadas Roy and Jatindra Nath Mitra—for Appellant.

Narendra Chandra Bose and Nalin Chandra Paul—for Respondent.

Guha J.—The history of the case giving rise to this appeal has been set out in detail in the judgment of the Court below, and it is not necessary to recapitulate the same for the purpose of the appeal now before us, excepting the fact that in a suit for rent for a previous period, 1329 to 1332 B.S., it was held that the defendant-appellant in this appeal was dispossessed from 120 bighas of land out of the total area of 2877 bighas comprised in the tenure in respect of which rent was claimed by the plaintiff-respondent. The claim in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was for realization of arrears of rent for the years 1331 to 1336 A.S., as also for the period from Aswin to Chaitra 1336 B.S.; there was also the claim for cesses and damages. The defendant-appellant in this Court contested the plaintiff's claim on various grounds. The defence with which we are concerned in this appeal is the one which related to the dispossession by the plaintiff from a part of the tenure, disentitling him to recover rent as claimed in the suit. The point for determination raised by the trial Court on this part of the case was, whether the defendant had been "restored to possession of the portion of the tenure complained of."

According to the trial Court, it was for the plaintiff to show whether the tenants' grievance had been remedied by taking effective steps to restore the tenant to possession of the lands. This was said with special reference to an observation made by this Court in the judgment passed in Reshee Case Law v. Satish Chandra Pal (1). The parties to it were the same as those in the appeal before us now. The learned Subordinate Judge, in the trial Court, observed that the evidence on plaintiff's side was far from convincing, and he was not satisfied that the defendant's possession had been restored. The decision of the trial Court was against the plaintiff, and it was held that the rent claimed in the suit "must remain in suspension" till the defendant was proved to have been put into possession of the lands from which he had been dispossessed. On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Additional District Judge considered that the point for decision in the appeal was whether the defendant was entitled to obtain suspension from payment of rent on the ground of alleged dispossession by the plaintiff for the period in suit. The learned Judge observed that for the defendant to succeed, he must prove that the earlier dispossession of which mention was made by the trial Court, continued down to the period in suit. The Court of appeal has then come to the finding that the plaintiff did not appear to have realised any rent from any under-tenant during the period in suit, the clear implication being that there was no dispossession by the landlord in respect of any part of the tenure during the period for which rent was claimed from the tenant in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. The learned Additional District Judge has, upon the findings, arrived at by him, on the materials before him, held that the defendant had not been kept out of possession of any portion of the demised premises by the plaintiff, and that he was "not entitled to obtain suspension from payment of rent." The case was remanded to the trial Court for decision of other questions arising upon the defence of the tenant defendant relating to the kists by which rent was payable, and the payment of cesses and damages as claimed by the plaintiff. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

It must be noticed at the outset that in view of certain observations in the judgment of this Court in a case to which reference has been made above, the learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court had placed the onus of proof entirely on the plaintiff to prove that the tenant had been restored to possession of the lands in respect of which there was dispossession by the landlord at a previous period. The observations made by this Court were in consonance with the view expressed by this Court from time to time upon the facts and circumstances of particular cases in which the question of suspension of rent arose on account of dispossession by landlord in respect of the whole or a part of the demised premises; but the question remains, that dispossession as alleged by the tenant in any particular case must relate to the period for which rent was claimed by the landlords. It would not be right to lay down as a proposition of law generally that the dispossession found in a previous suit should be deemed as against the landlord to continue up to the time of the institution of the subsequent suit for rent, and that there was any presumption against him which it was for the landlord to rebut by proof of facts showing that effective steps had been taken to restore the tenant to possession of the lands from which he has found to have been dispossessed in a previous litigation. The decision of this Court in the case of Purna Chandra v. Basik Chandra (2), on which very great reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant before us, does not strictly bear out the general proposition. As has been pointed out in that case, whether there has been an eviction or not depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. The tenant's right to suspension of rent continues, as it has been held in many cases, till effective steps are taken by the landlord to restore him to possession. Although the proposition has been stated in a general form in some of those cases, Mookerjee, J., in Purna Chandra's case (2), mentioned above, went into the question of eviction arising for consideration in the case before him, for the purpose of deciding the same in favour of the tenant. The question of eviction must, in our judgment, be decided on the facts and circumstances of the particular case before the Court, irrespective of the decision in a previous case, on the question of dispossession, if the landlord seeks to recover rent on the footing that the tenant was in possession of the entire area demised, as he has done in the case before us.

It is difficult to appreciate the applicability of the rule of res judicata in regard to dispossession during the period of suit in a case of this description. The question of the burden of proof however as has been urged on behalf of the appellant is a very material question in such a case, although it may very well be said in the case before us all the relevant facts were before the Court below, and it has drawn its own inference on those facts, and held against the defendant in the suit : the question of onus was not therefore of importance. On principles and rules of general application, as also upon the authority of decisions of Courts in England, to which reference has been made by Sir George Rankin, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Arun Chandra Singha v. Bhagaban Chandra Roy (3), there appears to be no doubt that the onus is upon the tenant to prove eviction, and the extent of such eviction, where the plea of such eviction is raised with a view to disentitle the landlord to realize rent in its entirety. As indicated by the learned Chief Justice in the judgment, the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Nurayan Bagchi (4) supports the view that the onus was on the tenants to make out a case, if they had one, for abatement of rent. It may be mentioned that nothing more than abatement of apportionment could be decreed in favour of the appellant in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, if eviction in respect of any area could be made out by him. A lessee claiming apportionment must prove the value of the land withdrawn from the demise, ascertained on the date of such withdrawal. The burden of proof lay upon the tenant: the landlord in such a case was not a person who was prosecuting an equitable claim to an apportionment; he was a person to whose legal claim to an entire rent, the tenant, was in law entitled to make out, what was in law a defence to a part of the claim. So far as the tenant was concerned it was a plea of partial discharge from his covenant; and it followed therefore that it must be made good by the tenant, as the covenant was admitted : see Smith v. Maling (5) and Salts v. Battersby (6). There was a single plea to be taken and substantiated by the tenant, a single issue to be tried, and there could not be any shifting of onus in such a case.

In our judgment there is no question of any particular direction by this Court binding upon the parties in this case as indicated by the trial Court, there is no question also of the application of the rule of res judicata so far as the tenants' plea of partial eviction and consequent suspension of rent, so far as the period in suit were concerned, the onus was upon the tenant to make good his defence, independently of the decision in the previous suit for rent, in regard to a previous period, the decision in the previous suit might be treated as evidence in favour of the defendant. Examined from whatever point of view either on the footing that the onus was upon the tenant-defendant to make out his case of suspension or apportionment of rent, or judged from the standpoint that upon the entire evidence before the Court, the final Court of facts has come to the finding negating the defence of the tenant-defendant, the landlord plaintiff's claim for rent for the period in suit must be allowed. The learned Additional District Judge in the Court of appeal below directed himself rightly in stating that in the present suit it had to be found independently of the dispossession proved in the previous suit for rent, whether the dispossession continued in fact during the period for which rent was claimed, and we must accept his finding that the defendant-appellant had not been kept out of possession of any portion of the demised premises.

In the result the decision arrived at by the learned Judge in the Court of appeal below and the order of remand made by him are affirmed. The appeal is dismissed with costs. The hearing fee in this appeal is assessed at three gold mohurs.

Civil Rule No. 480 of 1931, Decided on 15th July 1931, against order of Munsif, 3rd Court, Midnapur, D/- 27th February 1931.

Civil P. C. (1908). O. 21, R. 100—R. 100 includes auction-purchaser's legal representative—Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 26-F.

Although the wording of O. 21, R. 100, refers only to the auction purchaser it includes his legal representatives also. A landlord obtaining possession of a holding under S. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, becomes the legal representative of the auction-purchaser as regards the holding in question and therefore the remedy of a person dispossessed by legal representatives of a purchaser is the same as against a purchaser. [P 293 C 2]

Nalin Chandra Pal—for Petitioner.

Satcowripati Roy and Bireswar Chatterji—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued calling upon the opposite party to show cause why an order allowing an application under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C., should not be set aside. This rule was issued on the ground that in a matter arising out of an application under S. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, the Court below had no jurisdiction to entertain a claim under R. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. This rule runs as follows:

"Where any person other than the judgment-debtor is dispossessed of immovable property by the holder of a decree for the possession of such property or where such property has been sold in execution of a decree, by the purchaser thereof he may make an application to the Court complaining of such dispossession.

It is urged that the dispossession under O. 21, R. 100, must be by the purchaser of the property sold in execution of a decree. In this case the dispossession was by the landlord who was put into possession under S. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act. Under Cl. 6, S. 26-F, the right, title and interest in the holding shall be deemed to have vested in the immediate landlord, whose application has been allowed, from the date of making the order under Cl. 5. The landlord, petitioner, was put into possession under the provisions of this section as against the opposite party and it is clear that he has obtained possession owing to the fact that there was an auction sale and that he has been put in the position of an auction purchaser by virtue of the provision of S. 26-F. It is clear also that under Cl. 6, S. 26-F, it is the intention of the legislature to put the landlord in the position of the auction-purchaser as regards his rights and liabilities. In fact the landlord becomes the legal representative of the auction-purchaser as regards the holding in question, and although the wording of O. 21, R. 100 refers only to the auction-purchaser it seems clear that it must be intended to include his legal representatives. There seems to be no reason why a person who is dispossessed by the legal representatives of the purchaser should not have the same remedy against them as against the purchaser. I think therefore that this rule must be discharged with costs—hearing fee, one gold mohur—and I order accordingly.

Death Ref. No. 11 and Criminal Appeals Nos. 664 and 692 of 1931, Decided on 30th November 1931.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297—Accused committing robbery charged under S. 396—Number of accused less than five—Charge under S. 396 split up and treated as charge under S. 302 together with charge under S. 392—Accused convicted of murder—Conviction held illegal—Penal Code, Ss. 302, 392 and 396.

Where, in a trial of persons accused of having committed robbery, the Judge directed the jury that if they found that the persons taking part were not shown to be five in number, they could split the charge under S. 396 and treat it as a charge under S. 302 together with a charge under S. 392, i. e. treat it as a substantive charge of murder plus a substantive charge of robbery and the jury acting upon the direction convicted two of the accused of murder:

Held: that the convictions were liable to be set aside and the accused were to be retried upon a substantive charge under S. 302 and a substantive charge under S. 392. [P 295 C 1,2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 302 and 396—Charges under S. 302 is not minor to that under S. 396.

The charge under S. 302 is not a minor charge to the charge under S. 396. The charge under S. 396 is a charge under which a person who has not committed murder is liable to be held to commit murder, because he is a member of a gang of dacoits in the course of which somebody else committed murder. Rankin, C. J.—In this case we have before us a reference under S. 374, Cr. P. C., in respect of the accused man Madhusingh who has been sentenced to death. We have also an appeal on the part of Madhusingh and we have further an appeal on the part of Powali, the co-accused, who was also convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., but was sentenced to transportation for life. Both the accused were also convicted under S. 392, I. P. C., of robbery, but no separate sentence was passed by the learned Judge upon this charge. It appears that there were five accused persons and the prosecution case was that six persons had really been concerned in murdering a Marwari Shroff, Badrinarayan Agarwalla, and his servant Lin Lalung. The prosecution case was that Badri was going with his servant with certain rupees and small change to a Tea Estate called Kulikuehi and that, having crossed the Kapili river ferry and having come to a little streamlet called Sahoridang, Badrinarayan and his servant were fallen upon by the accused and were killed. They appear to have been cut to death with long handled instruments of the character of a dao. The prosecution case was that the accused persons had met on the day before the occurrence and at a time previous to that to arrange this murder for the purpose of robbery. The prosecution case also was that more than five persons were taking part in the transaction. In the end, there being very little evidence except the confession of Powali which was evidence against him, the jury came to a clear finding, first of all that the evidence of conspiracy on the previous occasions was insufficient and they acquitted all of the accused persons on the charge of conspiracy. In the second place they found that it was not made out that so many as five persons had taken part in the occurrence at all, the result being that S. 395, I. P. C., was entirely inapplicable to the case.

The learned Judge had told that, if the jury found that the persons taking part were not shown to be five in number, they could then split up the charge under S. 396 and treat it as a charge under S. 302 together with a charge under S. 392, I. P. C., that is to say, treat it as a substantive charge of murder plus a substantive charge of robbery; and the jury in bringing in their verdict against the two appellants before us have acted upon that direction. The result is that, although these persons have all been acquitted on the conspiracy charge and in addition to that were only indicted for what I may call constructive murder under S. 396, and although the conditions on which the applicability of that section depends have not been made out, these people have been convicted of murder without ever being properly charged. The matter is said to have been made better—although I think it has been made worse—by reason of the muddled form under which the charge under S. 396 was drafted in the Sessions Court. It appears to have been drafted by somebody who really ought to obtain some further instruction in drafting because he charged all the accused that they committed dacoity by robbing Lin Lalung and that, in the commission of such dacoity, Powali murdered Badrinarayan and Mudhusingh murdered Lin Lalung. Then it is said that in that way they all committed an offence under S. 396. As the charge contains the statement that Powali murdered Badrinarayan and Mudhusingh murdered Lin Lalung if it said that this charge may be regarded by us as though it contained within itself a charge under S. 302. If it did, presumably Powali was only charged with murdering Badrinarayan and presumably Madhusingh was charged with only murdering Lin Lalung. As a matter of fact, though the evidence is not consistent upon this matter, it would appear that the main bulk of the prosecution case was to show that Powali murdered the servant and Madhusingh murdered the master. We do not know what the jury thought about that matter. We do not know who murdered whom according to the view taken by the jury. The confession of Powali is an important matter to consider and this matter has not been dealt with in a way which can possibly be supported. It is quite clear that the charge under S. 302 is not a minor charge to the charge under S. 396. The charge under S. 396 is a charge under which a person who has not committed murder is liable to be held to commit murder because he is a member of a gang of dacoits in the course of which somebody else committed murder. That being so, the condition of this record is quite out of order and these two accused persons must be remanded for retrial.

The appeals must be allowed, the convictions and the sentences on these two accused must be set aside and their cases must be remanded for retrial. It is necessary to say that the case about the antecedent conspiracy under S. 120-B, I. P. C., should not be restarted against these people and the case is not to be restarted against them on the footing that there were five people taking part. The case is to be started against them upon a substantive charge under S. 302, and a substantive charge under S. 392, I. P. C.

Appeals Nos. 23, 24, 25 and 93 of 1931, Decided on 13th May 1932, from judgment of Buckland, J., in Suit No. 154 of 1929.

(a) Letters Patent (Calcutta), Cl. 12—Land partly within and partly without local limits —Each defendant need not be interested in land within jurisdiction.

If a suit brought in the High Court (original side) is properly framed, so as to embrace land partly within and partly without the local limits, it is in all cases a question of the discretion of the Court and if the Court exercises its discretion in favour of entertaining the suit, the jurisdiction cannot be questioned. It is not necessary that each defendant or set of defendants must be interested in some land within the jurisdiction: A I R 1920 Cal 131 and A I R 1922 Cal 500, Expt. and Dist.; 29 Cal 871, Rel on.

[P 300 C 1,2]

(b) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Family idol — Whether the endowment can be set aside by consent of all parties interested—Quære.

It is doubtful whether under Hindu law at any particular time by consent of all the parties then interested in the endowment, a dedication can be set aside even if the idol is a family idol (Quære): 2 Cal 341 (P C), Expt. A I R 1926 Cal 1083 and A I R 1925 Cal 442, Ref. [P 302 C 1]

(c) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Consent decree does not terminate debuttar character if such estate is not represented.

A consent decree obtained in a suit in which the debuttar estate is not represented does not terminate the debuttar character of the dedicated properties and the consent decree is not binding upon the debuttar estate. [P 302 C 2]

(d) Limitation Act (1908), S. 10 and Art. 144—Person not accepting shebaitship—His possession is not tainted with fiduciary relationship and is adverse to deity.

A man is not born responsible as a shebait and does not become a shebait against his will if he has never accepted the office of shebait, nor acted as a bailiff or a trustee of deity. He may be treated as an outsider and, for all purposes a stranger. His possession is not tainted in any way by a fiduciary relationship subsisting between him and the idol, and is adverse to the deity: A I R 1922 P C 123, Foll. [P 302 C 2]

(e) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Idol is not perpetual minor.

The doctrine that an idol is a perpetual minor is an extravagant doctrine as it is open to shebait or any person interested in an endowment to bring a suit to recover the idol's property for debuttar purposes : 37 Cal 885 (P C), Rel on.

[P 303 C 1]

(f) Limitation Act (as amended in 1929), S. 10 and Art. 144 — Shebait's possession cannot be adverse.

As regards an idol's property, a shebait stands in a fiduciary relationship to the idol and there can be no adverse possession by shebait.

[P 303 C 2; P 304 C 1]

(g) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144 and S. 28 — Joint shebait's dividing debuttar property between them — Rent and profits applied by them to their own purposes — Still idol's right is not extinguished.

The possession of two joint shebait's does not become adverse to the idol, even when they openly claim to divide the property between them. The fact of their possession is in accordance with the idol's title, and the change made by them, in the intention with which they hold, evidenced by an application of the rents and profits to their own purposes and other acts does not extinguish the idol's right, because such a change of intention can only be brought home to the idol by means of the shebait's knowledge and the idol can only react to it by the shebait. No doubt any descendant of the founder can bring a suit against the shebait on the idol's behalf but such persons have no legal duty to protect the endowment and, until the shebait is removed or controlled by the Court, he alone can act for the idol : A I R 1926 Mad 769, not foll.

(h) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Family idol.

While dealing with a family idol, there is no presumption that the settlor's ever intended that the family ceremonies, as the income increased, should become more and more expensive : 19 Cal 513 (P C), Rel on.

[P 306 C 2]

(i) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Shebait — Provision for residence is valid — But ultimate direction to build for heirs is for benefit of heirs.

A gift for the maintenance of a shebait or for the residence of a shebait would be a gift sub modo to the idol. A personal right may be given to members of the family to reside in the house provided for the thakur or provided for the shebait ; but an ultimate direction for the building of houses for the residence of the heirs is by no means on the same footing as a direction for the provision of a residence for the shebait.

(j) Hindu Law — Religious endowment — Construction — No absolute interest held created in favour of deity but only charge for worship and upkeep.

The directions in a deed of endowment as regards the income of the property were really four. The first was the provision for taxes and repairs ; the second for worship and the feeding of Brahmins ; the third provision was a direction to accumulate and build tenanted houses and the final provision was a provision for the erection of a house or houses for the convenience of residence and habitation of the heirs which was the ultimate destination of the net proceeds, subject to the expenses of the worship :

Heli : that there was a charge for the upkeep, worship and expenses of the idol and that the idol could not claim to have an absolute interest in any portion of the property which was governed by the provision that tenanted houses should be built on the land for the increase of the income of the trust.

S. M. Bose, S. N. Banerji and B. Roy Chaudhuri—for Appellant.

S. C. Mitter, Nripendra Nath Sircar and P. N. Banerjee—for Respondent.

Rankin, C. J. — We have before us three appeals Nos. 23, 24 and 25 of 1931, by different parties—defendant in a suit brought by a Hindu deity on 22nd January 1929, for the purpose of establishing title and obtaining possession of, (a) four properties alleged to have been dedicated to the deity on 5th May 1888, and (b) certain mofussil properties alleged to have been purchased on behalf of the plaintiff deity by a conveyance, dated 5th April 1896. The plaintiff's claim in respect of one of the four properties comprised in the deed of 1888, namely, the property known as 45, Elliot Road, was withdrawn at the trial and need not further concern us. The learned Judge, by his decree, dated 19th December 1930, has declared that the plaintiff is absolutely entitled to the other properties comprised in these two deeds free from all encumbrances. He has directed such of the defendants, as have been found by him to be in possession, to deliver up possession to the plaintiff and has given other forms of relief to the plaintiff as against mortgagee-defendants not in possession. He has directed, as against Brajanath De, that an account of mesne profits be taken. The other reliefs need not be mentioned here.

In Appeal No. 23, the appellant is Brajanath De, who, with his brother Rakhalechandra De, was a grantor of the deed of 5th May 1888, by which he was declared to be a shebait of the plaintiff deity. In Appeal No. 24, the appellant is Satyacharan De, the younger son of Rakhali. Satya appears to have been born in February, 1899. He is the son of Rakhali, by his second wife, whose name is Sreemati Thakamani Dasoo. Appeal No. 25 is brought by two sets of mortgagees, who may be called the Ray defendants and the Mandal defendants, and who claim under mortgages made in 1922 and 1924, respectively, by Pulin-bihari De, the elder son of Rakhai. Pulin's estate is before the Court, it is represented by Mohini and Jamini, but we have already pointed out that Mohini should sue as plaintiff on his own account as well as on behalf of the idol and this amendment has without objection been ordered by us. By the deed of 1888, the two brothers Rakhai and Braja dedicated to the idol properties, which now may be regarded as four: (i) 30, Beniapukur Road, (ii) 46, 47 and 48, Phullagan Road, (iii) 45, Elliot Road and (iv) 4, Royd Street.

Of these properties, though all are in the environs of Calcutta, only 4, Royd Street, is within the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court. The deed provides that, out of the income to be produced from the properties, a sufficient sum is to be set aside for repairs; then that the sheba is to be performed in a manner therein set forth; that Government securities are to be purchased out of the surplus income left after meeting these expenses and that, when a sufficient sum has in this way been accumulated the shebais are to cause tenanted houses to be built on the dedicated land and that, out of the increased surplus, buildings are to be erected for the residence and habitation of the heirs of the grantors. The deed states that the value of the properties granted as debuttar is Rs. 47,000.

In 1892, Rakhai and Braja entered into a document, which shows that, at that time, they had a business which had not been dedicated to the idol; and, in 1895, this document was cancelled by another, which shows that the brothers possessed properties at 34 and 35 Beniapukur Road, another property in Hooghly and a shop in Wellesley Street. On 5th April 1896, Rakhai and Braja, on the narrative that the purchase price of Rs. 2,461-11-0 had been saved by the idol out of the debuttar property, executed a Bengali conveyance, selling their mofussil property, excluding their dwelling house, to the idol for this sum. Prima facie, in 1896, the brothers were still acting on the basis of the deed of 1888. Rakhai died in 1901. Braja is still alive and is a defendant in this suit. By his will, dated 29th July 1901, Rakhai appointed Pulin his executor, his younger son Satya to become executor when he attained majority. He directed Pulin not to sell anything till Satya came of age. He directed that his wife Thakamani

"is to be maintained out of my estate and will have a right to reside in my house."

The reference to the house is apparently a reference to 30, Beniapukur Road, which had all along been used in fact as the family dwelling house, consistently with the deed of 1888, but which was one of the dedicated properties. In December 1902, Rakhai's widow, Thakamani, as the mother and next friend of Satya, who at that time was about four years of age, brought a Suit No. 852 of 1902—on the original side of this High Court—to set aside the deeds of 1888 and 1896, on the allegation that the dedication to the idol was, on the part of Rakhai and Braja, a mere colourable device, never intended to be valid or operative but intended merely to be used as a shield against creditors of the grantors "should occasion arise in that behalf although no such occasion has arisen." The defendants to this suit were first of all Braja and Pulin. They were described in the cause title as alleged shebais of the deities. The infant sons of Braja and Pulin were also impleaded as defendants. In this suit, Braja pleaded that Rakhai, his elder brother, had always represented to him that it had been the wish of their father that they should dedicate the properties and he denied that the dedication was a fraudulent device. Pulin, while making no admission as to the invalidity of the dedication, submitted to the Court that he had no objection to a partition being made of the property, if the Court thought it to be void or inoperative for any reason. The minor defendants pleaded that they had no knowledge of the matters and that they left their interests in the suit to the judgment, care and protection of the Court. Pulin, in 1903, had taken out probate of his father Rakhai's will and, in his affidavit of assets, had not set forth any of the dedicated properties. The hearing of the suit came on before Stephen, J., on 14th June 1904.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff, in opening the case, asked, according to the minute, that the deed of endowment be declared null and void, but that if it were found to be partially operative, a scheme may be framed for the purpose of worship and the remainder declared invalid. He objected to the legality of the provisions in the deed for the devolution of the office of shebait. While the plaintiff's counsel was still opening the case, the learned counsel for Braja said that he did not want to take a hostile attitude. He referred to the doctrine laid down in Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (1), and suggested that, as the idol was a family idol, by consent of all the parties, the dedication could be set aside. Pulin's counsel left the construction of the deed in the hands of the Court. Counsel for the infant-defendants suggested that there was a sufficient dedication to the idol. Pulin's counsel supported the suggestion, which had been made on behalf of Braja, that a private dedication could be annulled by the consensus of the whole family. The hearing having been adjourned, the case was called on six days later, namely, on 20th June. Braja's counsel suggested that the debattar should be put an end to and that this would be to the benefit of the infants. Counsel for the infant-defendants suggested that a small portion should remain debuttar for carrying on the sheba, but this proposal received little support and was dropped. In the end, the Court made a consent decree in the nature of a preliminary decree for partition, directing the property to be divided into moieties, one to go to Braja and the other to belong to Pulin and Satya jointly, with liberty to Satya to claim a further partition to separate his one-fourth share from Pulin's. Braja was appointed receiver. The Court certified that this was for the benefit of the infant sons. The decree is expressed to be a decree by consent of the adult parties by their respective counsel. It set aside the deeds of 1888 and 1896 and directed them to be cancelled by the Registrar of this Court and a copy of the decree to be sent to the Registrar of Deeds and Assurances.

Under this decree, Braja collected rents from the tenanted property comprised in the endowment, giving receipts as receiver on behalf of himself, Pulin and Satya, on the footing that the shares of each were 8, 4 and 4-annas, respectively. Receipts dated 1311, 1312 and 1313 have been produced in evidence.

On 12th June 1906, a final decree for partition was made by Stephen, J. The parties had really come to terms as to the properties to be allotted to each and the decree allotted the properties to be in accordance with that agreement, gave judgment for Rs. 5,000 owelty money in favour of Braja against Pulin and Satya, and directed the parties to execute the necessary conveyances. So far as Braja is concerned, there can be no doubt that he has at all times acted quite consistently under this decree. On 2nd September 1907, he sold 45, Elliot Road, which had been allotted to him to one K. K. Mitter. This property is now not in suit.

Satya, at the time of the decree (1906), was about eight years of age, and the properties which had been allotted jointly to Pulin and him were taken charge of by Pulin. Thakamani, Satya and Pulin went on living together at No. 30, Beniapukur Road, and it is clear, upon the evidence that Pulin collected rents of the properties allotted jointly to himself and his brother and as executor of Rakhal's will from other income-producing properties. Out of moneys coming into his hands from one source or the other, he paid the expenses of the joint family, i. e., he maintained Satya and his mother together with himself. Between 1906 and 1910, No. 30, Beniapukur Road was on the Assessment Register in the name of Pulin for self and Satya; Nos. 47 and 48, Phulbagar Road appear to have been put into the name of Pulin Mohini, the eldest son of Pulin, who brings this suit on behalf of the idol, states that his father was dealing with these properties as his own secular properties (Q. 9) and that he has come to know that, after the decree for partition, the properties were divided (Q. 56). There seems indeed to be no reason to doubt that, as Mohini says, since the partition, the names were changed into the names of Braja, Pulin and Satya and that the rents have been collected and appropriated in accordance with the decree, Pulin and Satya together possessing their shares of the dedicated properties for many years. The case, as made by the plaintiff, is that none of the properties claimed are in the possession of the deity.

When we come to the year 1917, we find that Satya is coming of age. In 1918, he gets a grant of probate to his father's will jointly with Pulin. It is evident that, at this time, he is not satisfied with merely living at No. 30, Beniapukur Road, and being maintained by Pulin; and, on 20th August 1918, he sued Pulin at Alipore for partition. In this plaint (para. 5), he treats the properties partitioned by the decree of 1902 as joint properties of Rakhal and Braja. He says that his father, Rakhal, had some self-acquired properties as well and that Pulin has been managing all these since his father's death. He says that, till the end of the Bengali year 1324 (i. e., April 1918), Pulin had paid to him and his mother only the costs of maintenance and had kept all the balance of income in his own hands. He charges Pulin with having appropriated to his own use assets of a money-lending business belonging to his father's estate. He makes other charges against Pulin, says that the whole of his father's estate has been administered and asks for partition and accounts. He includes among the immovable properties of his father, Nos. 34 and 35, Beniapukur Road, which had never been dedicated at all, as well as No. 30, Beniapukur Road, and Nos. 46, 47 and 48, Phulbagan Road, which had been dedicated. By his written statement in this suit, verified in December 1918, Pulin set up the deed of 1888 and claimed that the decree of 1906 was fraudulently obtained and that the properties had not lost their debuttar character. He alleged that, since the death of his father, he, Satya and Thakamani had lived together in the same mess and the rent of the ejmali tenanted houses and lands had been jointly realised and spent to meet the expenses of the ejmali family.

In this connexion, he makes allegations intended to parry the claim for accounts. A receiver was appointed in the suit and, on 16th June 1921, a preliminary decree for partition and accounts was made by the Subordinate Judge. From this decree, Pulin appealed to the High Court. He asked to be allowed to adduce in evidence a document which he said showed that the decree of 1904 was the result of a collusive arrangement between himself and his uncle Braja. The High Court, however on 30th March 1922, dismissed his appeal and refused to allow to go behind the consent decree of 5th June 1906, to which he was a party and, upon which he had for a long time acted. On 5th September 1922, Pulin executed a mortgage to the Ray defendants, in respect of which they are now impleaded. The mortgage was for Rs. 28,000 and the mortgaged properties were Nos. 46 and 47, Phulbagan Road. He recited the deed of 1888 and the decrees of 1904 and 1906. On 12th March 1924, he granted a further mortgage for Rs. 25,000 to the Mandal defendants, mortgaging No. 30, Beniapukur Road and Nos. 46, 47 and 48, Phulbagan Road, as also Nos. 34 and 35, Beniapukur Road to them, and reciting the Ray's mortgage.

In December 1924, Pulin died intestate, leaving his sons Mohini and Jamini as his heirs and, in 1926, the Ray mortgagees filed a mortgage suit at Alipore against his sons and the Mandal defendants as interested in the equity of redemption. In April 1927, Mohini filed a written statement, in which, among many other defences, he set up a claim that the mortgaged property is debuttar. As he did not appear at the hearing of the suit, a preliminary mortgage decree was made ex parte on 17th February 1928, followed by a final decree on 28th July of that year. Mohini, having failed in his application to set aside the ex parte decree, brought this suit on 22nd January 1929, on behalf of the deity. It is quite obvious that Mohini's father, Pulin, having lost everything and run through the whole of his property is the fact which accounts for his son's effort to set up the property as debuttar. The right of the idol however is a different thing from the merits of Mohini.

Logically, issue I which claims attention is the contention on behalf of the mortgagee-defendants that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit as against them, on the ground that no one of the properties mortgaged to them by Pulin is within the limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court. The only one of all the debuttar properties, which lies within that jurisdiction, is the property, No. 4, Royd Street, which on the partition of 1906, went to Braja. The Beniapukur Road and Phulbagan Road properties were outside that jurisdiction. The learned Judge has restrained the mortgagee-defendants from putting up their mortgaged properties to sale and has declared the title to be with the idol. The question of jurisdiction must be answered by reading Cl. 12, Letters Patent of 1865. The suit, in my judgment, is a suit for land within the meaning of Cl. 12, which says that this Court shall have jurisdiction to entertain a suit if the land is situated either wholly or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part within the local limits of its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction. In the present case leave was granted under Cl. 12. The contention of the mortgagee defendants is that O. 1, R. 3, Civil P. C., proceeds on the assumption that the Court has jurisdiction and that the provisions of that order cannot be used to extend the jurisdiction given by the Letters Patent. They rely upon Bengal and North Western Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Sadaram Bhairodan (2). That was a case not of a suit for land, but one, where various causes of action having been brought against various defendants, it appeared that the whole of the cause of action against one defendant had arisen entirely outside the limits of the jurisdiction. In such a case, O. 1, R. 3 which merely has the effect of allowing parties or causes of action to be joined if the Court has jurisdiction to deal with them, was held to be an insufficient foundation upon which to introduce a cause of action which was not within Cl. 12 at all.

It seems to me however that under Cl. 12, the case of suits for land requires separate consideration. It contemplates a suit being brought for land and such land being situated partly within and partly without the jurisdiction. The cause of action does not matter in such a case, except in so far as it affects the property of the joinder of the claim to the different parcels of land in the same suit. Two different suits cannot certainly be rolled into one for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction over land outside the limits. If however the claim to the different parcels of land is properly based upon a common title and the right to relief arises out of the same set of facts, I do not think it can be laid down that each defendant or set of defendants must be interested in some land within the jurisdiction. It is to be observed that the question whether, in any particular case, the jurisdiction is to be exercised is left to the discretion of the Court. In Krishna Kishore De v. Amarnath Kshetry (3), the mortgagee of certain land outside the local limits sub-mortgaged his interest, at the same time granting a mortgage over property within the limits as security for the same debt. The sub-mortgagee—so to call him—brought a suit on the Original Side against the original mortgagor and the mortgagee. It was held that leave under Cl. 12 had been improperly granted and that the decrees were without jurisdiction. It was held that the proper course would have been to bring a suit in the High Court to enforce the mortgage over the Calcutta property and to foreclose the sub-mortgagee's interest in the other mortgage, but that the mofussil properties could only have been sold in a suit brought in the mofussil Court. This decision proceeded partly upon considerations as to "cause of action" and partly upon the view that the original mortgage contemplated a suit in the mofussil Court. Now, jurisdiction under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent cannot depend upon the question whether the leave has been properly granted as a matter of discretion.

It must depend upon the question whether the suit is of the class described by the clause as the class with reference to which the discretion is given. Cl. 12 must be applied, in my judgment, on the footing that the land which the plaintiff can properly claim in one suit is to be determined first of all by certain principles or rules of law. I do not think the test can be whether the plaintiff, in order to succeed as regards land within the limits, is obliged to join parties interested in other land; especially if this means whether he could have dispensed with their presence by framing his suit in some other way, and bringing a multiplicity of suits. If a suit is properly framed, so as to embrace land partly within and partly without the local limits, it is in all cases a question of the discretion of the Court and if the Court exercises its discretion in favour of entertaining the suit, the jurisdiction cannot be questioned. I see no other way to make Cl. 12 work. It may or may not be hard upon a person who has taken a mortgage of land at Alipore that he should be impleaded in Calcutta. I think it would be harder still if important questions of title had to be litigated separately as between different parties, to the great increase of litigation and at the risk of partial and inconsistent decisions. The passage, which the learned Judge has quoted from the case of Nundo Kumar Nasker v. Banomali Gayan (4), affords some support to the construction which I have put upon Cl. 12. The clause must, in any event be considered with reference to the particular case made by the plaintiff. Here the plaintiff's case was that Braja and Pulin jointly held the shobaiti, that the decrees of 1904 and 1906 were collusive and void otherwise. The idol, on that case, could not sensibly have sued Braja to recover the Royd Street property without bringing Pulin's representatives before the Court, and without so doing it would have asked in vain for any equitable relief against Braja such it claimed. Pulin's mortgagees have taken title, with their eyes open, under the decree of 1906, and if his estate must be impleaded they must be joined. It may here be noted that if the dedication of the mortgaged lands be held to be not an absolute debuttar but a charge for the worship of the idol extending over the mortgaged lands and the Royd Street property together with other lands, it would be necessary in a suit to declare and enforce the charge that all the lands affected should be dealt with in one and the same suit. The objection as to jurisdiction should, in my opinion, be dismissed.

The next issue for decision is whether the dedication of 1888 was valid and effective. This issue was formulated at the trial, but that it was not pressed is clear. The learned Judge says:

"it has not been argued that there was no valid dedication or that the idol was not effectively endowed with the properties in suit by the deed of 1888."

In this Court, an endeavour was however, made to raise the question. The mortgagee-defendants, by their written statement, pleaded that the deeds of 1888 and 1896 were never given effect to and were never meant to be operative, but were merely colourable and benami. On that issue, the burden of proof lies heavy upon them and the question is one of fact. It appears that the deposition of Thakamani Dasoe had been taken on commission at great length at the instance of the mortgagees and Mr. A. K. Roy, who appeared for the mortgagees, in opening his case, said:

"Then there was some evidence taken on commission. Having regard to the view I am going to take of this case and the way I am going to put it before Your Lordship I don't think I shall have to refer very much to this evidence if at all. I may be wrong, but I am proposing to take a certain course which will not necessitate my reading this evidence before you, but as the evidence has been taken I don't know whether I shall be right in not reading it altogether. I simply tender it and leave it there. I will perhaps refer Your Lordship to passages in it that I may want. It is part of the record."

In fact, as we are informed, a passage from the deposition, bearing upon the question of the consensus of the whole family to abrogate the debuttar in 1904, was read to the learned Judge, but no part of this evidence was read to him, having any bearing upon the question whether the deeds were fraudulent or colourable. Thakamani Dasoe is a witness, who, in 1902, alleged, on behalf of Satya, as we have seen, that the deed was a shield against possible creditors, though no occasion to use it had arisen. That is a singularly feeble case and her evidence is small support for it. She is a biased witness, a witness whom we have not seen and having made this case in the suit of 1902, she called no evidence whatever in support of it. If, moreover, this matter had been pressed before the learned Judge, it was a matter upon which the plaintiff would, in my opinion, have been entitled, if necessary, to give rebutting evidence. It is idle to ask us now to allow this question of fact to be agitated in the Court of the appeal. I have no doubt, the main reason why this point was abandoned was that the evidence in support of it was thought to be hopelessly insufficient. Any question which can be raised on the face of the deed of 1888, however is in a different position. If it can be contended, as a matter of construction, that the document does not vest the properties in the idol, but merely charges them with a sufficient sum for the maintenance of the worship, this contention can be considered here. As I am not of opinion that this contention can be upheld as to all the properties, it will be convenient, for the present, to proceed on the hypothesis that the properties were absolutely dedicated and to examine this hypothesis later.

On this assumption, the next issue is whether or not it has been shown either that the debuttar character of the properties was validly terminated in 1904 or that the plaintiff deity is bound by the decrees made in the suit of 1902. It seems to me that it is one thing to bring a suit against a Hindu God for a declaration that the members of the family have terminated the endowment and, upon proper proof of this, to obtain a declaration to that effect, and another thing altogether to take a consent decree setting aside the deed of endowment in a suit constituted as the suit of 1902 was constituted. I am not prepared to hold on the strength of the well-known passage in the case of Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (1), that there is in Hindu law any warrant for the proposition that at any particular time by consent of all the parties then interested in the endowment, a dedication can be set aside. The passage, so much relied upon, does not appear to me to be intended as a considered opinion to that effect, and before importing any such doctrine into Hindu law there is much to be considered. I respectfully adopt what Chatterjee, J., said upon this subject in Chandi Charan Das v. Dulal Chandra Paik (5), and I would also here refer to the observations of Chakravarti, J., in Sreepati Chatterjee v. Khudi Ram Banerjee (6).

I am, moreover, not satisfied, upon the evidence of Thakamani, coupled with the fact that no female member of the family did bring a suit to challenge the decree of 1904, that the consent of the female members of this family to put a complete end to this debuttar was, at any time, thought of or asked for or obtained. Pulin and Braja were described by the "plaintiff as "alleged shobait" in the cause title of the suit. Nothing in the way of proof of a proper legal termination of the debuttar was adduced before the Court and the Court came to no findings either of fact or of law. It acted on the consent of the adult defendants and, as the determination of the debuttar was of advantage to the patrimonial interests of the minor defendants, the Court allowed them to consent to the decree. Such a consent decree has no greater operation and is subject to all the infirmities of a bargain made between the parties. In my judgment the question whether the debuttar character of the properties was validly terminated in 1904 must be answered in the negative. Notwithstanding that the proceedings in the suit of 1902 were in no way fraudulent, the decrees of 1904 and 1906 are not binding upon the debuttar estate.

Proceeding still upon the assumption that the properties were absolute debuttar, the next question in my opinion is the question of limitation. Satya's father having died in 1901, when he was two years old, his mother in the following year repudiated, on his behalf the validity of the endowment. Under the decree of 1904, a moiety of the dedicated property was declared to belong jointly to Satya and Pulin. Satya though an infant of five or six years, was thereafter in possession according to his share. From 1906 the possession of Pulin was the possession of Satya and vice versa. Between 1904 and 1906 the properties were in possession of a receiver on behalf of Braja, Pulin and Satya according to their shares. In my judgment no question arises as to Satya being a shobait of the deity on the death of his father. A man is not born responsible as a shobait and does not become a shobait against his will: he had never accepted the office of shobait, nor acted as a bailiff, still less as a trustee of the deity. He may be treated as an outsider and, for all purposes a stranger. I am not prepared to hold with the learned Judge that because the moiety allotted to Pulin and Satya was not in 1906 divided between them by moles and bounds, Satya has not had adverse possession against the idol within the meaning of Art. 144 of the schedule to Limitation Act. If Satya had not been in actual enjoyment of his share at all, still the possession of Pulin would have been the possession of Satya. But Satya was as much in possession as his brother and his possession according to his share is not tainted in any way by a fiduciary relationship subsisting between him and the idol. As the Limitation Act stood, 12 years after 1904, S. 10 of the Act did not apply: see Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (7).

The doctrine that an idol is a perpetual minor is, in my judgment an extravagant doctrine contrary to the decision of the Judicial Committee in such cases as Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (8). It is open to shobait or any person interested in an endowment to bring a suit to recover the idol's property for debuttar purposes. While strong facts may be necessary in order to establish adverse possession, in any case in which there is a reasonable possibility that the possession is being held under the idol's title, the facts of the present case are clear and plain; so far as any member of this family was concerned, the utmost publicity and the utmost solemnity attached to the change, by which Braja took the Elliot Road and Royd Street properties, and Rakhal's branch took the other properties. Had Rakhal's branch by the same decree taken a partition between themselves, the matter might have been slightly plainer, which was plain enough already. Satya was not acting fraudulently in collusion with Pulin. I attach no importance, either in fact or in law, to the circumstance that the possession enjoyed by Satya was enjoyed in the ordinary manner in which family property is enjoyed in Bengal by a member of a Hindu family. The learned counsel for the plaintiff has complained of the paucity of evidence as to Satya's possession of the debuttar properties for the 12 years after 1901. This cannot be meant to apply to the property at 30, Beniapukur Road, but in any case it is entirely explained by the fact that the plaintiff, both by his case and by his evidence, admitted the possession of Pulin and his younger brother from the beginning.

It is not in the least necessary to inquire how much pocket-money Pulin allowed to Satya out of the estate or what was spent upon his maintenance while Rakhal's branch all lived together at 30, Beniapukur Road. Nor is it necessary to pursue any inquiry as to how much of the money spent on the ejmali establishment could have been derived from other properties left by Rakhal. I will consider in a moment whether Braja and Pulin, having accepted the office of shebait, can be heard to set up adverse possession against the deity within the meaning of Art. 144. Assuming that Pulin cannot, I hold that Satya can and that no fiduciary relationship of Pulin to the deity prevents Satya alleging as the fact was, that to the extent of his share he had adverse possession. We have seen that after Satya came of age in 1917 and quarrelled with Pulin, so far as to bring a suit against him for partition of his share, Pulin by his written statement, set up the debuttar character of the properties with which we are concerned. Save as a defence to his brother's claim, I am satisfied that Pulin, at no time made any pretence that the properties on which his branch of the family were living were debuttar. As an obstruction to Satya's right to partition, a contention of debuttar was thought to suit his interest. When he failed to prevent his brother from getting a decree, he mortgaged these very properties in 1922 and 1924 for large sums of money. In my judgment, it is proved that, from 1904 and even from 1906, Satya had adverse possession of his share openly, continuously and completely. Assuming therefore that all the properties in suit were absolutely dedicated, the suit as against Satya fails.

The mortgagees, if the property mortgaged to them was dedicated absolutely, cannot defeat this suit, by reason of the lapse of time, since the date of their mortgages of 1922 and 1924. On this point, their defence must be that their mortgagor's possession extinguished the title of the idol. They may say that Art. 142 applies to the plaintiff's suit, but, if the suit as against them is treated as a suit for possession, the idol is in a position to answer that twelve years before this suit, say 1916, it was in possession by its shebait Pulin. If, by that time, Pulin's wrongful dealings had not extinguished the idol's right, they amount to no more than a cloud upon its title. Both Braja and Pulin were shebaites who had accepted office; neither of them was a trustee in the sense that the debuttar property was vested in him. But they were managers or bailiffs for the idol as regards its properties. The office of shebait has other aspects, but that, as regards an idol's property, he stands in fiduciary relationship to the idol, is a proposition which cannot be questioned. Assuming that S. 10, Lim. Act, as it stood before 1929, did not apply to them, we have to consider whether, prior to that year, the idol had lost all right to recover the properties, with the result that S. 28 of the Act came into play and extinguished its title. Unless they can be heard to allege and unless they can prove that their possession has been adverse to the idol within the meaning of Art. 144, their possession is the possession of the idol however flagrant be the breaches of fiduciary duty committed by them. Twelve years from 1904 is 1916; twelve years before this suit of January 1929 is January 1917. As the position has not altered, in the meantime let us look at 1917 and the reasoning will apply both to the shebait and the mortgagees. If the idol had brought its suit in 1917 what, according to the substance and truth of the facts alleged in the present plaint and proved in the present case, would have been the nature of its claim?

"The property is mine : it is in the hands of my bailiffs : they are dealing with it wrongfully : restrain their wrongful acts or direct them to hand it over to another agent on my behalf."

Such a claim is on the basis of the plaintiff's present possession by the hand of the defendants and, in my judgment, that is the real character of the claim as against Pulin's estate and Braja in the present suit. Verbal criticism of para. 16 of the present plaint cannot alter the legal character of the case made, on the facts alleged by the plaint and established by the evidence. The real question therefore is whether the shebait as against the idol could have said in 1917:

"The idol is not in possession by us because for twelve years we have claimed the properties for ourselves."

That is Art. 144 or nothing. Before the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (7) it appears to have been generally assumed that S. 10, Lim. Act, would have rendered impossible such a contention on the part of a shebait. That decision, not less by its reasoning than by its authority, made it impossible to hold that a shebait is a person in whom the debuttar property is vested in trust for a specific purpose. The Limitation Act was, in consequence, amended by Act 1 of 1929, so as to bring shebait within the section, but the case before us must be dealt with apart from this amendment. If a shebait can set up Art. 144 against the idol, no case could well be stronger, on the facts, than the present case, where the parties honestly thought themselves entitled to bring the endowment to an end and satisfied a Judge that they had done all that was necessary for that purpose. I am not prepared to hold, as a matter of construction of the Limitation Act, that an idol is a perpetual minor as was suggested in Ramu Reddy v. Ranganadasan (9), that a bailiff or manager is in the same position as a tenant mortgagee or pawnee who have a possession on their own account, or that a bailiff, whose open claim to be in possession in his own rights is acquiesced in by his principal for twelve years, cannot come under Art. 144. But, in the present case, we have to see whether, the possession of two joint shebait becomes adverse to the idol, when they openly claim to divide the property between them.

The fact of their possession is in accordance with the idol's title, and the question is, whether the change made by them, in the intention with which they hold, evidenced by an application of the rents and profits to their own purposes and other acts, extinguishes the idol's right. I am quite unable to hold that it does, because such a change of intention can only be brought home to the idol by means of the shebait's knowledge and the idol can only react to it by the shebait. Adverse possession, in such circumstances, is a notion almost void of content. True, any heir or perhaps any descendant of the founder can bring a suit against the shebait on the idol's behalf and, in the present case, it may be said that the acts of the shebait must have been notorious in the family. But such persons have no legal duty to protect the endowment and, until the shebait is removed or controlled by the Court, he alone can act for the idol.

In Seetaramaraju v. Subbaraju (10) the question was discussed whether possession could be adverse against a lunatic and the opinion was expressed that, under the Limitation Act, this would depend upon whether any fiduciary relation subsisted between the parties. I do not find it necessary to examine the particular provisions of the Act as to lunatics and minors, and I am not suggesting that there can be no adverse possession against an idol. It is sufficient to hold that there could be no adverse possession by the shebait.

9. A I R 1926 Mad 769=49 Mad 513.
10. A I R 1922 Mad 12=15 Mad 361,

These findings dispose of the present case upon the assumption unchallenged in the trial Court that the true effect of the deed of 1888 was to grant the property absolutely to the Thakur so as to make it absolutely debuttar. This question of construction was not in the pleadings separated out from the question whether the deed could be shown by extrinsic evidence to represent no more than a colourable pretence of dedication not intended to be acted on. The written statement of Braja in para. 2, however "submits that no valid dedication was effected by the said two documents nor was any charge created in favour of the idol or anybody else."

In para. 2 of Satya's written statement he "denies that there was any dedication absolute or otherwise in favour of the said deity."

Issue 1 framed is:

"Was there a valid dedication effected by the instrument of 5th May 1888 and the deed of sale of 6th April 1896?"

In this Court, the learned counsel for the appellants raised the contention that the true effect of the deed of 1888 is to provide that, after the expense of religious worship and ceremony has been met, the surplus income is to be invested in tenanted houses for the production of still greater revenue and that the sole purpose mentioned as the ultimate destination of the fund is the building of a house or houses in which the settlers' descendants or some of them may reside and that, this not being a religious or charitable purpose at all, the deed cannot be construed as an absolute dedication of the property. We have been referred to the cases of Sonatum Bysack v. Juggutsundree Dossee (11), Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (12) and Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari (13) as authorities for the proposition that, in view of the ultimate destination of the income, the passages in the deed, which describe the properties in the schedule as being properties granted to the auspicious lotus feet of the deity and which forbid the shebait to sell or mortgage the properties or let them out at a permanently fixed rent, do not avail in law to carry the properties to the deity in absolute right.

The deed of 1888 opens by describing how Lalchand and Kalachand established the deity in their life-time, how they prospered, how they bought land on Royd Street and in Entally, how "with the income of all the said lands and with the money earned by them" they used to cause daily and special shebas to be performed, Brahmins and poor persons to be fed and festivals to be observed. It then recites that Lalchand died, that Kalachand purchased land on Elliot Road, that he continued the sheba and festivals as before, that he intended to build a house on the land in Entally for the location of the Thakuranis and for the residence of the shebait and to make the house and the lands specified in the schedule debuttar but that he died before carrying out his intention, that after his death, Rakhal, "with the income of all the said lands," caused the sheba to be performed and people to be fed as before that when Braja had attained majority the two brothers had been carrying on the sheba, etc., as before. The deed then recites that Rakhal and Braja had built a house for the location of the Thakurs and the residence of the shebait on the Entally land and states that for the continuance in perpetuity of the shebas and the feeding of Brahmins, etc., in perpetuity, they grant the properties in the schedule to the auspicious lotus feet of the Thakuranis as debuttar. They make provision for the shebaiti right to go to their male heirs by primogeniture; they provide that the shebait should keep accounts and that other heirs shall be competent to inspect the accounts. There is a provision for the removal from office of a shebait acting improperly, and a provision to exclude females from the shebaiti. There is a provision in certain circumstances for shebait to be appointed by deed. It is provided that the shebait are to employ two durwans and a mali and other servants for the purposes of the sheba and a Tehsildar for keeping accounts, collecting rents, etc., as well as a pujari to perform the worship. Then come the passages, upon which the present question must turn. Out of the income is first of all to be reserved sufficient money for taxes and repairs to the thakurbarhi and the existing house at Entally then, out of the said income the shebaita are to cause the daily and other worship to be performed and "at an outlay of reasonable expense" shall entertain Brahmins, feed the poor. The deed proceeds:

"The shebaita shall purchase Government securities, that is company's papers, with the surplus annually left after meeting the prescribed expenses."

It provides that, when a large amount of money gradually accumulates in this manner, they shall cause tenanted houses to be built on the lands specified in the schedule and take measures for improvement and increase of the income of the debuttar properties. So far therefore the deed contemplates that there shall be a surplus and that this surplus shall be invested so as to increase.

In the next passage in the deed the shebaita are given a right to reside in the house in which the deities are located and as far as practicable other heirs may reside in the house. Then comes the only clause which operates to give an ultimate destination to the accumulating funds: The shebaita are directed "to build with the said money additional masonry buildings on the debuttar lands and give them for the convenience of residence and habitation of our heirs. If, in the course of time, the number of heirs becomes large, the nearer heirs shall reside in these houses so far as practicable."

The remaining passages in the deed are important in so far as they disclose that the tenants on the scheduled lands are mere tenants-at-will, which means that, so far as occupied, the property was bustee property. It states that the value of the properties granted as debuttar is Rs. 47,000. When we look at the schedule, items 2 and 3 are the Elliot Road and Royd Street properties, the former being over 4 bighas in area and the latter 5 kottas. The first item is the Entally land, having an area in excess of 6 bighas, within which the thakurbarhi stands on 14 kottas of land and the tenanted house on about 1 kotta of land, the remaining lands being let to temporary tenants, that is, being bustee property. This land is bounded on the north by Phulbagan Road and on the west by Beniapukur Road. By 1906, as we see from the final decree of that year, portions of this property had come to be known as 30, Beniapukur Road, and 46, 47 and 48, Phulbagan Road, which, as we have seen, went to Rakhal's branch, that is to Pulin and Satya, at the partition. The mortgage of the Rays covers 46 and 47, Phulbagan Road, and the mortgage of the Mandals covers, in addition, 30, Beniapukur Road, 48, Phulbagan Road, and 34 and 35, Beniapukur Road.

Now, on the construction of the deed of 1888, I cannot doubt that the thakurbarhi and the house built for residence of the shebaita on what is now 30, Beniapukur Road, are absolutely dedicated to the idol. And if the deed can in law be given that effect the same result would, prima facie, follow as regards the rest of the lands mentioned in the schedule. Upon the authorities however I am of opinion that this effect cannot be given to the deed as regards the other properties. The directions as regards the income of the property are really four. The first is the provision for taxes and repairs; the second is the provision for worship and the feeding of Brahmins, etc., within which may be grouped the provision for the durwans, mali, pujari and tahsildar and the whole may be referred to generally as the provisions for the sheba; the third provision is a direction to accumulate and build tenanted houses. This is in the nature of an investment clause. The final provision is a provision for the erection of a house or houses for the convenience of residence and habitation of the heirs. This appears to me to be the ultimate destination of the next proceeds, subject to the expenses of the worship. I cannot regard the directions as to worship, the feeding of Brahmins, etc., as an expanding trust. With reference to the feeding of Brahmins and others, the direction is that this is to be "at an outlay of reasonable expense," and earlier passages in the deed show that the intention was to continue the family ceremonies as they had been performed from the time of Lalchand and Kalachand. We are dealing with a family idol and there is no presumption that the settlers ever intended that the family ceremonies, as the income increased, should become more and more expensive. What was said by Lord Hobhouse in Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasoodery Dossee (14) is applicable here:

"There is no indication that the testator intended any extension of the worship of the family thakurs. He does not, as is sometime done, admit others to the benefit of the worship. He does not direct any additional ceremonies. He shows no intention save that which may be reasonably attributed to a devout Hindu gentleman, viz., to secure that his family worship shall be conducted in the accustomed way, by giving his property to one of the thakurs whom he venerates most. But the effect of that when the estate is large is to leave some beneficial interest undisposed of, and that interest must be subject to the legal incidents of property."

It is true that, in this case, the deed does not contain a schedule setting forth in detail the expenses to be incurred for the worship. It is also true that, if we confine ourselves to what can be collected from the deed itself, we know that the value of the properties is put down, doubtless for purposes of stamp, as Rs. 47,000, which would include the value of the thakurbarhi and shebait's house. But we know that the property was in Calcutta or in its immediate vicinity, that parts of it were bustee land and that, as a means of increasing the income, it was contemplated that the land should be built upon and houses let out at a rent. I think it is clear, according to the tenor of the deed, that the income was expected from the first to be more than sufficient for the worship, and that it was intended, as time went on that it would prove much more than sufficient. I think therefore that the observation of Lord Hobhouse is in point. The ultimate direction for the building of houses for the residence of the heirs is by no means on the same footing as a direction for the provision of a residence for the shebait.

From the case of Jadu Nath Singh v. Thakur Sita Ramji (15), it is clear that a gift for the maintenance of a shebait or for the residence of a shebait would be a gift sub modo to the idol. In my judgment, this is not a gift sub modo to the idol. It is quite clear that a personal right may be given to members of the family to reside in the house provided for the thakur or provided for the shebait: Bhuggobutty Prosonno Sen v.

14. (1891) 19 Cal 513=19 I A 108 (P O).
15. A I R 1917 P O 177=42 I O 225=44 I A 187=20 O O 200=39 All 553 (P O).

Gooroo Prosonno Sen (16). This provision is of a different character. It may be good or bad, but it is as much a gift for the benefit of some or all of the heirs as if the settlors had directed the ultimate balance to be distributed among them or invested for their benefit. We must apply the principles expressed in the judgment of Lord Shaw in the case of Har Narayan v. Surja Kunwari (13):

"The question whether the idol itself shall be considered the true beneficiary, subject to a charge in favour of the heirs or specified relatives of the testator for their upkeep, or that, on the other hand, these heirs shall be considered the true beneficiaries to the property, subject to a charge for the upkeep and expenses of the idol, is a question which can only be settled by a conspectus of the entire provisions of the will."

It appears to me that the only construction which it is possible, in law, to put upon the deed of 1888, notwithstanding the language of certain passages therein, is that there is a charge for the upkeep, worship and expenses of the idol and that the idol cannot claim to have an absolute interest in any portion of the property which is governed by the provision that tenanted houses should be built on the land for the increase of the income of the trust. It is, I think, otherwise with the thakurbarhi and the shebait's house on 30, Beniapur Road. Since 1904, Satya, for reasons already given, acquired a one-half share in the thakurbarhi and shebait's house by adverse possession against the idol. It will not do to say that because the image has been located in the house, as an image may be located in the dwelling house of any Hindu, the idol has been in possession of this property. Neither Pulin's estate nor Pulin's mortgagees, however have any answer to this suit as regards the other half share. The property conveyed by the deed of 1696, is, I think, in the same position as the other properties under the deed of 1888. Apart from the plaintiff's claim to a half share of the thakurbarhi and the shebait's house at 30, Beniapur Road, it seems to me that the idol is entitled to a declaration that the properties in suit are subject to a charge for the worship and ceremonies described in the deed of 1888. As I think it is only right to allow the question of the construction of the deed to be raised on this appeal, notwithstanding defective pleading by the defendants and the fact that they did not take their point before the learned Judge, I cannot refuse to the plaintiff relief in this suit in respect of the charge. I think therefore that the charge should be declared and that it should be referred to the Registrar, or such officer as he may appoint, to enquire what would be a sufficient annual sum to meet the expenses of the worship and ceremonies. I think it should also be referred to him to enquire whether since 12 years before this suit the worship of the idol and the ceremonies have in fact been duly and properly observed and provided for and, if not, to what extent the expenditure has been insufficient to answer the requirements of the deed. I do not propose, for the present to do anything further by way of enforcement of the charge, but there will be liberty to all parties to apply.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the learned Judge must be set aside. In lieu thereof there will be a new decree to the following effect: (1) declaring that in the thakurbarhi and shebait's house at 39, Beniapur Road, the plaintiff is absolutely entitled to one-half share by virtue of the deed of 1888, the other half share belonging to Satya; (2) declaring that, in respect of the other properties in the plaint in this suit mentioned, other than No. 45, Elliot Road, the plaintiff is entitled to a charge for the upkeep, worship and expenses of the idol and ceremonies connected therewith under the deed of 1888; (3) directing the enquiries hereinbefore mentioned. There must be an order for joint possession of the thakurbarhi and house to be delivered to the shebait of the plaintiff idol in respect of its one-half share. The Mandal defendants should be restrained from entering upon or putting up to sale or otherwise dealing with the thakurbarhi and house. All the mortgagee defendants should be restrained from selling or otherwise dealing with any of the other properties mortgaged to them otherwise than subject to the charge in favour of the idol and after giving notice thereof. As to costs in the circumstances though Satya is hit by the declaration of charge, he appears to me to have had a good answer to the suit as framed and I think he should have his costs against Mohinimohon Do personally and also against the idol's estate both at first instance and on this appeal. As regards the other defendants, I think the order for costs made by the learned Judge should stand against them and that there should be no costs of this appeal on either side.

Costello, J. — I have had the advantage of reading the judgment that has just been delivered by my Lord and I agree with him on all the points in the case.

Criminal Appeal No. 16 of 1932, Decided on 25th May 1932.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 235 — Two realizations by blackmail — Common purpose and design and continuity of action — No prejudice to accused who fully knew case against them — Trial is not bad for misjoinder.

To determine whether or not a series of acts would form parts of the same transaction the most important points to be considered are whether there was a common purpose and design and continuity of action. [P 309 C 2]

Blackmailing was evidently the common purpose of the accused and the second of the two realizations was in continuation of the action in the first and both were in fulfilment of a common design of blackmailing. Moreover by a joint trial on charges relating to the two incidents the accused were not prejudiced in any way as the whole case for the prosecution was disclosed from the very beginning and the accused fully understood that case and were given full opportunity to meet it.

Held : that there was no misjoinder of charges or vitiation of trial. [P 310 C 1]

b) Penal Code (1860), S. 420 — Accused wearing khaki dress, threatening to take complainant to thana for extortion — Accused not police officer nor saying so, but complainant given to understand that he is — Deception was proved.

The facts that the accused wore a khaki shirt and a round brush cap, threatened to take the complainant to the thana, and the fact that there could not be any manner of doubt that the accused gave the complainant to understand that he was a police officer which he was not and that he had the authority to take to the thana which authority he did not possess, amount to deception, where the accused used this representation to blackmail the complainant though the accused may not have told the complainant that he was a police officer. [P 310 C 1]

* (c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 25 — Confessional statement not used as such may be used to show that accused gave different versions to Court and police.

A confessional statement made to a police officer if not used as a confession may be used by the Court to show that the story which the accused gave at the time of the trial had not been given to the police officer. [P 310 C 2]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 388—Sentence not of fine only— Instalments cannot be allowed.

There is no provision except S. 388 by which a fine can be ordered to be realized by instalments. But it has no application where the sentence is not a sentence of fine only. [P 310 C 2]

Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury — for Appellantss.

Nirmal Chandra Chakravarty — for the Crown.

Mallik, J.—Of the two appellants Ali Hussain, appellant 1, has been convicted under S. 420, I. P. C., and sentenced to detention till the rising of the Court and to a fine of Rs. 250. Appellant 2 Saiyed Din has been convicted under Ss. 420 and 114, I. P. C., and sentenced to detention till the rising of the Court and to a fine of Rs. 60. The allegations on which the two appellants were charged were briefly these: The complainant Amarendra Nath Dhar is a clerk in the service of a firm styled as D. L. Mitter and Company. He is a respectable young man fond of betting at the races and takes the risk of betting outside the rings with the possible consequence of being charged with gambling. On one Saturday about the middle of August last he attended the races and did some betting outside the enclosure with unlicensed bookmakers. He lost some money and was coming home, and when he was near the Plassey Gate on the Maidan, the accused Ali Hussain met him and saying that he had seen him betting with unlicensed bookmakers threatened to take him to the thana. Ali Hussain had at the time a khaki shirt and a round brush cap on his head. Ali Hussain told him that he would not take the complainant to the thana if the complainant would spend Rs. 100. On the intervention of appellant 2, Saiyed Din who happened to arrive at the place at the time, the amount was subsequently reduced to Rs. 40.

The complainant then left the place and when accused 1 came to the house of the complainant the complainant had to pay him Rs. 40 as arranged before. A few days later the two accused came to the house of the complainant again and accused 1 told him that unless he would pay another Rs. 15 to accused 2, accused 2 would report the matter to the uparwalas and that both of them might get into trouble. The complainant thereupon asked them to come and meet him at the Esplanade near the tramway shed. On the following Saturday the complainant however went and reported the whole matter to a Sub-Inspector, Bhakti Bhusan Roy by name, and it was arranged that the complainant when he would meet the two accused at the Esplanade would take them to the Wellington Square and would make some payment to the accused persons when the police could remain somewhere near by hiding. As arranged the two accused came and met the complainant at the Esplanade on the appointed Saturday and according to that arrangement the three persons went to Wellington Square and when a five rupee note which has been previously marked was handed over to accused 1 the appellants were arrested by the police.

The case for the defence was that the complainant owed Rs. 26 to Ali Hussain, that Ali Hussain made several demands for payment of the money; that there was an altercation in consequence and that when the complainant after taking the accused to Goltalao (Wellington Square) was giving to Ali Hussain a five rupee note the police arrested them. According to the defence of Ali Hussain, Saiyed Din who was to get Rs. 5 from Ali Hussain accompanied him to Goltalao. On behalf of the defence one witness was examined in the case. The learned Magistrate however disbelieved the defence story and believing the case for the prosecution convicted and sentenced the two accused persons in the way as stated before.

On behalf of the appellants a number of points were raised before us. In the first place it was said that there had been a misjoinder of charges and that the whole trial has been vitiated thereby. It was said that the first day's transaction, namely, payment of Rs. 40. had no connexion whatsoever with the payment of Rs. 5 at Goltalao and that the two incidents could not be said to be parts of one and the same transaction. This contention does not seem to me to be well founded. To determine whether or not a series of acts would form parts of the same transaction the most important points to be considered are whether there was a common purpose and design and continuity of action. In the present case blackmailing was evidently the common purpose and the second realization was in continuation of the action in the first and both, in my opinion, were in fulfilment of that common design of blackmailing design originating from the discovery of the complainant betting outside the enclosure. It is to be observed moreover in this connexion that by a joint trial on charges relating to the two incidents the accused do not appear to have been prejudiced in any way. The whole case for the prosecution was disclosed from the very beginning and the accused fully understood that case and were given full opportunity to meet it.

The second point taken on behalf of the appellants was that the conviction for cheating is unsustainable inasmuch as there was no false representation and therefore no deception. There may not have been any words used to tell the complainant that accused 1 was a police officer. But from the facts that accused 1 wore a khaki shirt and threatened to take the complainant to the thana there could not, in my judgment, be any manner of doubt that the accused gave the complainant to understand that he was a police officer which he was not and that he had the authority to take him to the thana which authority he did not possess and this, in my opinion, did amount to deception.

Then it was urged on behalf of the appellants that the conviction was bad inasmuch as it rested entirely on the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant himself. But in this connexion it is to be observed that the complainant was before the trying Magistrate and that the Magistrate had the full opportunity to notice his demeanour and to observe the way in which he deposed. The Magistrate appears to have been impressed by the convincing manner in which the witness gave his deposition. It was said that the story which the complainant gave was not a probable one because the complainant was not an uneducated rustic who might easily be taken in by such representations as the accused are alleged to have done. But persons who are not uneducated rustics do sometimes become victims to swindlers and blackmailers.

It was said that it was not very probable that the complainant should submit to the accused when it is remembered that a conviction for gambling could not be visited with any thing more than a few rupees fine. Next it is to be remembered that the complainant was in the employ of a firm and a conviction for gambling might entail losing his job in that firm.

Mr. Roy Chowdhury next took exception to the admission of some evidence in the case which according to him was inadmissible. The evidence to which he took exception was a statement of Babu Bhakti Roy, the Sub-Inspector of Police, to the effect that accused 1 had told him that when he had detected the complainant in committing sodomy in the race-course the complainant offered to give him bakshis if he would let him go and he did let him go. It was said that this evidence amounted to a confessional statement made to a police officer and was therefore inadmissible under S. 25, Evidence Act. Admitting that the statement was a confessional statement made to a police officer the learned Magistrate does not appear to have used it as a confession. What it was used for by him in the case was that the story which the accused gave at the time of the trial had not been given to the police officer. As to this there was no dispute. The first accused in his statement recorded under S. 342, Criminal P. C., stated that he had made no statement before the daroga. This contention must therefore fail.

Lastly, it was contended by Mr. Roy Chowdhury that the sentence inflicted on the two accused persons in the present case has been unduly severe and that in case we should maintain the order of conviction in its entirety we should direct that the fine be paid by instalments. The sentences inflicted do not appear to me to be excessive and I am not aware of any provision except S. 388, Criminal P. C., by which a fine can be ordered to be realised by instalments. But S. 388 has no application to the present case inasmuch as the sentence in the present case was not a sentence of fine only. As stated in the beginning both the accused had been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a day besides the sentence of fine.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed. The fine will now be realized.

Appeal No. 197 of 1930, Decided on 15th July 1932, against order of Sub-Judge, 2nd Class, Mymensingh, D/- 23rd January 1930.

Limitation Act (9 of 1908), Art. 180—Application for delivery of possession by auction purchaser — Sale confirmed — Appeal preferred against order dismissing application for setting aside sale—Time runs from appellate order—Appeal held maintainable—Civil P. C., (1908). S. 47.

In execution of his mortgage decree the decree-holder purchased the property on 17th September 1924. One of the judgment-debtors applied for setting aside the sale but the application was dismissed on 30th May 1925 and the sale was confirmed on that date. An application for delivery of possession was then made by the purchaser on 18th January 1929.

Guha, J.—This appeal is directed against an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Mymensingh, on 23rd January 1930, holding that an application for delivery of possession made by a decree-holder auction-purchaser was barred by limitation. The purchase was made by the decree-holder at a sale held on 17th September 1924, in execution of a mortgage decree. The judgment-debtor No. 5 applied for setting aside the sale on 31st October 1924, and that application was dismissed on 30th May 1925. The sale was confirmed on that date. There was an appeal by the judgment-debtor against the order dismissing the application for setting aside the sale, and the appeal was dismissed by this Court on 25th July 1927. The application for delivery of possession was made on 18th January 1929. The limitation applicable to such an application would be the one prescribed by Art. 180, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, and it was incumbent upon the purchaser to make the application within three years from the date when the sale in execution of the decree became absolute. There was no question of suspension of the period of limitation or extension of the period of limitation involved in a case like the present. As observed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgout Singh (1), there could be no final, conclusive and definitive order confirming the sale, while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was in litigation. In the case before us there was the application for setting aside the sale held in execution of the decree, and that application was made within 30 days of the date of the sale. On the facts of this case therefore the decision of this Court in the case of Neckbar Sahai v. Prakash Chandra Nag (2) is not an authority against the appellant before us, regard being had to the observations made in that case at (p. 614 of 56 Cal) of the report.

In the words of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Bajinath Sahai's case (1) mentioned above, it could not be said, when the parties were litigating as to whether the sale should be confirmed or not, that the sale had become final or conclusive. The confirmation of the sale therefore dates only from the date when the litigation following upon the application for setting aside the sale terminated on 25th July 1927, the date of the final decision of this Court, in that litigation, and in our judgment the law of limitation was not a defence to this application for delivery of possession made by the decree-holder auction-purchaser, the appellant before us. It may be mentioned that a preliminary objection as to the maintainability of the appeal to this Court was raised on behalf of the respondents. As the order of the Court below was passed on an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., made by the judgment-debtor No. 4, there can be no doubt that the appeal is competent. In the above view of the case, this appeal must be allowed; the order of the Court below against which this appeal is directed, is set aside, and the appellant's application for delivery of possession made before the lower Court is allowed, with the result that possession is to be delivered by the Court to the appellant as prayed by him. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court as also in the Court below. The hearing fee in the appeal to this Court is assessed at three gold mohurs. F. A. Nos. 191 to 198 of 1928.

Judgment.—These are eight appeals by the Collector of Dacca and arise out of eight references under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act, at the instance of the proprietors of the land which have been compulsorily acquired for the purposes of certain sewerage works in the town of Dacca. The Collector valued the interest of the proprietors on a certain basis. He first of all determined the average rate of rent per bigha which the tenants were liable to pay to the proprietors and he ascertained the same at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha. After ascertaining it the Collector was of opinion that the proprietors will get 25 years purchase of this after deduction of the collection charges and the Government revenue. To this the Collector added in favour of the proprietors a further sum equal to $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of the compensation assessed for tenancy interest on account of the loss of selami. This was the method adopted with reference to lands in the occupation of tenants. With regard to the lands in the khas possession of the proprietor he valued his interest for garden and tank at Rs. 500, for raised bhiti at Rs. 400, for ordinary bhiti at Rs. 375, for raised nal at Rs. 325, for ordinary nal at Rs. 300, for kacha road at Rs. 125 and for nala at Rs. 50 per bigha.

Eight references were made before the Land Acquisition Judge of Dacca and it was contended before him that the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector has adopted a wrong method for ascertaining the compensation of the tenanted lands. It was argued that the proper method which the Collector should have adopted was to ascertain the market value of the lands and then to deduct the value of the occupancy right for awarding compensation to the proprietors. Adopting this as the basis on which compensation should be allowed the Land Acquisition Judge proceeded to determine the market value of the lands in these eight references, and after considering several documents, in particular two which were deeds of sale prior to the date of the declaration, he has increased the amount of compensation to a much larger sum than that awarded by the Deputy Collector. In these eight cases, it is to be noticed no evidence was given on behalf of the Collector of Dacca as will appear from the order made in the order sheet, namely, order No. 26, dated 22nd July 1927. The Land Acquisition Judge has increased the compensation and the increase is shown at p. 48 of the printed paper book in part I of Appeal No. 192 of 1928. It is not therefore necessary to state in detail the amounts by which the compensation has been increased by the Land Acquisition Judge.

Against this order of the Land Acquisition Judge increasing the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector these eight appeals have been preferred by the Collector of Dacca, and the main argument which has been advanced for the appellant by the learned Senior Government Pleader has been that the Land Acquisition Judge has adopted a wrong method in awarding compensation to the proprietors and he contends that the method adopted by the Land Acquisition Collector was the right method. The respondents have however pointed out that this contention put forward on behalf of the Collector is opposed to the principle laid down in the Land Acquisition Act and is opposed to a series of authorities both of this Court and of the other High Courts in India. The true test for determining the amount of compensation which ought to be awarded to the proprietors is to ascertain the market value of the land. As was pointed out by Sir John Wallis, Chief Justice of Madras as he then was, in the case of Raja Pittapuram v. Revenue Divisional Officer, Coconada (1), the correct rule in all cases of this class is that the land to be acquired is to be valued in the first instance including all interests in it and the amount so ascertained has then to be apportioned amongst the parties, interested according to their interests. This is also the view which has been recently adopted by the learned Chief Justice and Mukerji, J., in an unreported decision in F. A., 6 of 1929 which was decided on 19th February 1931 and the precise argument which has now been advanced on behalf of the Collector of Dacca was advanced in that case on behalf of the Collector of Jalpaiguri and was negatived. Having regard to these authorities the contention of the Collector regarding the principle on which compensation should be awarded must be negatived.

An argument has next been addressed with reference to the paucity of the evidence furnished on behalf of the proprietors with reference to the market value of lands near about the disputed lands, and it is said that the Land Acquisition Judge was not justified in proceeding to determine the market value of the lands practically on two documents one of which is Ex. 1 which is a lease which was taken by the witness who was examined on behalf of the claimants (one Muhammad) of some nal land in mourasi right on payment of selami of Rs. 1,050 per bigha on 21st July 1921. It is said that the sum which is mentioned in this deed as selami for the lease was really excessive and did not really represent the value of the land in or about the locality. Considerable stress has been laid on the circumstance that whatever may be the value as indicated in the document of 31st July 1921 there has been considerable depreciation of that value by reason of the construction of the sewerage works prior to the date of the acquisition, of the land now in question, and it is said that the value in documents with reference to lands which were situated in the same locality prior to the opening of the sewerage works cannot furnish a true criterion of the value of lands after these works have been started, and reference has been made to the evidence of some of the witnesses examined on behalf of the claimants to show that the locality has become uninhabitable by reason of the bad smell which issues out of the outfall works.

Reference in particular has been made to the evidence of witness 1 for the claimant Muhammad who stated at p. 35.

that he had not purchased any land after the construction of the dumping ground. But the same witness states that the price of lands in the locality has increased notwithstanding the construction of the dumping ground, and we have been asked by the learned Senior Government Pleader to discredit his evidence in view of the statement made by some of the witnesses that bad smell issues from the outfall works. In support of this contention a document Ex. 15 has been sought to be relied on on behalf of the appellant. This was a letter to the Collector of Dacca forwarding the proceedings of a public meeting which was held in the town of Dacca. It seems to us difficult to understand how this document can be admitted in evidence. It is surely not a public document within the meaning of S. 74, Evidence Act. All that is proved is that that a letter was sent by one Rebati Mohan Das who happened to be the president of that meeting. This evidence again had not been given in the cases in which these eight appeals arise and Mr. Brojo Lal Chakravarty, who appears for the respondents in some of the cases, rightly contends that this should not in any event be admitted in evidence against his clients.

It has next been argued with reference to the situation of the land covered by Ex. 1 as appears from the map No. 2 of the big book of maps in Appeals Nos. 191 to 198 of 1928 that the document Ex. 1 refers to one particular plot which is just outside the Municipal limits of the town of Dacca and that the other plots acquired are at a considerable distance from it, and it is said that the valuation with reference to a plot which is very close to the acquired land cannot form the basis of the valuation with regard to other lands which are far apart. It has however been pointed out on behalf of the respondents that the distance at any rate as regards some of these lands is only about 71½ yards and we do not think that it makes any difference when valuing a land in the locality if the valuation is based on a document with reference to one plot in the locality which is of the same description with similar advantages as the other plots. The learned Senior Government Pleader saw the force of this argument and tried to point out that with reference to this plot there was considerable road frontage which advantage was not enjoyed by the other plots acquired, and he refers in particular to the situation of this land covered by Ex. 1 and to the road which was intended to be connected with the public road. Special reference was made to the recital at p. 20 of the paper book Part 2 of Appeal No. 120 of 1928 which is to the following effect:

"Towards the western side of the aforesaid land there will be a road 15 feet in width extending towards the north where it meets another road coming from the west at a point forming the south-east corner of Mr. Kesh Babu's garden from which road it will lead one to this land; you shall be entitled to use this road."

This recital however does not show that the land which formed the subject of Ex. 1 was in a better situation than other lands by reason of there having been an extensive road frontage. Then it was argued that the Land Acquisition Judge has been unmindful of the circumstance that land outside the Municipality is not to be valued in the same way as land which is in close proximity to the Municipal area. We do not see any force in this contention and we are not prepared to accept it. On all these grounds we are of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by the Land Acquisition Judge regarding the amounts of compensation awarded by him seems to be right. The result is that all these eight appeals must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs in each of these appeals. There are cross-objections in F. A. Nos. 191, 192, 194 and 196, and they have not been pressed. They are dismissed without costs. (Then their Lordships took appeals Nos. 62 to 93 of 1928 and dismissed them with costs).

Appeal No. 219 of 1929, Decided on 26th May 1932, from original decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Burdwan, D/- 2nd May 1929.

Practice—Substitution of legal representatives of defendant—Application for — Not only cause title should be corrected but plaint also should be amended showing how legal representative is responsible for claim —Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, R. 4.

If some person who is not an heir or concessis of a deceased defendant is substituted in his stead it is necessary not merely that the name of the person should be substituted or added in the cause title but that the plaint should also be properly amended making the allegations according to which the plaintiff claims to treat the added defendant as in some way responsible for the debt of the deceased defendant and the method of treating the petition for substitution as part of the plaint is particularly objectionable because a petition is generally drawn very differently from a proper plaint.

On the death of the defendant the plaintiff made an application to the Court saying that K "has been possessing the deceased's moveable properties. Hence, for the purpose of meeting all sorts of objections, it is necessary to include the said K also in the category of the defendants" and upon that an order was made "plaintiff applies for substituting K of the address and particulars as mentioned in the petition in place of the deceased defendant 1. Be it so and the petition be treated as part of the plaint."

Held: that the petition disclosed no cause of action against the person proposed to be added except that he "has been possessing her moveable properties." That even if K be a legal representative at all, he could only be so added because he has intermeddled with the estate of the deceased defendant which she left at her death. The petition disclosed no such cause of action and hence the order was bad. [P 315 C 2; P 316 C 1]

Rankin, C. J.—In my judgment this appeal succeeds. The plaintiff brought his suit asking for relief in the alternative: first of all, for declaration of title and possession of 200 bighas of land in Mauza Jaba in the Asansol District and alternatively, for judgment for Rs. 7,400 or, in default compensation. His case was that Rani Shyama Sundari Debi had given him a lease for 999 years of this property in Mauza Jaba and had received from him selami of Rs. 6,000 and nazar of Rs. 1,000 on or about 29th July 1920, that he was resisted by certain persons, defendants 2 and 3 in the suit, and had not obtained possession of the land demised and that he was entitled to a decree either for possession or else for recovery from the lady or her estate the sum of Rs. 7,400 which he had paid on that account. The suit itself was brought on 12th July 1922 and the lessor, Rani Shyama Sundari Debi, died on 18th February 1927 pending the suit. Now, the heir of the lady's stridhan and also the person who was the reversioner after the lady's Hindu widows' estate to her husband was defendant 2, Raja Promotha Nath Malin, he being the son of her husband's brother and when the lady died it was, of course, quite proper that her heir should represent her estate. On 19th July 1927 however the plaintiff made an application to the Court saying that the present appellant Babu Kanai Lal Misra

"has been possessing the Rani's moveable properties. Hence, for the purpose of meeting all sorts of objections, it is necessary to include the said Kanai Lal Babu also in the category of the defendants" and upon that an order was made on 19th July 1927:

"Plaintiff applies for substituting Kanai Lal of the address and particulars as mentioned in the petition in place of the deceased defendant 1. Be it so and the petition be treated as part of the plaint."

Upon that I desire to say that it seems to me that this is a signal example of a very bad practice in the lower Court. If it is desirable that some person who is not an heir or concessis of a deceased defendant should be substituted in his stead, it seems to me to be very necessary not merely that the name of the person should be substituted or added in the cause title but that the plaint should also be properly amended making the allegations according to which the plaintiff claims to treat the added defendant as in some way responsible for the debt of the deceased defendant; and this method of treating the petition as part of the plaint is particularly objectionable because a petition is generally drawn very differently from a proper plaint. In the present case, this petition discloses no cause of action against the person proposed to be added except that it says that he "has been possessing her moveable properties. Hence, for the purpose of meeting all sorts of objections, it is necessary to include the said Kanai Lal Babu also in the category of the defendants."

Now, in that unfortunate state of things, the appellant filed a written statement. He stated that the plaintiff had no cause of action against him and that he was not concerned with the present suit. He further stated that :

"the late Rani made a gift of some of her moveable stridhan properties to this defendant; but, for that reason, this defendant cannot by any means be liable for the money mentioned by the plaintiff."

The issues in the suit were settled long before. No issue was framed at the hearing with reference to this appellant and no reference to the appellant appears to have been made in the judgment until at the very end where the learned Judge says this:

"The decree money will be realized from the assets of the deceased defendant 1 Shyama Sundari in the hands of her representatives defendants 1ka to 1gha," thereby holding on some facts or other which do not appear to have been considered that for the purposes of the suit to establish a debt due by the deceased defendant this appellant is a legal representative. Of course, if he is a legal representative he would be liable only to the extent of the assets in his hands. In this case, the appellant has been held liable with certain other people. On what ground he has been added I do not know. Even if he is a legal representative at all, he can only be so added because he has intermeddled with the estate of Shyama Sundari which she left at her death. No facts whatever are to be discovered from the judgment in support of any such case: there is neither pleading, issue or evidence nor discussion of the matter. Now, before us it has been pointed out that the plaintiff put in evidence two deeds of gift executed by Rani Shyama Sundari Debi in favour of the appellant: one on 16th January 1919 and the other on 28th April 1920. These are deeds of gift relating to immovable properties. They are, I imagine, no evidence at all that the lady did not also make a gift of moveables. In addition to them certain documents were put in evidence which merely show, if they are evidence at all against the appellant, that he at various times claimed that by a deed of agreement, according to one document registered on 20th July 1922, he became entitled to certain moveables that at that time belonged to the Rani. The lady did not die till 18th February 1927. That, in no way, assists the plaintiff. The position is, as far as I can see, that, even assuming that it was competent to a person who sought to establish a debt due from the estate of the lady to raise in the same suit the question as to whether or not a stranger in addition to her heirs had interfered with her estate after her death, there is no evidence to show that this appellant had at any time interfered with anything that at the date of her death was part of her estate. In my judgment the decree, in so far as it is passed against the present appellant, is entirely without foundation and must be reversed. The appellant must get the costs of this appeal and of the suit.

Appeal No. 392 of 1928, Decided on 17th March 1932, against original decree of Sub-Judge, Dinajpur, D/- 31st July 1928.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, Rr. 4 and 5 (2)—Suit on mortgage—Court holding mortgage lien proportionately to property in possession of mortgagee discharged—Decree directing account due to plaintiff and in default of payment sufficient property to be sold—Decree held to be one under O. 34, R. 4.

During the pendency of the suit of enforcement of a mortgage the mortgage lien proportionate to the values of the jotes which came to be in the plaintiff's possession was regarded by the Court as discharged and he held that it remained attached to the other jotes only proportionately to their values. A decree was in a form which directed an account to be taken of what would be due to the plaintiff and ordered that in default of payment of the amount so due on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold.

Held: that the decree was clearly a preliminary decree for sale in accordance with R. 4, O. 34, and hence appeal lay from such decree, although an application under sub-R. (2), R. 5 would be necessary and a final decree for sale will have to be made under that sub-rule before a sale takes place. [P 318 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a decree for sale passed in a suit for enforcement of a mortgage the amount secured by which was payable in instalments. The bond was for a principal amount of Rs. 7,500 and was dated 30th Aswin 1327=16th October 1920. The first instalment was payable in Chaitra 1327 and in default of payment thereof the whole amount was to fall due on 1st Baisakh 1328=14th April 1921. On 28th March 1922 the suit was instituted, the claim being laid at Rs. 7,500 as principal, and Rs. 862-8-0 as interest. The defendants filed a written statement challenging the bond as fraudulent and void for want of consideration and upon other grounds, and also setting up a part payment of Rs. 92. A decree was passed ex parte against defendant 1. On the same day the claim against the other defendants was given up on compromise and as against them the suit was dismissed. On 8th January 1924, defendant 1 applied for setting that decree aside under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. This application was dismissed for default on 14th June 1924, but was eventually restored and ultimately dismissed on the merits on 27th June 1925. On appeal to the High Court this dismissal was, by an order made on 12th April 1927, set aside and the suit was restored to hearing on condition that defendant 1, appellant, paid to the plaintiff all costs incurred by him in the restoration proceedings in the trial Court as also in the appeal within a given time. The condition was complied with and on 11th August 1928, defendant 1, who was now the sole defendant in the suit and will hereafter be referred to as the defendant, filed an additional written statement in which it was alleged:

(1) That the plaintiff had in execution of the ex parte decree got the mortgaged properties (34 items of jotes) put up to sale and purchased some of them in his own name and others in the benami of other persons; (2) that thereafter the landlord of jotes Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 21 got the said jotes sold up for arrears of rent and the plaintiff deposited the decretal amount and damages, that the landlord raised objection as to the plaintiff's locus standi to make the deposit, and a date was fixed for the hearing of the objection, but the plaintiff in the meantime secretly entered into an arrangement with the result that the sale was not set aside and the plaintiff himself took settlement of the said jotes from the landlord; and (3) that the plaintiff, without the knowledge of the defendant collusively put up jotes Nos. 29 and 32 to auction and purchased the same himself and was in possession and making large profits out of them.

The Subordinate Judge found that 13 of the jotes had been sold for arrears of rent, that all of them were sold in execution of decrees for rent obtained by the landlord and shortly thereafter the plaintiff obtained settlements of them from the landlord. He held that in those circumstances it could not be said that the plaintiff was in possession of the jotes as mortgagee and so he overruled the defendant's contention that the plaintiff was bound to render account of the profits that he had taken. He found that the rent sales had taken place on 2nd September 1924 and the plaintiff thereafter purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his ex parte decree on 19th September 1924, and that therefore at the time of the rent sales the mortgage lien was in force. The ex parte decree as well as the sale thereunder were subsequently set aside and with those we are no longer concerned. He held that if the landlord desired to annul the incumbrance it was incumbent on him to issue notices under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act, but such notices were never issued. He found that the plaintiff fraudulently and in collusion with the landlord gave up his efforts to set aside the rent sales and withdrew the deposit he had made only with a view to get settlement of the jotes from the landlord, which he did in fact obtain thereafter. In these circumstances he held that

"the most equitable course would be to split up the mortgage and to hold it satisfied to the extent of the properties so taken leases of by the plaintiff."

As neither party had adduced any evidence to prove the values of the several jotes it was not possible to apportion the mortgage dues amongst the jotes. He directed an inquiry by a Commissioner as regards their values and in the meantime made a decree the terms of which will hereafter be set out. On the question of interest the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was primarily responsible for the protraction of the suit, his view being that the constitution of the suit itself was unwarranted, and that the ex parte decree was not properly obtained, and that therefore for the four years that it took the defendant to get that decree set aside no interest should be allowed. The relevant portion of the decree, in the light of the contentions urged before us, is as follows:

"The suit is decreed in part for that portion of the claim which may be found due on apportionment between the 13 jotes sold for arrears of rent and taken leases of by the plaintiff. The portion of the principal amount so decreed would carry interest at the bond rate from institution of the suit up to the period of grace minus such interest for four years defendant 1 is given six months time for payment of the amount found due on apportionment and after the amount is declared. If no such payment is made by the defendant within the period of grace the jotes Nos. 10 to 15 and 17 to 20 and Nos. 22 to 28 and 31 to 34 or a sufficient part thereof would be sold."

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent as regards the competency of the appeal, it being said that the decree is not a final decree for sale but is merely a decision embodying certain conclusions and directions under which the Commissioner is to hold "an investigation," and that a final decree can only be passed after the Commissioner has ascertained the values of the properties and on such valuation the defendant's liability has been fixed. We are not prepared to uphold this objection. A final decree for sale would, no doubt, ordinarily contain the ascertained amount of the mortgagor's liability. But in view of the events that had happened during the pendency of the suit the mortgage lien proportionate to the values of the jotes which came to be in the plaintiffs' possession was regarded by the Subordinate Judge as discharged and he held that it remained attached to the other jotes only proportionately to their values. In such circumstances a decree passed in a form which directs an account to be taken of what would be due to the plaintiff and orders that in default of payment of the amount so due on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, is clearly a preliminary decree for sale in accordance with R. 4, O. 34. It may be that an application under sub-R. (2), R. 5 would be necessary and a final decree for sale will have to be made under that sub-rule before a sale takes place. But a decree under R. 4 is none the less a decree from which an appeal lies. On the merits of the appeal two questions arise: First whether the order as to interest made by the Judge is right; and second whether the order as to the splitting up of the security and a proportionate mortgage lien to attach to the remaining jotes in proportion to their value is proper.

The second question may be dealt with first. (His Lordship then dealt with the second question and concluded that the decree made by the Court below splitting up the mortgage lien, is just and fair.) As regards the other question, namely, whether the order as regards interest made by the learned Judge is right, we are of opinion that such an order was not justifiable and should not have been made. We cannot see how the plaintiff could be held liable for the protraction of the litigation for the period taken in setting the ex parte decree aside. We do not see why the learned Judge took the view that the suit was intentionally framed with unnecessary parties as defendants or that the ex parte decree was improperly obtained. His remarks in this connexion seem to us entirely unsupportable. Indeed, there was enough said in the judgment of this Court dated 12th April 1927 which would indicate that it was more as a matter of indulgence than anything else that the ex parte decree was set aside. As therefore we must hold that this appeal which the plaintiff has preferred was not altogether without justification, we cannot with propriety make an order disallowing him interest for the period during which it has been pending. We cannot therefore find any reason on which we can support a deduction of interest for four years as the Subordinate Judge has made or for any period at all.

The result is that the appeal should be allowed in part, the decree of the Court below being varied by deleting the order as to deduction of interest for four years contained therein. With that variation the said decree will stand. On a careful consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case we think we should make no order for costs in the appeal.

Judgment.—This is a rule against an order of the Subdivisional Magistrate of Suri making absolute an order passed under S. 133, Criminal P. C., directing the petitioner to remove an unlawful obstruction on the alleged public road, on the ground that the learned Magistrate acted illegally in refusing to appoint a jury under S. 138, Criminal P. C. The learned Magistrate made an inquiry under S. 139-A on the denial of the petitioner that the road in question was a public road; and the Magistrate finding that there was no reliable evidence in support of the denial of the petitioner, was bound to proceed as laid down in S. 137 or S. 138. It is urged before us that before the Magistrate makes an inquiry as to whether there is evidence in support of the denial of the existence of a public way, the petitioner must have elected to have the matter tried by a jury under S. 135. But we think that it is still open to the petitioner to elect to have the matter tried by a jury after it has been decided by the Magistrate that there is no reliable evidence in support of the denial of the existence of the public way. We therefore set aside the order of the Magistrate directing the petitioner to remove the obstruction and send the case back to him for action under S. 138, Criminal P. C., according to law.

The other ground was that in view of the civil suit instituted, the proceedings before the learned Magistrate were without jurisdiction and the orders should be set aside or stayed pending the disposal of the civil suits. The fact that the civil suit has been instituted is no bar to the proceedings and it is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to continue the proceedings under S. 138, Criminal P. C. The civil suit may take a long time, in the meantime it is quite competent to the Magistrate to decide the matter summarily under the Civil Procedure Code.

Hemendra Kumar Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—These two appeals have arisen out of two suits in which the plaintiff claims paddy rent. The defendants in the suits maintain that the plaintiff is not entitled to paddy rent and that money rent only is payable.

The trial Court in both cases decreed the suits for paddy rent. But on appeal the decrees were set aside and the suits were decreed at the money rent which the defendants claimed to have been payable. In Appeal No. 648 it is urged that the Court below was wrong in taking additional evidence without assigning any sufficient reasons therefor and without giving sufficient opportunity to the plaintiff to rebut the evidence. Under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C., wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced by an appellate Court, the Court shall record the reason for its admission. There is no provision that the Court must give an opportunity to the plaintiff to rebut the evidence. We are concerned in the present case with the admissions in evidence by the appellate Court of the kabuliyat Ex. B from which it appears that the holding in question in Suit No. 408 was held by the defendant's predecessor at a money rent of Rs. 38.0. In his judgment the learned Subordinate Judge gives his reasons for admitting it, namely, that the defendant was a minor at the time the kabuliyat was executed and that he did not know of the execution of the kabuliyat before. So that the provisions of O. 41, R. 27 have been carried out as the reason for admission has in fact been recorded.

Then it is urged that the fact that money rent was fixed in this kabuliyat for the year 1301 B. S., is not difficult to show that the rent for a period of 30 years later was not paddy rent. This of course is true. But this is not the only circumstance which the appellate Court has taken into consideration. He has considered the probabilities of the case. He says that the evidence as to payment of paddy rent is discrepant and that the story of payment of paddy rent to plaintiff in 1330 B. S. by the defendant's predecessor is evidently false, because the touji papers show that the jote stood in the name of the defendant from 1327, so that the defendant's predecessor died before 1327 B. S. Then it is urged that the documents of the years subsequent to 1301 B. S. when the kabuliyat was executed, should have been considered and particularly the touji papers put in without objection; but the touji papers have been in fact considered the Judge noting that the writer of the touji papers was not examined; and even the Munsif who gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff did not think it worth while to refer to the touji papers. He says it is hardly necessary to refer to the toujis upon which much comment has been made by the learned pleader for the defence. So that the touji papers were considered but not relied on to rebut the evidence showing that money rent was payable. If the rent was changed from money rent to paddy rent, there ought to have been some evidence showing when the change took place and that the defendant's predecessor agreed to pay paddy rent. The plaintiff claims that the lands were held on the same terms by the defendant's father and since at one time, that is, in 1301 B. S. he was holding the land at money rent presumably in the absence of any evidence to the contrary that money rent was paid in subsequent years although the kabuliyat was only for one year. In such cases it is usual for the tenants to hold on the same terms where they continue in occupation of the same holding.

Then it is urged that the Court was wrong in holding that certain farags which were filed by the defendant applied to the lands in suit and showed that rent for 1331 to 1332 was paid. The Judge says that as these farags relate to land only, they are necessarily for the lands in suit and that the defendants do not hold any other lands under the plaintiff. The kabuliyat Ex. 2 shows that the defendant does in fact hold other lands at money rent, this kabuliyat having been given by his predecessor for such lands. It is true that holding included a homestead. However there may be some doubt as to whether these farags relate to the lands in suit. They do not affect the merits of the case otherwise inasmuch as they do not indicate whether paddy rent or money rent is payable. But I think they are not conclusive evidence showing that rent of this holding was paid for the years 1330 to 1332 B. S. The finding that money rent and not paddy rent is payable is really a finding of fact and as it seems to have been supported by evidence duly considered by the appellate Court I think this finding should not be interfered with. The result is that the decree in this suit is modified to the extent that the plaintiff will get rent for the years 1330 to 1333 B. S. at the rate of Rs. 4-0-3. The rent being more than Rs. 3-8-0 fixed by the kabuliya of 1301 B. S. is explained by the fact that the area has increased.

In Suit No. 58 out of which Appeal No. 649 arises it has been found that the toujis are not legally proved and that the plaintiff has totally failed to prove realization of paddy rent. It is true that the learned Subordinate Judge has referred to the evidence in the other suit, namely, Ex. B which he should not have done. But apart from this his judgment shows that the plaintiff has failed to prove the realization of paddy rent at any time. This is a finding of fact which I cannot interfere with. The appeals were heard together apparently with the consent of parties, so that I think the plaintiff cannot now complain that he has been prejudiced by the appeals being heard together. The result is that Appeal No. 649 is dismissed. Each party will bear their own costs throughout. Defendants to be ejected if the rent due is not paid within one month of the arrival of the record in the trial Court if not already deposited.

Appeal No. 1224 of 1927, Decided on 4th June 1929

(a) Decree—Validity—Decree valid when passed—Subsequent legal amendment does not make it invalid—Bengal Tenancy Act (as amended by Act 4 of 1928), S. 178.

Where a decree is a good and valid decree quite in accordance with law as it was at the date when it was passed, it cannot, by reason of the subsequent amendment introduced, become bad.

[P 321 C 2; P 322 C 1]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (as amended by Act 4 of 1928), S. 178—Amendment has no retrospective effect.

The amending Act 4 of 1928, which provides that nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of that Act should affect the provisions of S. 67 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent, has not a retrospective operation. [P 322 C 1]

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act (as amended by Act 4 of 1928), S. 178—Purchasers held liable to interest stipulated in kabuliya.

The defendants, on a suit for rent or their predecessors purchased the jama under certain nobilas. They acquired the tenancy, but failed to obtain recognition from the landlord and therefore purchased the tenancy again at the auction sale:

Held: that the defendants were liable to pay the high rate of interest stipulated for in the kabuliya. [P 322 C 2]

(d) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 3—Notice—Vendor and purchaser—Purchaser is deemed to have knowledge of terms of lease by vendor.

In the case of a private transfer, the transferee can and should call for the title deed of the vendor and, if there is a lease providing for interest at a high rate, the purchaser shall be taken to have become aware of such a contract and, in the circumstances, he must be taken to have had full knowledge of the terms of the lease and he cannot complain that the rate of interest is exorbitant. M. N. Mukerji, J. — This appeal has arisen out of a suit for rent. Defendants 2, 3 and 4 are the appellants. Rent was claimed in the suit for the years 1327 to 1330 B. S. and the whole controversy in this appeal is with regard to the interest that has been awarded by the Courts below. The said Courts have decreed interest at the rate of 6 per cent per mensem which was the rate agreed to be paid and mentioned in an unregistered kabuliya dated 1861. The defendants challenge the validity of the decrees passed by the Courts below as regards interest upon two grounds. The first contention that has been advanced on behalf of the appellants is to the effect that the decree as to interest should be set aside, inasmuch as, by reason of the amendment of S. 178, Ben. Ten. Act, introduced by Act 4 of 1928, the plaintiff is no longer entitled to recover interest at anything more than that allowed by S. 67 of the Act. It is conceded that, at the date on which the suit was instituted, there was nothing in the Act which would stand in the way of the plaintiff recovering interest at the kabuliya rate and it is further conceded that, even at the date when the decree of the lower appellate Court was passed, the law would not disentitle him to recover interest at that rate. The decree therefore according to the appellants' contention, was a good and valid decree quite in accordance with law as it was at the date when it was passed, but it is said that, by reason of the subsequent amendment introduced by Act 4 of 1928, the decree has become bad.

This is a contention which I am not prepared to accept as well founded. The change made in the law by Act 4 of 1928 is to the effect that, while under the law as it stood before the amendment it was provided that nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of the Act should affect the provisions of S. 67 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent, by the amending Act it was provided that nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of that Act should affect the provisions of S. 67 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent. It is contended that this amendment should have retrospective effect. I do not find any word either in S. 178 or anywhere else in the amending Act which gives this amendment a retrospective operation; and, so long as it cannot be said that the decree was not in accordance with the law as it stood at the date when it was passed, the appellants, in my opinion, are not entitled to succeed in the present appeal so far as this contention is concerned.

The next ground upon which the decree as regards interest is challenged is to the effect that, as the defendants in the present case are auction-purchasers in respect of the tenancy and inasmuch as the terms of the kabuliyat and the rate of interest specified therein were not mentioned in the sale proclamation, they had no knowledge as regards the rate of interest and that therefore such a heavy rate of interest which is not one of the ordinary incidents of the tenancy is not a rate of interest which the defendant should be held liable to pay on the arrears. Now, there is some conflict of judicial opinion on the question as to whether in a case in which the defendants who are purchasers of a tenancy at an auction sale are or are not liable to pay the high rate of interest stipulated for in the kabuliyat when, in point of fact, the same was not brought to their notice either by the sale proclamation or in some other way. But, in the present case, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, as I read it, amounts to this: that the defendants or their predecessors purchased the jama under certain kobalas.

They thus acquired the tenancy, but they failed to obtain recognition from the landlord and therefore they purchased the tenancy again at the auction sale. This being the position, the case comes directly within the purview of those rulings in which it has been held that, in the case of a private transfer, the transferee can and should call for the title deed of the vendor; and, if there is a lease providing for interest at a high rate the purchaser shall be taken to have become aware of such a contract and, in the circumstances he must be taken to have had full knowledge of the terms of the lease and he cannot complain that the rate of interest is exorbitant. It is true that, in the present case, the defendants subsequently made an auction purchase of the tenancy. That however cannot alter their liability. In point of fact, they had come in, as it has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge, that they did under a private purchase from the previous tenants. This contention also, in my opinion, has no substance. The appeal accordingly, in my opinion, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 809 of 1930, Decided on 7th July 1932.

(a) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), S. 3 (5)—Meaning of bazar in Act is same as ordinary meaning—But though held on particular days with no right to sellers to occupy particular place can be bazar.

In Bengal generally bats are held on a particular day or days in a week, while bazars are held daily. The bats and bazars consist of a number of shops, large and small—these shops are places in which goods are sold by retail. The meaning given to a bazar by the Calcutta Municipal Act does not therefore militate against the ordinary meaning of the word, and a bazar which is known as a bat, for the reason that it is held on a particular day or days in the week, would not cease to be a bazar. That the sellers of commodities assemble only one day at a bazar, and have no sort of right of occupying any particular place for the sale of their commodities cannot have the effect of taking the place occupied by them, out of the category of shops—a collection of which would ordinarily be denominated a bazar, and a bazar within the meaning of the Calcutta Municipal Act.

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Meaning of language must be determined.

It may sometimes be difficult to ascertain what the legislature exactly meant, but the Court must determine what its language means: Palmer v. Thatcher, (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 316 and Rothschild v. Inland Revenue, (1894) 2 Q. B. 142, Ref. [P 224 C 1]

(c) Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), Ss 389 and 400—Power to define limits includes power to extend—Defining and extending can be done together.

The power to define limits must include the power to extend the limits according to the facts and circumstances of a particular case. There need not be a previous resolution passed, before action could be taken under S. 400 of the Act, for the purpose of defining the limits of a bazar, with a view either to extend the limits or curtail the same, as the necessity of a case might require. Both the things could be done at the one and the same time. [P 321 C 2]

Guha, J.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen prayed for a declaration that the Corporation of Calcutta had illegally declared premises No. 56, Chetla Road, a bazar, and for a further declaration that the action of the Corporation in extending the limits of the bazar to premises Nos. 56-1, 56-2, 56-3 and 58, Chetla Road, was ultra vires and without jurisdiction. The plaintiffs also prayed for permanent injunction in the matter of the prosecution of the plaintiffs before the Municipal Magistrate on failure to comply with the Corporation's requisition to make improvements of the area comprised in the premises mentioned above. The plaintiffs' claim in the suit was resisted by the Corporation of Calcutta, who claimed that the action of the Corporation to which reference had been made in the plaint was legal and intra vires, and that the premises mentioned above in regard to which the plaintiffs were served with requisition for making improvement constituted a bazar as defined by the Calcutta Municipal Act. The Courts below have agreed in holding that premises No. 56 Chetla Road was a bazar, but that the act of the Corporation in including premises Nos. 56-1, 56-2, 56-3 and 58 Chetla Road within the limits of the bazar at No. 56 Chetla Road, was ultra vires. The Courts below have agreed in granting consequential reliefs following upon their decision as mentioned above. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court from the decision of the Courts below, so far as it went against them in regard to premises No. 56 Chetla Road; and cross-objections have been preferred by the Corporation of Calcutta, respondent in this appeal, challenging the decision of the Courts below holding that the action of the Corporation, so far as it concerned the other premises Nos. 56-1, 56-2, 56-3 and 58 Chetla Road was ultra vires.

The first question requiring consideration in this appeal is whether premises No. 56 Chetla Road was legally declared to be a bazar. If that question be decided against the plaintiffs-appellants questions relating to the action of the Corporation of Calcutta in regard to the other four premises mentioned above would have to be considered in disposing of the cross-objections by the respondent in appeal. The premises No. 56 Chetla Road is the khas property of the plaintiffs, and is known as Jamahata or Darjihata, where on every Wednesday a hat is held for the sale of ready made clothes, such as shirts, coats and other wearing apparel; and many hundreds of sellers with their goods congregate there. The Munsif made a local inspection of the place, and in his opinion, as recorded in his judgment, the place "was of enormous dimensions." According to the plaintiffs themselves, the sellers congregate under a structure made of corrugated iron sheets, once a week, and the sellers pay tolls to the plaintiffs. The question then is whether or not No. 56 Chetla Road is a "bazar" which under the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, means "any place of trade (other than a market) where there is a collection of shops." It has been pointed out that a shop according to the Oxford Dictionary is "a building or room set apart for the sale of merchandise." In Bouvier's Law Dictionary we find "a place kept and used for sale of goods" is a shop. The real meaning of the word "shop" as used in the Calcutta Municipal Act must however be ascertained according to the meaning which the word has acquired in the country or the locality where the statute is applicable, and that must be taken to be the ordinary meaning of the word. In Bengal generally, hats are held on a particular day or days in a week, while bazars are held daily. The hats and bazars consist of a number of shops, large and small—these shops are places in which goods are sold by retail. The meaning given to a bazar by the Calcutta Municipal Act does not therefore militate against the ordinary meaning of the word, and a bazar which is known as a hat for the reason that it is held on a particular day or days in the week, would not cease to be a bazar. That the sellers of commodities assemble only on one day at a bazar, and have no sort of right of occupying any particular place for the sale of their commodities cannot have the effect of taking the place occupied by them, out of the category of shops a collection of which would ordinarily be denominated a bazar and is a bazar within the meaning of the Calcutta Municipal Act. It would appear that S. 336, Bengal Municipal Act, defining a market to be a number of shops, stalls, or standings erected for the sale of goods, is more in accordance with state of things prevalent in this country than the somewhat artificial distinction made by the Calcutta Municipal Act which cannot be overlooked, as between a market and bazar and a stall and a shop, by provisions contained in Ss. 3 (5), 3 (39), 399 and 400 of the Act. It may sometimes be difficult to ascertain what the legislature exactly meant but we must determine what its language means: see Palmer v. Thatcher (1) at p. 353; Rothschild v. Inland Revenue (2) at p. 145. On giving a plain meaning to the language used in S. 3 (5), we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that premises No. 56 Chetla Road, described as a Jamahata or Darji-hata is a place of trade where there is a collection of shops, and as such the act of the Corporation of Calcutta in declaring the same to be a bazar was not ultra vires or illegal in any way. This disposes of the appeal by the plaintiffs in the suit; the declaration prayed for by the plaintiffs that the premises No. 56 Chetla Road was not a bazar must be refused.

As indicated already the respondent in this appeal has preferred cross-objections directed against the decision arrived at by the Courts below that the act of the Corporation of Calcutta in extending the limits of the bazar to premises Nos. 56/1 56/2 56/3 and 58

Chetla Road, was ultra vires. The position so far as this part of the case before us is concerned, appears to be this: the four premises mentioned above are the front portion of premises No. 56 Chitla Road, and they abut on the public road; they are held by tenants settled by the plaintiffs as the owners; the tenants so settled have their permanent shops there, which have been separately assessed and numbered by the Corporation, and in respect of which separate licenses are granted by the Corporation, license taxes being paid by the shopkeepers themselves. As held by us, premises No. 56 is a bazar and the question is whether the Corporation had the power vested in it under the law to determine the limits of that bazar by the inclusion of the four other premises mentioned above. The provisions contained in S. 400 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, under which the Corporation acted in this behalf give power to define the limits of any bazar. The power to define limits must, in our judgment include the power to extend the limits according to the facts and circumstances of a particular case. If in the opinion of the Corporation, it was expedient or necessary to include premises Nos. 56/1, 56/2, 56/3 and 58 Chetla Road within the limits of the bazar at No. 56, the action taken by the Corporation in this behalf could not be characterized as ultra vires or illegal.

The Resolution of the Calcutta Corporation, Ex. a (3), passed on 12th May 1926, shows clearly that these four premises along with premises No. 56 were declared to be a bazar and the previous Resolution of the Corporation dated 16th September 1925, defining the limit of the said bazar under S. 400, Calcutta Municipal Act, was adhered to. It would be doing violence to the language of the statute if we were to hold that there must be a previous Resolution passed, before action could be taken under S. 400 of the Act, for the purpose of defining the limits of a bazar; with a view either to extend the limits or curtail the same as the necessity of a case might require. Both the things could, under the law, as it stands, be done at the one and the same time as it appears to have been done in the case before us. The fact that the shops in the four premises in question were occupied by tenants under the plaintiffs, could not affect the operation of S. 400 in any way. The provisions of the law as contained in Ss. 399 and 400, speak of both the owner and the occupier, and it may be open to the owner or the occupier to raise any objection that he may be entitled to raise, when the Corporation takes action under any of those sections. It is somewhat difficult to appreciate how in the face of definite provisions of law, the "strong and valid" reasons, mentioned in the judgment of the trial Court and upon which stress was laid in the course of argument before us, could weigh in favour of the plaintiffs in the suit nor is it possible to hold that there was any equity in favour of the plaintiffs which could make the action of the Corporation ultra vires.

The position that the shopkeepers occupying the premises in question as tenants of the plaintiffs, had been granted separate licenses could not possibly stand in the way of amalgamation of these shops with the bazar at No. 56 Chetla Road and there was no question of unfairness on the part of the Corporation in its having taken action under S. 400, Calcutta Municipal Act. Our conclusion therefore is that the Courts below were not justified in granting a declaration to the plaintiffs in the suit that the act of the defendant Corporation in including premises Nos. 56/1, 56/2, 56/3 and 58 Chetla Road within the declared bazar at No. 56 Chetla Road, was ultra vires. It may be open to the plaintiffs on a prosecution being started by the Corporation against them to raise in defence, any objection that may be raised under the law, as the owners and not the occupiers of these premises, which in our judgment have legally been included within the limits of the bazar at No. 56 Chetla Road.

In the result the appeal by the plaintiffs is dismissed, and the cross-objections preferred by the defendant-respondent are allowed; the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed. The parties are to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal No. 2720 of 1930, Decided on 13th May 1932.

(a) Limitation Act (1908)—Applicability—Provisions of Act applicable—English decisions need not be referred to.

The Indian Limitation Act has to be followed by Courts in India in considering the rules of limitation applicable to a case; where there is sufficient guidance given by the provisions contained in the Limitation Act there is no justification for borrowing rules of limitation from decisions by Courts in England, based upon a statute altogether different in language from the statutory provisions contained in the Limitation Act. [P 327 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 20—Payment of principal by mortgagor after transferring portion of mortgaged property extends limitation against transferees.

A mortgagor after transferring a portion of the mortgage properties made payments towards the mortgage debt. Mortgagee brought the suit after 12 years from the date when the mortgage debt became payable but within 12 years from the repayments.

Held: that the suit against transferees also was not barred: 1 U L J 337, Dist. [P 327 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 1—Non-compliance is not fatal—Suit against all defendants—On death of one some representatives brought on record—Suit does not fail even partially—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 9 and O. 22, Rr. 4 and 5.

Non-compliance with the provisions of O. 34, R. 1 is not fatal to a suit for enforcing a mortgage and the provisions of O. 1, R. 9, are applicable to a mortgage suit.

Where after the death of one of the defendants who was a subsequent purchaser some but not all representatives were brought on record after notice, the suit does not fail for non-joinder whether partially or wholly: A I R 1925 Cal 152, Ref; 1 Pat L J 468, Foll. [P 328 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, Rr. 4 and 5—Suit by mortgagee—Legal representatives of one of defendants substituted after notice to all—Objection as to proper representation must be brought at earliest opportunity.

The question of representation of the interest of a defendant in a suit for enforcement of a mortgage cannot be allowed to be raised after the legal representatives of the deceased defendant have been substituted by the Court under O. 22, Rr. 4 and 5, on notice to all the parties concerned. Failure to object to the substitution at the earliest opportunity precludes the defendants to reopen the question of representation. [P 328 C 2]

Question of paramount title raised by the defendants if expressly left open by the Courts

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen prayed for a decree for sale of properties mortgaged by defendant 1 in the suit. The mortgage was executed in favour of Srinath Maity on 14th Chaitra 1314 A. S. and all the plaintiffs are interested in the same as members of a Hindu joint family. The properties mortgaged consisted of several plots of land, and we are only concerned with plots 6, 7 and 8 mentioned in the plaint. The plaintiffs' claim in suit was resisted by the defendants. The mortgagor, defendant 1, raised all possible defences available to him, including the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. It may be mentioned that all the pleas raised by defendant 1 have been overruled by the Courts below, and the appeal before us does not relate to the case sought to be made out by defendant 1. Defendants 4 to 9, 11 and 12, appellants in this Court, contested the suit as persons claiming through one Baidyanath Mondal, the purchaser of plots 6, 7 and 8 from defendant 1 and his brother Chaitanya Charan Sow, by two different kabalas executed on 10th Agrahayan and 14th Agrahayan 1316 B. S. It was alleged that after the purchase by Baidyanath, there was recognition of the transfer by the plaintiffs, who were co-sharer landlords in respect of the properties purchased from defendant 1 and his brother. A question of estoppel was raised by the defendants so far as this part of the case was concerned. The defendants pleaded limitation, and contended that the suit instituted after the expiry of twelve years from the date fixed for payment of the mortgage money was barred by time.

A question of marshalling also appears to have been attempted to be raised by the defendants. The position sought to be taken up by them in this part of the case was this: that their predecessor-in-interest was a bona fide purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged properties without notice of the plaintiffs' mortgage, and they were therefore entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of marshalling, and that at any rate the properties 6, 7 and 8 of which they were purchasers should be sold, if necessary, after the other mortgaged properties had been sold. Another aspect of the case for defendants 4 to 9, 11 and 12 arising out of events that happened in the course of the suit, and during its pendency in the trial Court, requires notice. One of the defendants No. 10 died on 10th August 1927. The two brothers of that defendant already on the record were substituted in his place as the legal representatives of the deceased defendant; but the mother of defendant 10 was not brought on the record. On this state of facts it was sought to be made out that the suit should have been dismissed on the ground of non-joinder of necessary party.

The trial Court totally negatived the defence of the contesting defendants in the suit, and passed a mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiffs in usual terms, directing the sale of the mortgaged properties in default of payment of the mortgage debt in terms of the decree. On appeal by defendants 4 to 9, 11 and 12 the learned Additional District Judge modified the decision and decree passed by the trial Court on the ground that the suit had abated so far as the mother of the deceased defendant 10 was concerned, and reduced the amount of the mortgage debt recoverable by the plaintiffs in the suit by the amount of Rs. 65. Defendants 4 to 9, 11 and 12 have appealed to this Court, and cross-objections have been preferred by the plaintiffs in regard to the reduction of the mortgage debt recoverable by them by Rs. 65 as mentioned above. (The question of estoppel was held against the defendants on facts and the judgment proceeded). The plea of limitation raised by the defendants rested, as indicated above upon the fact that payments made towards the satisfaction of mortgage debt after the purchase of Baidyanath Mondal in 1316, could not be of any avail to the plaintiffs, seeing that the suit was instituted more than 12 years after the date fixed for repayment of the mortgage money. Reliance was placed on Newbould v. Smith (1), in support of this position. That case no doubt is an authority for the proposition that payment of interest by the mortgagor who remained liable, ex contractu to pay the debt, though he had previously assigned the mortgaged property to a third person was in a suit to enforce the mortgage security, held to be insufficient to keep alive the mortgagee's claim against the assignee and the mortgaged property. The decision in Newbould v. Smith (1) is in conflict with the view expressed on the subject by the Privy Council in Lewin v. Wilson (2), and the correctness of the decision was questioned before the House of Lords [see Newbould v. Smith (3) at pp. 426 and 428]; but their Lordships did not express any opinion on the decision one way or the other. So far as this Court is concerned Newbould v. Smith (1) has not been followed, and Lewin v. Wilson (2) was given the preference in a suit for possession under Art. 146, Sch. 2, Lim. Act, 1877, Domi Lal v. Roshan Doley (4). The Limitation Act has to be followed by Courts in India in considering the rules of limitation applicable to a case; and whereas in a case—so the one before us, there is sufficient guidance given by the provisions contained in Ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act, there would be no justification in our borrowing rules of limitation from decisions by Courts in England, based upon a statute altogether different in language from the statutory provisions contained in Ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act. Furthermore, in the case before us, the purchaser-defendants were transferees from the mortgagor in respect of a portion only of the mortgaged property, consisting of several items; and in such a case, there can be no doubt that the rule laid down by the House of Lords in Chinnery v. Evans (5) at p. 135, namely, that where estates A, B and C are included in one mortgage, and the owner of A pays interest, the mortgagee's remedy against B and C is preserved, is the rule that must be applied.

The mortgagor, in the case before us, had in him the title to 9 bighas 10 cottahs of land after the sale to Baidyanath Mondal, the predecessor-in-interest of defendants 4 to 9, 11 and 12 in 1316, of the plots 6, 7 and 8 out of the several items of the mortgaged properties; and as such there is no substance in the contention advanced by the defendants that payments by the mortgagor towards the satisfaction of the mortgage debt after 1316, could not keep the mortgagees right alive, so far as the enforcement of the mortgage security was concerned. It may be mentioned that the decision of this Court in the case of Surjiram Marwari v. Berhamdeo Persad (6), which has been cited before us in support of the appellants' contention on the question of limitation does not appear to throw any light on the point arising for consideration in the present case, in view of the facts and circumstances mentioned above. In that case Mookerjee, J., based his views as expressed at pp. 314 to 316 on the decision in Holding v. Lane (7) and quoted from Lord Westbury's judgment which contained amongst other things, observations like these: The mortgagor or his representatives who have no interest whatever in the lands, should not be enabled to charge the estate anew with any amount of arrears of interest against second and subsequent mortgagees, and that a departure from such a course would involve consequences inconsistent with natural justice. The learned Judge Mookerjee, J., also referred to Chinnery v. Evans (5) in dealing with the facts of the particular case before him. It is difficult to make out how the decision in Surjiram Marwari's case (6) or any of the observations made by Mookerjee, J., in that case could support the appellants' position so far as the question of limitation was concerned, in view of the fact that the mortgagor-defendant 1, in the suit, had an interest left in him in a portion of the mortgaged properties; when payments were made by him towards the satisfaction of the mortgage debt in 1322, 1327, 1329 and 1332, well within 12 years before the institution of the suit out of which the appeal has arisen. The contentions raised on behalf of the appellants leaning upon the question of limitation must, in our judgment, be overruled.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that the suit brought by the plaintiffs had abated as a whole, on the failure on the part of the plaintiffs to bring all the heirs of defendant 10 on the record within the time allowed by law. With reference to the question of abatement thus raised, mention has already been made of the fact that two of the brothers of that defendant 10 were substituted by the plaintiffs in proper time; no objection as to non-representation or want of complete representation of the interest of defendant 10, was raised when the other defendants had notice of the application for substitution made by the plaintiffs in the suit. The order for substitution was duly made by the trial Court, on 3rd September 1927. The fact that defendant 1 had a mother living, came out at that stage of the suit when witnesses were being examined by the defendants, after examination of the witnesses for the plaintiffs in Court. One of the witnesses for the defendants stated in his deposition that defendant 10 who had died, had his mother living at the time of his death. The point made by the defendants-appellants comes to this. There was no complete representation of the interest of defendant 10 in the suit after that defendant's demise. There was a fatal defect on account of non-joinder of a necessary party in the mortgage suit, and the suit must therefore fail. So far as non-joinder of parties is concerned, the suit could not be defeated in its entirety on that ground.

It is well settled now, so far as this Court is concerned, that non-compliance with the provisions of O. 34, R. 1, Civil P.C., was not fatal to a suit for enforcing a mortgage and that the provisions of O. 1, R. 9 were applicable to a mortgage suit: see Khirdamoyee v. Habib Shuh (8) and the cases referred to there. The decision of the Patna High Court in Girwar Narayan v. Mt. Mahbunnessa (9), on which reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants cannot be accepted, in so far as it goes against the decisions of this Court, on the question under consideration. Furthermore, the case before the Patna High Court related to the non-joinder of the mortgagee as a plaintiff in a mortgage suit, and cannot be accepted as laying down the rule that O. 1, R. 9 was controlled by O. 34, R. 1, Civil P.C., even in the case of subsequent purchasers in the position of defendants-appellants before us. So far as non-representation of the complete interest of defendant 10 was concerned, the question has to be decided on the basis of the facts of the case before us. The question of representation of the interest of defendant 10 in the suit, could not be allowed to be raised after the legal representative of the deceased defendant had been substituted by the Court under O. 22, Rr. 4 and 5, Civil P.C., on notice to all the parties concerned. Failure to object to the substitution of defendants 8 and 9 in the place of defendant 10 at the earliest opportunity precluded the defendants-appellants to reopen the question of representation of the interest of defendant 10 in the suit: see Meenatchi Achi v. Anantha Narayana Ayyar (10); and Balabai v. Ganes Shankar (11). The mere fact that there was a mother living at the time of the death of defendant 10 elicited during the examination of a witness in Court, long after the order for substitution of the legal representatives of that defendant had been made, would not, in our judgment, enable the defendants-appellants to succeed on the question of abatement of the mortgage suit as a whole; or for the matter of that in respect of the interest of defendant 10 with interest, if any, of the mother of defendant. In the above view of the case we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that no question of abatement in any shape, could arise in the case before us; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for the entire amount due on the mortgage bond, on the basis of which the plaintiffs had instituted their suit.

The question of marshalling attempted to be raised by the defendants-appellants, cannot properly be gone into in the case before us, where the rights of subsequent purchasers in the position of those defendants are concerned in view of the definite provisions contained in S. 81, T. P. Act. So far as the point pressed before us that the Court should direct the sale of mortgaged properties other than those conveyed to the defendants-appellants in the first instance, for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt was concerned, we need only observe that we are unable to find any such equity in favour of the appellants which might enable them to get a relief of that description. The question of paramount title as raised by the defendants-appellants, has been expressly left open by the Courts below. In our judgment the Courts below have, in accordance with the trend of judicial decisions, rightly—held that the title of Chaitanya Charan Sow, the brother of defendant 1, as pleaded by the contesting defendants, could not be decided in the present case; and as mentioned by the learned Additional District Judge in the Court of appeal below, the rule of res judicata will not operate against the appellants in any way, if they desire to agitate that question of title hereafter in any Court of justice.

The learned advocate for the plaintiffs-respondents has urged before us, that according to a stipulation contained in the mortgage bond, on the basis of which the suit out of which the appeal has arisen, was instituted, the right of alienation in any form was expressly prohibited, so far as the mortgagor was concerned and as such the purchasers (defendants 4 to 12) were not necessary parties at all, that the mortgagors were entitled to a decree against the properties in the hands of the purchasers by virtue of unauthorized transfers. The point raised in this behalf was not considered in any form, by the Courts below; and we are not prepared to go into the matter in second appeal. Furthermore, it is not at all necessary for us, to decide the question raised for the first time before us in view of the conclusions we have arrived at in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents, on other points arising for determination in this appeal. In the result the appeal is dismissed and the cross-objections preferred by the plaintiffs-respondents are allowed. The decree of the Court of appeal below so far as it modified the decrees of the trial Court is set aside, and the decree of the trial Court is restored. The plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to their costs in this Court and the costs in the Court of appeal below. We make no separate order as to costs in the cross-objections.

Taraprasanna Ganguly and others—Decree-holders—Appellants.

v.

Naresh Chandra Chakrabarty and others—
Judgment-debtors—Respondents.

Appeal No. 211 of 1932, Decided on 25th January 1933.

(a) Decree—Construction—Reasonable construction should be put.

A reasonable construction must always be put on a decree and the Court should always lean against a construction which renders a decree inexecutable. [P 331 C 2]

(b) Decree—Liability under—Decree against managing committee of school is binding on school and can be executed against assets of school—Members paying debt are entitled to be indemnified out of assets of school—Civil P. C., O. 1, R. 8.

A decree against the managing committee of an unincorporated association, for example a school, with a direction that the managing committee are not personally liable must be reasonably construed to mean a decree against them in their representative capacity and binds the school even if the members of the managing committee change after the decree; such a decree can be executed against the assets of the school at the time of execution; it is enough if all the members of the present managing committee are on the record before execution is to proceed with and the members of the managing committee if they pay the debt due by the school are liable to be indemnified out of the assets of the institution. [P 331 C 2; P 332 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 8—Suit against all members of managing committee of school—Addition of another member due to change in personnel of committee long after time in appeal does not make representation ineffective.

In a suit against a school, all the members of the managing committee on date of suit were impleaded. A member who came into the committee subsequently owing to a change in the personnel of the committee was added as a party only long after the time in the appeal.

Held: that O. 1, R. 8, did not apply to the case and that as the committee stood in law for the school, the decree against them binds the school irrespective of the change in the personnel of the committee. [P 332 C 1]*Atul Chandra Gupta and Amarendra Mohan Mitra—*for Appellants.*S. C. Basak, Jitendra K. Sen Gupta and Satindra N. Roy Chowdhury—*for Respondents.Mitter, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the decree-holders and is directed against an order dismissing their application for execution of a money decree obtained in their favour. The circumstances which have led to the order appealed against may be briefly stated thus: The appellants instituted a suit against the Secretary, Ex-Officio President and the then members of the Madaripur Donovan Girls' School Committee, (who were all named in the plaint) for recovery of Rs. 5,728 due on bills on account of a contract entered into on 7th March 1925 between the appellants and the then school committee for the construction of the school premises. Various defences were taken in the suit amongst which it is necessary to notice only one, namely, that the suit was not maintainable as the personnel of the managing committee had changed since the date of the agreement. On 9th February 1931 the appellants' suit was decreed in part for Rs. 1,561-12-0 with interest Rs. 699-8-0 and costs and it was directed that the decree shall not be executed personally against the defendants. Against this decree the plaintiffs-appellants preferred an appeal to the High Court (F. A. No. 148 of 1931) in which the defendants to the suit preferred cross-objections. Both the appeal and the cross-objections are pending determination in this Court. It may be mentioned here that on the issue as to the maintainability of the suit in the form in which it was laid was decided in favour of the plaintiff and the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that:

"there is no reason why the suit could not be legally instituted against the institution although its members were changed."

The appellants applied for the execution of the decree in execution case No. 59 of 1931; and as after the decree in the suit three members of the managing committee went out of office and three new members were substituted in their place, the appellants brought the new members on the record and subsequently another member Miss Kiranbala De, was added as a party to the execution proceedings as another new member of the school committee. The plaintiffs-appellants prayed for attachment and sale of the moveables of the judgment-debtor which were lying in the Donovan Girls' School and Boarding premises and of the money lying in certain Madaripur Banks in the name of the Secretary and Joint Secretary as also of other moneys held by the Secretary on behalf of the School Committee either with himself or in the Madaripur Post Office. The plaintiffs prayed that if necessary the attachment and the sale of the immovable properties of the judgment-debtor might also be effected. Various objections were raised in three petitions of objections (1) by 8 members of the old school committee, (2) by the three new members, (3) by another new member in three miscellaneous cases. The principal objections need only be noticed. They are: (a) that the decree cannot be executed against the assets of the school, (b) that the decree was not against the committee or at all events not against the present committee as the personnel of the committee has since changed. These objections have prevailed with the Subordinate Judge below. Hence the present appeal by the plaintiffs' decree-holders. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that as there is no decree against some of the present members of the school committee the petition for execution can only be executed against what the present members and the outgoing members held or owned as the managing committee of the school and the petition must be dismissed. The lower Court recognizes that this position sounds startling and absurd, but nevertheless gives effect to the objection as he considers that his duty is to construe the decree as he finds it. His reasoning is that the school committee is not a Corporation which remains constant though its members change; that it is not a firm, that it was not sued as a fluctuating class by a representation under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., and that on no conceivable theory he could call the new members judgment-debtors. Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta who appears for the appellants has attacked this reasoning of the Subordinate Judge with great force. He contends that beyond a Corporation and a firm there are certain things as holders of office and that the members of the school committee really formed a body of trustees which does not change with the change of its personnel and refers to a passage in Lewin on Trusts (Edn. 13 at p. 235) and to the provisions of the Trusts Act (2 of 1832), Ss. 75 and 76, as embodying the rules of equity, justice and good conscience in support of his contention. The Trusts Act, it may be mentioned, does not apply to Bengal. He contends that the managing committee hold the property or the assets of the institution and that the present execution can be levied against the assets of the institution in the hands of the managing committee for the time being. He argues that if the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is upheld, no school committee in this province can get anything done except on the cash system.

"as the petition for execution was not on that footing as the former body was not on the petition."

In reply for the respondent Dr. Basak argues that the decree is really a decree against certain members of the committee and points out that there is no trust deed in this case and in the absence of such a deed the property of the institution cannot be regarded as having vested in the members of the committee on behalf of the school. It is also said for the respondent that the committee is not a legal entity and its legal position is that it is not a person at all. It is argued that the Court never intended to pass a decree against the committee much less against the school properties and refers to the circumstance that the prayer "Kha" of the plaint was struck off by an order dated 19th January 1931. The prayer "Kha" was to the effect that a decree should be given for realization of the decretal amount from the school fund of the Madaripur Donovan Girls' school and if the decretal amount be not realized from the said fund then a decree should be passed for realization of the decretal amount by the sale of the moveable and immovable properties of the Donovan Girls' School. In support of the contention that an unincorporated institution is not an association which is legally recognized reference has been made to Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 4, p. 420, para. 903.

It is true that an unincorporated members' club is not a partnership and questions frequently arise as to who are the persons liable for goods supplied to such a club or on contracts professedly made on its behalf; it has been held that trustees of committee of management of such clubs have only such authority to contract on behalf of the members generally as may be given to them expressly or by necessary implications by the rules. An ordinary club is formed upon the tacit understanding, judicially recognized, that no member as such becomes liable to pay its funds or otherwise any money beyond the subscriptions required by its rules : see: Wise v. Perpetual Trustee Co. Ltd. (1). In the same case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee laid down that trustees of a club who have incurred liability under onerous covenants contained in a lease accepted by them on its behalf are entitled to indemnity out of any property of the club to which their lien as trustees extends. The analogy of clubs does not really apply to the present case. The only decree that could be passed in the present case is a decree against those who represent the public in their affairs of the school and all such members for the time being were made parties to the suit, and in passing the decree the Court was careful enough to state that the members of the managing committee were not to be personally liable. The intention of the Court was that they are to be liable in a representative capacity.

The decree might have been more explicit but a reasonable construction must always be put on a decree and the Court should always lean against a construction which would render a decree inexecutable. The only reasonable construction seems to be that the decree was passed against persons representing the institution and must bind the institution even if at the time of execution of the decree there has been some change in the personnel of the representatives. In this view it is not necessary to consider the preliminary objection taken that Dharendra Nath Das, one of the present members of the committee was added as a party long after time in this appeal, for where several persons were sued in a representative capacity the addition of one of such representatives on the record of the appeal after time does not really make the representation any the less effective. I am therefore of opinion that this appeal should be allowed. The order of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and he is directed to proceed with the execution of the decree in the manner asked for by the decree-holders appellants. In all the circumstances there will be no order as to costs.

My conclusions may be summarized as follows: The decree against the managing committee of an unincorporated association for example, a school like the Donovan Girls' School with a direction that the managing committee are not personally liable must be reasonably construed to mean a decree against them in their representative capacity and binds the school even if the members of the managing committee change after the decree, such a decree can be executed against the assets of the school at the time of execution; it is enough if all the members of the present managing committee are on the record before execution is proceeded with; the members of the managing committee if they pay the debt due by the school are liable to be indemnified out of the assets of the institution; that O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., has no application to the present case as all the members of the managing committee at the date of the suit were sued; that the managing committee stood in law for the school and therefore the decree against them binds the school. In the present suit which is against the managing committee of the school in their representative capacity if there is a change in the members of the representative body there is really a devolution of interest within the meaning of O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C., and the preliminary objection raised by one of the respondents must fail although properly speaking the new member ought to have been added as a party on notice. We have however heard his learned advocate, and the objection by him is not of substance.

Criminal Revn. No. 735 of 1932, Decided on 22nd November 1932.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 294-A — Irish Sweep Stake ticket containing proposals for payment of different sums to holders of tickets—Publishing such report held came within S. 294-A.

The ticket contained a proposal for the payment of different sums for the benefit of the holders of such tickets. A circular of the Irish Sweep Stake which was referred to in one of the letters written by or found in possession of the accused showed that the Irish Hospital Sweep Stake was expected to reach the huge total of £5,000,000 or seven crores of rupees. The letter stated that applications should be made with Rs. 7-8-0 per ticket to the petitioner. The money was stated to be divided on each unit of £100,000 as follows: 50 first prizes of £30,000 or over four lacs of rupees each, 50 second prizes of £15,000 or over two lacs of rupees each, 50 third prizes of £10,000 or over 1½ lacs of rupees each, 1200 prizes of Rs. 12,000 to Rs. 15,000 each and 5,000 cash prizes of £200 or Rs. 2,750 each.

Held: that the case did come within the mischief of S. 294-A. [P 333 C 1]

A. K. Fazlul Huq and Nanibhusan Mukherji—for Petitioner.

D. N. Bhattacharji—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This rule was issued on the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why the conviction of and the sentence passed on the petitioner Rabindra Nath Dhar under S. 294-A, I. P. C., should not be set aside. The first ground on which this Rule is supported is that the sanction of the Local Government was not obtained as it was necessary to have been obtained under S. 196, Criminal P. C., before cognizance could be taken of an offence under S. 294-A, I. P. C. The point which is made by Mr. Fazlul Huq who appears for the petitioner is that this sanction was not exhibited in Court till 10th June 1932, whereas the cognizance was taken of the case on the complaint of the Police Inspector on 26th May 1932. If he had been able to substantiate this point the Rule would have been made absolute. Unfortunately for his client it appears that this sanction of the Local Government which was signed by Mr. Reid, Officiating Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, is dated 18th May 1932 and was annexed to the petition of complaint and was marked as Ex. B. The complainant was examined and processes were directed to be issued on 27th May 1932, so that cognizance was taken of the case after the complaint was lodged and the complaint was made by the order of or under the authority from the Local Government within the meaning of S. 196, Criminal P. C. There is therefore really no substance in this point taken by Mr. Huq.

The next ground on which this conviction is attacked is that the entire evidence even if believed does not bring the case within para. 2, S. 294-A, I. P. C. It appears that the present petitioner was charged for publishing a proposal to pay a sum of money or to deliver any goods on an event or contingency relative or applicable to the drawing of a ticket, lot, number or figure in a lottery not authorized by Government. So far as the Chindernigore Sweep Stake is concerned of which the petitioner claims to be the head organizer there is no question that he has not been able to produce any paper to show that this lottery was authorized. It is argued by Mr. Huq that no evidence was adduced by the Crown that the Irish Sweep Stake was not authorized by the Government. It appears however that evidence has been given in this case that this is an unauthorized lottery by the Police Inspector who was examined in the case. So far as the Irish Sweep Stake is concerned it is not even authorized in England, far less is it authorized by the Government of India. The ticket itself contains a proposal for the payment of different sums for the benefit of the holders of such tickets. It appears from a circular of the Irish Sweep Stake which is referred to in one of the letters written by or found in the possession of the present petitioner that the Irish Hospital Sweep Stake is expected to reach the huge total of £5,000,000 or seven crores of rupees. The said letter states that applications should be made with Rs. 7.8.0 per ticket to R. N. Dhar. The above money it is stated in that circular will be divided on each unit of £100,000 as follows: 50 first prizes of £10,000 or over four lacs of rupees each, 50 second prizes of £15,000 or over two lacs of rupees each, 50 third prizes of £10,000 or over 1½ lacs of rupees each, 1200 prizes of Rs. 12,000 to Rs. 15,000 each and 5000 cash prizes of £200 or Rs. 2,750 each. It is difficult to hold having regard to the correspondence which has been disclosed in this case that the case of the petitioner does not come within the mischief of S. 291-A, I. P. C. I am of opinion that the conviction is justified by the provisions of this section.

A question that may however arise is whether the sentence of fine of Rs. 200 is too severe. This is the first offence of the kind so far as the petitioner is concerned and some consideration may be given to the circumstance that the petitioner says that he did not know that the Irish Hospitals' Sweep Stake was an unauthorized lottery. It is true that ignorance of law is no excuse, but one may in awarding sentence take into consideration the fact that the accused was not cognizant of the fact that the Irish Hospitals Sweep Stake was an unauthorized lottery. My attention has been drawn by Mr. Bhattacharjee to a letter addressed to the petitioner by the Irish Hospitals Trust Ltd., Dublin, to the effect that:

"wholesale distribution by the means suggested, viz., advertisement, circularizing, &c., is almost certain to bring you into conflict with the authorities."

It may be that the petitioner might not have understood the full import of this statement. I think the ends of justice will be met in this case by reducing the sentence to a fine of Rs. 50 (rupees fifty only). Mr. Bhattacharjee who appears for the Crown rightly says that according to the practice which is followed by Crown counsel he leaves the question of sentence to the Court. The result is that the fine imposed on the petitioner is reduced to Rs. 50. If the fine has already been realized, the portion of the fine remitted, i. e., Rs. 150, will be refunded to the petitioner.

Narendra Kumar Bose and Pares Lal Shome—for Petitioner.

Khundkar and Anil Chandra Ray Choudhury—for the Crown.

Pearson, J.—This Rule was issued on the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet calling on him to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner's daughter and the other accused should not be set aside. It appears that the two accused in the case were two ladies, named Probhabati Dhar and Surobala Dey, and that they were convicted and sentenced under S. 4, Ordinance 5 of 1932 to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment each and a fine of Rs. 150 each. In default of the payment of the fine they were to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment in each case. The decision of the Magistrate was given on 16th February 1932. Neither of the accused appealed against the decision, but an application was made on 1st March 1932 by the present applicant, the father of one of the accused, to the Sessions Judge of Sylhet. That Judge decided that he should not go into the merits and that it was not open to him to entertain an application of that nature made by a third person.

The present Rule was issued on 6th June 1932 at which time the accused had served some three and a half months out of the sentence. At the time of the issue of the Rule an order was made staying the payment of the fine and permitting the two accused persons to be released on bail to the satisfaction of the Deputy Commissioner. The term of imprisonment has however now been served out due to the fact that neither of the accused thought fit to avail themselves of the bail order. So far as the application before us is concerned it has not been contended by the Crown, for the purposes of the present application, that this Court has no jurisdiction or no right to deal with the matter although it is presented to the Court by some person other than the accused themselves. But the contention of the Crown is that upon the facts it is not such a case in which this Court should interfere in the exercise of its powers. The learned advocate for the applicant, the father of one of the accused, has argued before us that once we assume the right to deal with the matter we ought to interfere in the case, because the matter is one in which it appears that the Magistrate in passing his order has not in fact come to sufficient findings to bring the matter within the provisions of S. 3, Ordinance 5 of 1932, and also on the ground that the evidence on which he does rely amounted to evidence of confession to a Police Officer: it therefore ought to be rejected, or at any rate no conviction should be based upon it.

The allegation in the case was that the accused were picketing in front of foreign cloth shops in that locality on this particular day, and that in so doing they were guilty of an offence under S. 4 of the Ordinance. It appears that the accused declined to cross examine and when asked at the trial whether they had anything to say to the evidence against them they both said they have nothing to say. In these circumstances, as the Magistrate points out, the allegations on the side of the prosecution were uncontradicted, and after a reference to the evidence in the case he found them guilty under S. 4 of the Ordinance, because he says that by loitering around foreign cloth shops they were intentionally interfering with and obstructing customers in their legitimate rights. In dealing with the evidence, he in the main insists upon the evidence of the Sub-Inspector, P. W. 3, and that part of the evidence in particular in which he deposed that he explained to the accused that picketing was illegal under the Ordinance and tried to persuade them to move off, but on finding it useless and receiving replies from one of them that she was not recognizing any authority, but that of the Congress and from the other that she was going to picket, he ordered their arrest.

It is said that so far as that part of the Magistrate's judgment is concerned, he was not relying on the evidence that picketing had already taken place, but that they were going to picket. It is quite clear from a reference to the evidence which has been placed before us that there was evidence on the record of more than one witness to the effect that both of the accused were in fact picketing in front of the foreign cloth shops in the bazar, and that they were preventing purchasers from buying English cloths. It appears to me clear enough, having regard to that evidence, that it is not a matter in which we ought to interfere in revision, and that the evidence as it stands is quite sufficient to bring the matter within the terms of the Ordinance referred to. More than that, I would say that a proper appreciation of the Magistrate's judgment does in fact show that he was relying upon that evidence, because he found them guilty under S. 4 of the Ordinance on the ground that by loitering around foreign cloth shops they were intentionally interfering and obstructing customers in their legitimate rights. It is quite clear that he does accept that part of the evidence though he does also rely upon portions to which he has referred in greater detail, namely, as regards the immediate reasons for ordering the arrest of those two accused.

Mr. Basu has also contended that seeing that it is now a matter of fine it is not one that ought to be now brought against the accused. In certain cases it is correct to say no doubt that where a substantial term of imprisonment has been inflicted it may be inappropriate to add a fine, but it is difficult to see how we can apply a principle of that kind to the present case, in particular to this class of offence, and more especially when the Ordinance specifically provides for the imposition of a fine either separately or along with a substantial term of imprisonment. I am quite satisfied that this is a case in which we ought not to interfere in any particular in favour of the accused persons. I accordingly discharge this Rule.

Secretary of State—Opposite Party.

P. C. Appeal No. 35 of 1927, Decided on 18th April 1932.

Practice—Decree—Amendment—Mistake in High Court decree found after confirmation by Privy Council—Mistake was corrected by High Court.

After the Privy Council had affirmed the High Court judgment, the appellant before their Lordships for the first time discovered that an item of court-fees paid by the opposite party on the memorandum of appeal was twice included in the High Court decree. On an application by the appellant to their Lordships, the High Court amended the decree by correcting the mistake: P. C. Appeals Nos. 23 and 21 of 1927, decided on 31st August 1931, Foll.

[P 336 C 2]

Balaram Basu—for Petitioner.

Sarat Chandra Basak and Nasim Ali
—for Opposite Party.

Facts of the case appear from the following application to amend the decree:

1. That the learned Collector of Calcutta awarded Rs. 69,778 to your petitioner as the value of his land in premises No. 10, Michael Datta Street, Khidderpur, but your petitioner claimed Rs. 85,107 as the value of the same and at the instance of your petitioner a reference was made under S. 18, Act 1 of 1894 (Land Acquisition Act) to the learned Land Acquisition Judge at Alipore.

2. That the learned Special Land Acquisition Judge at Alipore enhanced the award of the learned Collector by Rs. 11,995 together with Rs. 1,799-4-0 statutory allowance on the said sum making a total of Rs. 13,794-4-0 to be paid by the opposite party to the claimant.

3. That the above named opposite party being dissatisfied with the judgment and decree passed by S. K. Ghosh, Esq., Special Land Acquisition Judge, 24-Pargannas in Land Acquisition Case No. 89 of 1920 (valuation) on 3rd April 1925, preferred the above mentioned appeal from the original decree against the above named objector to this Hon'ble Court valuing the above named appeal at Rs. 13,794-4-0, and for the Memorandum of the said appeal, the sum of Rs. 15, had been paid as court-fees under Art. 17 (iv), Court-fees Act.

4. That on 20th May 1927, when the above named appeal came up for hearing before their Lordships B. B. Ghosh and G. N. Roy, JJ., their Lordships directed the appellant opposite party to pay ad valorem court-fees on the value of the said appeal and the deficit court-fees of the sum of Rs. 915 was paid by the appellant opposite party on 24th May 1927.

5. That on 23rd May 1927, their Lordships B. B. Ghosh and G. N. Roy, JJ., were pleased to allow the above mentioned first appeal with costs and set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Special Land Acquisition Judge at Alipore and thus confirmed the award of the learned Land Acquisition Collector, Calcutta.

6. That in the decree which was drawn up in the said appeal and signed by the Hon'ble Judges, the sum of Rs. 915 the additional court-fees paid by the appellant opposite party as stated above was included twice in the schedule of costs on account of clerical mistake of the officer who drew up the said decree.

7. That the above mistake escaped the notice of your petitioners' advocate in the High Court.

8. That your petitioner being dissatisfied with the judgment and decree of this Hon'ble Court preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Privy Council being Privy Council Appeal No. 35 of 1927 but on 15th May 1930, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee dismissed the said appeal with costs. That in the grounds of appeal as presented to His Majesty in Council no ground was taken about the aforesaid mistake in the decree for costs as passed by this Hon'ble Court.

9. That on 9th June 1931, the opposite party filed an application for execution of the said decrees against your petitioner in the Court of the Land Acquisition Judge at Alipore, 24-Pargannas being execution case No. 6 of 1931 and the prayer in the execution petition included costs of learned Acquisition Judge's Court Rs. 181-11-2 with interest at six per cent, per annum from 18th August 1925, costs of the High Court appeal Rs. 2,444-9-5, with interest at six per cent per annum from 23rd May 1927; Privy Council appeal costs £ 316-4-11.

10. That the said sum of Rs. 2,444-9-5, stated to be Rs. 2,444-9-5, stated to be costs awarded by this Hon'ble Court include Rs. 915 twice, as stated above.

11. That the opposite party was informed by your petitioners' pleader at Alipore to withdraw the security deposited by your petitioner in this Hon'ble Court for the costs of the appeal in the Privy Council.

12. That the opposite party having taken steps to realize the balance for which the execution was originally prayed for from your petitioner, your petitioner's pleader at Alipore, Mr. Krishna Nath Basu B.L., discovered for the first time on 22nd February 1932 that by mistake, the decree for costs passed by this Hon'ble Court included the sum of Rs. 915 twice over.

13. That your petitioner has, accordingly been advised to move this Hon'ble Court for amendment of the decree in the aforesaid appeal dated 23rd May 1927, by debiting from the costs decreed against your petitioner the sum of Rs. 915 which has been included therein with.

[The matter came up before Mukerji and Guha, J.J., who called for office report by their order dated 23rd March 1932. The report was submitted by

Mr. B. D. Ahmad, Offg. Dy. Registrar, dated 6th April 1932:]

Report.—With reference to the Court's order, dated 23rd March 1932. Attention is respectfully invited to an order dated 31st August 1931 passed by the Bench presided over by the Hon'ble the Acting Chief Justice in P. C. A. Nos. 23 and 24/27, permitting the amendment of a decree of this Court after the final disposal of the appeals by the Privy Council. The decrees, however, in those cases were reversed and not affirmed.

Lay before the Bench presided over by the Hon'ble Mukerji, J.

[The order referred to in the report above was as follows:]

"In the circumstances stated, it being quite clear that the omission to file a vakalatnama on behalf of the plaintiff in F.A. 70 of 1924 in this Court was due to inadvertence, the appearance of the learned advocate for the plaintiff in the said appeal may be recognized and regularised, i.e., the plaintiff will be allowed to file a vakalatnama in the said appeal and thereafter the necessary corrections will be made in the decree of this Court in F. A. No. 70 of 1924 and after that a certificate of costs incurred by the plaintiff in the said appeal in this Court will be prepared. Inasmuch as this application has been rendered necessary because of the carelessness and negligence of the said plaintiff, he must pay to the other side the costs of this hearing which we assess at 6 gold mohurs. The payment of such costs namely of six gold mohurs is a condition precedent to the preparation of this certificate of costs."

[On receipt of this report Mukerji and Guha, J.J., passed an order dated 8th April 1932 to the following effect:]

Order.—In view of the precedent which the office has referred to in its note dated 6th April 1932, this petition is sent to the Privy Council Department so that it may be placed before the Bench presided over by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and taking Privy Council matters.

[The matter then came up for hearing before Rankin, C. J. and Costello, J., who passed the final order by amending the decree as prayed for in the petition.]

Final order.—Let the decree of this Court be amended by correcting the mistake as prayed for in the petition.

Bhagwandas Madanlal—Decree-holder—Appellants.

v.

Nabin Chandra Chowdhury — Surety—Respondent.

Appeal No. 51 of 1932, Decided on 24th June 1932, against order of Sub-Judge, 4th Class, 24 Parganas, D/- 6th October 1931.

Principal and Surety—Surety for appearance of judgment-debtor—Appearance by judgment-debtor and payment of part of decree debt and acceptance of such amount by decree-holder's pleader — Surety is discharged—Contract Act (1872), S. 135.

A surety bond was executed for appearance of judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor himself surrendered and paid a part of the decree debt which was accepted by the pleader of the decree-holder. For subsequent non-appearance of the judgment-debtor the surety was sought to be proceeded against.

Held: under the above circumstances the surety was discharged.

Held further: that though rule laid down in S. 135, Contract Act, was not strictly applicable to the case, there was some sort of similarity in the provisions of the section: A I R 1932 Cal 853, Dist. [P 338 C 1, 2]

Rupendra Kumar Mitra, Ratnendra Nath Ghose and Rabindra Nath Ghose—for Appellants.

Guha, J.—The decree-holder, appellant in this appeal, obtained a decree against the firm Kailas Chandra Sashi Bhusan Roy on 13th August 1929. The application for execution of the decree so passed in favour of the decree-holder was made on 15th November 1930. On 19th December 1930, the judgment-debtor Sashi Bhusan Roy was brought under arrest. Sashi Bhusan Roy and he filed a petition of objection under S. 47, Civil P. C.

It appears from the order recorded in the order sheet of the Execution case on 19th December 1930, that the judgment-debtor Sashi Bhusan Roy was released on his furnishing security "to the extent of the dues, for surrendering himself to Court if this S. 47 petition fails." The security was in due course furnished, and on 20th December 1930, the security bond filed by the respondent in this appeal, Nabin Chandra Chowdhury, was accepted, and the judgment-debtor Sashi Bhusan Roy was released. The application under S. 47 of the Code came to be dismissed by the Executing Court on 21st April 1931. In the intervening period, i. e. the period from 20th December 1930 to 21st April 1931, an attempt was made by the judgment-debtor Sashi Bhusan Roy to pay up the decretal dues in instalments. An attempt was also made with the consent of the decree-holder for production of a surety, so far as the satisfaction of the decretal dues by instalments was concerned. These attempts on the part of the judgment-debtor however failed. On 28th April 1930, after the dismissal of the application under S. 47 of the Code, there was an application filed in Court by the judgment-debtor containing the definite statement that he was surrendering himself and was going to make a payment of Rs. 50 towards the decretal dues. This amount of Rs. 50 was received by the pleader for the decree-holder on that very date.

It appears also from the order recorded on that date, 28th April 1930, that the payment of Rs. 50 was brought to the notice of the Court and the Court also took notice of the fact that the judgment-debtor was trying to pay off the decretal debt in instalments. The prayer for instalments however could not be allowed in the execution case. The order recorded by the Court further shows that an opportunity was given to the judgment-debtor for payment of Rs. 100 within 20th May 1931: the execution case was to be put on the said date for orders. The pleader for the judgment-debtor Sashi Bhusan Roy undertook to produce the judgment-debtor in Court on that date, viz., 20th May 1931, on his failure to pay the money. What happened on 28th April was this: On 23rd May 1931 notice was issued on Nabin Chandra Chowdhury, the surety respondent in this appeal, to produce the judgment-debtor by 30th May 1931, or to deposit the decretal dues in Court, in terms of the bond executed by this surety Nabin Chandra Chowdhury, on 19th December 1930. The surety showed cause before the Court executing the decree, and raised objections to the decree-holder being permitted to proceed against him as surety, in the matter of the satisfaction of the decretal dues. The objections were in due course heard and disposed of by the Court executing the decree and according to the learned Munsif, there were no grounds on which the objections raised by the surety could be allowed. According to the Munsif, the judgment-debtor's production in Court on 28th April 1931 did not appear to have been caused by the surety and therefore the surety's liability continued under the surety bond.

On appeal by the surety, the respondent in this Court, the decision of the Munsif, disallowing the objections raised by the surety was set aside. According to the learned Subordinate Judge, the judgment-debtor Sashi Bhusan Roy surrendered himself after the disposal of the case under S. 47 of the Code, and in that view of the matter it was held that the liability of the surety in the matter of the satisfaction of the decree as mentioned in the surety bond ceased after the judgment-debtor had surrendered on 28th April 1931. The facts and circumstances of the case have been set out in some detail in the previous part of our judgment, and it appears to us that in view of the fact and in the circumstance that the judgment-debtor had on 28th April 1931, that is, after the disposal of the application under S. 47 of the Code on 21st April 1931, surrendered before the Court, there was no further liability attaching to the surety in the matter of the satisfaction of the decretal debt. The material portion of the surety bond is to this effect:

"I stand as surety for the said Sashi Bhusan Roy and promise and agree that if the said objection case under S. 47, Civil P. C., be not admitted, I shall remain bound to make the said Sashi Bhusan Roy appear in Court, when called upon by the Court. If I do not make the said Sashi Bhusan Roy appear in Court when directed by it, the decree-holder will in pursuance of the order of the Court, be able to realize the said amount from me. If I do not pay easily, he will be able to realize the same by the execution of this decree from my moveable and immovable properties and person."

Regard being had to the definite finding arrived at by the Courts below that the judgment-debtor did in point of fact surrender himself after the disposal of the case under S. 47 of the Code, and in view of the circumstance to which reference has been made already, that there was payment by the judgment-debtor of the amount of Rs. 50 which was received by the decree-holder, and of which payment notice was taken by the executing Court, and regard being also had to the fact that on 28th April 1931, the responsibility of the appearance of the judgment-debtor in Court was allowed to be taken by the pleader representing the judgment-debtor and no responsibility whatsoever on the part of the surety was thought of on that date by the Court or by the decree-holder, we are wholly in agreement with the order passed by the Court of appeal below, that there was no liability attaching to the surety after what happened in Court on 28th April 1931. Some reliance has been placed by the learned advocate for the decree-holder appellant on the decision of the learned Chief Justice in the case of Jia Bai v. Joharmull Bothra (1), holding that there was no broad rule of law that a surety who had guaranteed payment of an amount decreed against the judgment-debtor was discharged from liability by reason of any arrangement for postponed payment or payment by instalments. The facts and circumstances of the case before us do not call for the application of the rule laid down by the learned Chief Justice in the case above referred to. It appears to us that the nearest application of any rule of law to the facts of the case before us is that of the rule contained in S. 135, Contract Act, relating to the discharge of a surety when the creditor makes a composition with or promises to give time to the principal debtor without the assent of the surety. It cannot be said that the rule laid down in that section of the Contract Act can have any strict application to the case before us. But as we have said there would be some sort of similarity to the provisions of the section in view of the facts and circumstances of this case, to which reference has been made in our judgment. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed. As there is no appearance on behalf of the respondent we make no order as to costs in this appeal.

M. C. Ghose, J.—I agree.

Judgment.—This Rule is directed against the appellate order of the District Judge of Dacca dated 20th March 1931 refusing to set aside the sale of the petitioners' properties held on 19th April 1927. The petitioners applied under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., for setting aside the sale in question on 19th May 1930. The petitioners rested their application on several grounds: (1) that the sale processes were suppressed and there was irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale and; (2) owing to suppression of the sale processes the properties were sold at an inadequate price. They allege that they came to know of the sale on 5th Baisakh 1337 from Gani Munshi of their village. On the evidence it transpires that they took some time to verify this information obtained from Gani Munshi and they have applied within 30 days of the date of their knowledge which the Munsif found to be 7th Baisakh to set aside the sale. It is a somewhat significant circumstance in this case that the decree-holders who sold this property in execution of a rent decree themselves applied to set aside the sale and it transpires in the course of the evidence that the auction-purchaser opposite party did pay to the decree-holders a sum of about Rs. 300 in order that the decree-holders might withdraw their application for setting aside the sale. The property has been sold for a grossly inadequate price of Rs. 39, the value according to the Munsif who dealt with the matter in the first instance being at least Rs. 1,000 at the lowest calculation, and it appears from the evidence on behalf of the auction-purchaser opposite party that its value would be at least Rs. 700. The Munsif came to the conclusion that the sale was vitiated by the fraudulent suppression of the sale processes and that the sale being a fraudulent one the burden of proof lay on the opposite party to show that the petitioners had knowledge of the sale at a time beyond the period of limitation. This according to the Munsif the opposite party failed to prove. The Munsif came to the further conclusion that the property was sold at an excessively inadequate price and the petitioners were highly prejudiced by the sale of their valuable property for the very insignificant sum of Rs. 39. The sale was accordingly set aside.

An appeal was taken by the auction-purchaser to the Court of the District Judge and the learned Judge has disposed of the appeal on the ground of limitation after reaching the conclusion that there has not been fraudulent suppression of the sale proclamation by the decree-holders. The learned Judge however refers to the fact that the auction-purchaser settled the matter with the decree-holders by the payment of Rs. 300 to them. The decree-holders, as has already been stated, filed an application before the confirmation of the sale to the effect that they were no parties to the execution proceedings and that the execution proceedings were really conducted by one Tamijuddi who signed the petition for execution without their authority. The learned Judge is of opinion that in his judgment it cannot he inferred from this circumstance that the appellant had taken part in the fraud.

To my mind it seems that this is a very significant circumstance, and it is quite clear that the auction-purchaser was trying to secure this property anyhow—a property which she knew had been purchased for an extremely inadequate value. I do not agree with the learned District Judge when he says that this payment was made by a bona fide purchaser to buy off an objection. One does not see any sufficient reason why the auction-purchaser should pay the decree-holders the sum of Rs. 300 unless the auction-purchaser was apprehensive that the sale was one which was surrounded with circumstances of suspicion as to the fraudulent part taken by the decree-holders in bringing about the sale. In considering as to whether there has been fraud in this case or not the learned District Judge did not consider a very important circumstance which is apparent on the face of the record. In the sale proclamation which was issued under S. 163, Cl. 2 (b), Ben. Ten. Act of 1885, the value of the property was stated to be only Rs. 10, while on the auction-purchaser's own evidence the value of the property is 70 times the value of what is stated there. The discrepancy between the value as stated in the sale proclamation and the real value of the property even judged by the evidence of the auction-purchaser is so great that this circumstance must be regarded as something more than the kind of irregularity which is commonly alleged, for it is a misstatement of the value of the property which is so glaring in amount that it could hardly have been made in good faith and which, however it came to be made, was calculated to mislead possible bidders and to prevent them from offering adequate price or from bidding at all. This is of a class of cases where the statement of the inadequate value is so great, as has been said by a distinguished English Judge, as to shock the conscience. This itself, as I have pointed out in another case, namely Bhairab Chandra Sinha v. Kali Dhan Roy (1), is valuable evidence of fraud, and no Court would be justified in circumstances like these to uphold a sale which offers clear evidence of fraud on the part of the decree-holders. If the learned Judge had considered this aspect of the case he would not have felt any difficulty in arriving at a decision on the question of limitation.

The learned District Judge is of opinion that the petitioners have not been able to establish that they came to know of the sale within 30 days of their application and he commented on the evidence that Gani Munshi had not been examined. But once fraud is established, as it is in the present case, the burden of proof is on the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser, as the case may be, of establishing that the person injured by his fraud and suing to recover property has had clear and definite knowledge of those facts which constitute fraud at a time which is too remote to allow him to make the application. This is sought to be attempted by the auction-purchaser by relying on the evidence of one of the petitioners to the effect that he came to know of the sale on the 4th Baisakh which was certainly beyond the period of limitation for making the application. But in that attempt in my opinion she has failed. All that the evidence points to is this: that some clues and hints about the happening of this sale reached one of the petitioners, who has deposed in the present case on the 4th Baisakh. He took time to verify the correctness of that vague report or information and he came to know of it as he states in his petition a few days after, the petitioner having stated the date, 7th Baisakh, which was accepted by the Munsif to be the date of the knowledge of the petitioner. The vague report which he obtained was actually followed up and that led one of the petitioners to have complete knowledge of the fraud and he was informed of the circumstance in the sense of having definite knowledge of fraud about the 7th Baisakh which was within the period of limitation.

Under these circumstances I think that the judgment of the District Judge confirming the sale must be set aside. The sale is set aside and the Munsif's judgment is restored. It transpires that two of the several persons interested in the property have subsequent to the sale sold the property to the auction-purchaser. This decision will not affect any right which the auction-purchaser had acquired subsequent to the sale on this basis. There will be no order for costs in this Rule.

(a) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 364—Danger to public not necessary for use of S. 364—Magistrate has discretion.

It is not correct to say that it is only in cases of emergency where there is danger to the public that S. 364 should be used. The Magistrate has got a discretion to make an order under the section: 10 C W N 182, Inf. [P 341 C 2]

Jack, J.—In this case a rule was issued upon the Municipal Magistrate and on the Chief Executive Officer of the Calcutta Corporation to show cause why the order, directing the Corporation to entirely demolish and remove portions of a certain building at the expense of the petitioner, should not be set aside or such further order made as to this Court may seem fit on the ground that the learned Magistrate misconceived the scope of S. 364, Calcutta Municipal Act; secondly that the learned Magistrate erred in law in holding the view that in the present case he had no alternative other than to pass an order of demolition inasmuch as the service of a valid notice under S. 299, Calcutta Municipal Act, upon the petitioner had been proved and admitted by the petitioners; thirdly, that upon a proper construction and consideration of Exs. 16 and 18, and upon a consideration of the provisions of law relating thereto the learned Magistrate should have held that the Corporation failed to prove that Chittaranjan Avenue had vested in the Corporation; fourthly, that upon a proper consideration and construction of S. 65, Calcutta Improvement Act, and Sch. 16, R. 2 (6), Calcutta Municipal Act, the learned Magistrate ought to have held that the conditions to the sanction (viz., payment of encroachment fees) imposed by the resolution of the Building Standing Committee dated 20th June 1927, was illegal and ultra vires; fifthly, that the learned Magistrate erred in holding that no question of unauthorized work or of sanction therefor arises in the present case, whereas from the notice under S. 299, which clearly mentions the constructions as unauthorized, the learned Magistrate should have held that in the present case this question did arise, and sixthly, that assuming that the notices under S. 299 of the Act were valid and that the said notices had been properly served the learned Magistrate should not have passed an order for demolition in the present case and should have dismissed the application for demolition.

As regards the first ground, it is suggested that it is only in cases of emergency, where there is danger to the public that S. 364 should be used. That question may at once be dismissed inasmuch as no authority has been shown for holding that this section can only be used in such cases. On the second point, I think that the learned advocate is correct in contending that there was a discretion in the Magistrate under S. 364, the wording of the section being that such Magistrate "may" make an order directing the removal of the structure. The learned advocate for the Municipality has suggested that in this case "may" must be interpreted as meaning, "must" and he has referred to Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, p. 208. But there are authorities for holding that in this case there is a discretion with the Magistrate and that "may" cannot here be interpreted as meaning "must." The case of Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), and other authorities may be referred to. We hold accordingly that the Magistrate was not right in holding that he had no alternative other than to pass an order of demolition. However in the circumstances of the present case we think that on that ground alone, we should not refer it back to him for reconsideration.

The next ground was that the Magistrate should have held that the Corporation failed to prove that Chittaranjan Avenue had vested in the Corporation. Referring to the facts of the present case, by a resolution in 1927, Ex. 2, it was resolved by the Corporation that the plan with alterations and additions be sanctioned under R. 2, Sch. 16 on payment of the usual fees. Subsequently, in July, the Corporation wrote to the petitioner a letter Ex. 3 demanding Rs. 2,682-8-0 as encroachment fees when formal sanction would issue. Then, on 26th September 1927, after examination of the building, the Corporation wrote a letter Ex. 4 demanding Rs. 2,954-1-8 as encroachment fees which was found to be the amount due on exact measurement. They made the demand as encroachment over the public street had been made without sanction.

Then in October 1927 the letter Ex. 5, was written by the petitioner to the Encroachment Officer, Calcutta Corporation, promising to pay encroachment fees in full on receipt of a complete statement. The Encroachment Inspector in November sent him the particulars and asked him to pay the fees. In March 1928 there was some further correspondence about the calculation and the Encroachment Inspector sent a detailed calculation and requested early action in the matter by the petitioner. Then in April 1928 the petitioner wrote to the Corporation stating that the Corporation could not claim any encroachment fees as encroachment was made on Improvement Trust land and not on Corporation land. In May 1929 it was resolved at a meeting of the Corporation under S. 65, Calcutta Improvement Act, that this particular road should be, on certain conditions, taken over by the Corporation and then in June 1929, by Ex. 18, a notice was issued by the Chief Executive Officer of the Corporation taking over the road.

The contention of the petitioner is that, in the first place, at the time when the notice demanding the fees issued and the conditional sanction was given, the road had not been taken over by the Corporation and further that the Chief Executive Officer was not entitled under S. 65, Calcutta Improvement Act to take over the road. That should have been done by the Corporation and not by one of its officers. On the other hand we have been referred to S. 12 of the Act which empowers the Corporation to delegate its powers under the Act to the Executive Officer. It has been further pointed out to us that no specific ground was taken in the application to the effect that the Corporation had failed to prove that this road had vested in them because it had been taken over not by the Corporation but by the Chief Executive Officer. Had that ground been specifically taken it would have been open to the opposite party to show that this particular power had been delegated to the Executive Officer. We also find that the Magistrate said that it was not disputed before him that the road in fact vested in the Corporation, and it was obvious that the petitioner must have known that the road would eventually vest in the Corporation.

As regards the next ground that the learned Magistrate ought to have held that the condition attached to the sanction, namely, the payment of encroachment fees, was illegal and ultra vires. No doubt under Sch. 16, R. 2 (6), Calcutta Municipal Act, the Corporation was not entitled to demand fees where the road had not vested in the Corporation so that they were not entitled to make the initial demand for fees; and this no doubt accounts for the fact that the Corporation instead of proceeding further under the special provisions took refuge in S. 299 of the Act on which they are entitled to order the removal of any structure projecting or encroaching on the public street, whether erected before or after the commencement of the Act. So that before the notification under S. 299 issued the road had already vested in the Corporation and that the Corporation were entitled under this section to order its removal; and it follows that the Magistrate was entitled under S. 364 on a reference made to him by the Corporation also to order its removal. It is suggested to us in the circumstances of the case, since the demand of fees in the first place was illegal that the Magistrate should have used his discretion and not to have ordered the demolition of the structure. But we find from the record that in the first instance, the sanction was only given on condition that the usual fees were payable and after the petitioner had been informed of the amount of the fees he was quite willing to pay them; he said he would pay on full particulars of the fees being furnished to him. This would tend to show that there was nothing unjust or unreasonable in the demand of the Corporation for the fees. Finding subsequently that owing to a technical error at the time the demand for fee was made, the road had not actually vested in the Corporation the petitioner sought to take advantage of Cl. (6), R. 2, Sch. 16. He was of course entitled to do so, but in considering all the circumstances we think that the Corporation was justified in having recourse to the provisions of Ss. 299 and 364. The Corporation are obviously entitled to the usual fees and if the petitioner takes advantage of the technicality in endeavouring to avoid it, the Municipality are entitled to take any legal steps open to them for enforcing payment. Consequently, the action they have taken seems to be perfectly reasonable and bona fide. It is a pity that they made an unusual delay in giving the notice, the sanction having been given in 1927 and the notice being given in 1929. But in the circumstances of the case we think that the delay has been sufficiently explained. No doubt the Corporation could have stopped the building, but the petitioner having agreed to the payment of the fees they thought that he was acting entirely bona fide. But that does not justify the petitioner's now avoiding payment of the fees.

It is suggested in this connexion that the Magistrate should not have taken action under S. 364 in a case in which the civil Court would not pass a mandatory injunction. But, as I have said before, in all the circumstances of the present case, the order which he made was justified inasmuch as we understand that the Corporation would not insist upon the demolition of the structure if their fees and costs are paid. This rule is, accordingly, discharged.

Appeal No. 150 of 1932, with Rule No. 391-M of 1932, Decided on 6th June 1932, against appellant order of Sub-Judge, Burdwan, D/- 22nd February 1932.

Bengal Tenancy Act (1885), S. 153—Munsif accepting surety bond instead of deposit under S. 153 acts erroneously in law, is not without jurisdiction.

An application to set aside an ex parte rent decree was admitted on the appellant standing surety for the judgment-debtor-tenants. The application was dismissed for want of prosecution and the decree-holder executed the decree against the surety. Objection was raised on behalf of surety under S. 47, Civil P. C., that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to accept the surety bond instead of deposit :

Held : that although the order of the Munsif accepting a surety bond was an erroneous order under the law, so far as the provisions of S. 154, Ben. Ten. Act, went, it could not be said that the error in law committed by the Munsif, in the matter of the acceptance of the surety bond, in compliance with the provisions of S. 153(a) was without jurisdiction and that execution can be levied against the surety.

Purna Chandra Chatterjee—for Appellant.

Gopendra Krishna Banerjee—for Respondents.

Guha, J.—The respondent in this appeal as a landlord succeeded in obtaining an ex parte decree in the Rent Suit No. 956 of 1929 in the Court of the Munsif at Asansole, against his tenants, the defendants in the suit, for a sum of Rs. 422-1-9, with costs and interest. After the ex parte decree was passed the tenants, the defendants in the suit for rent, filed an application under S. 153 (a), Ben. Ten. Act, for an order to set aside the ex parte decree passed against them. The application so made by the tenants, was, in due course, admitted and registered, on the appellant before us standing surety on behalf of the tenants defendants, against whom the decree for rent was passed. The application was ultimately dismissed for want of prosecution. The decree-holder landlord, the respondent in this appeal, thereupon filed an application for execution of his decree, by means of attachment of move-ables, and in the alternative by arrest. So far as this application for execution was concerned, it was made against the surety, that is, the appellant before us. An objection was preferred on behalf of the surety, under S. 47, Civil P. C. It was stated that the Munsif had no jurisdiction under the law, to accept a surety bond in lieu of deposit, as contemplated by S. 153 (a), Ben. Ten Act, and the surety objector was not therefore liable as such. The objection so raised under S. 47 of the Code was allowed by the Munsif. On appeal by the decree-holder, the respondent in this Court, the decision of the Munsif was reversed, and the execution has been allowed to be proceeded with so far as the surety, appellant in this Court, was concerned. The grounds that were raised by the surety, before the Munsif, have been pressed before us in support of the appeal. It appears to us that although the order of the Munsif accepting a surety bond from the appellant was an erroneous order under the law, so far as the provisions of S. 153, Ben. Ten. Act, went, it could not be said that the error in law committed by the Munsif, in the matter of the acceptance of the surety bond, in compliance with the provisions of S. 153 (a) was without jurisdiction and it could not therefore be held that the appellant, as surety, was not a person against whom the execution could be levied by the decree-holder. In this view of the case the appeal must be dismissed, and we direct accordingly. We make no order as to costs in this appeal. The rule which was granted by this Court in connexion with this appeal stands discharged. Let the record be sent down as early as possible.

Mr. H. Pleader, In re.

Civil Ref. No. 8 of 1932, Decided on 24th November 1932, made by Dist. Judge, Jalpaiguri, on 22nd July 1933.

(a) Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 14—S. 14 is material even in proceedings in revenue office.

Section 14 is material even when any pleader is acting in his professional capacity on behalf of his client in a proceeding in a revenue office and therefore if he is guilty of any grossly unprofessional or improper conduct, he would bring himself within the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court. [P 346 C 2]

(b) Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 14—Irritation or disappointment is no justification for casting imputations on integrity of officer of Court.

No amount of irritation or disappointment would be any justification for any legal practitioner casting imputations upon the honesty and integrity of one of the officers of the Court before which he was appearing. [P 346 C 2]

(c) Practice—Process fee—It is function of judicial officer only to deal with travelling allowances.

The question of the payment of travelling allowances entirely a matter to be dealt with by the judicial officer who functions as a Magistrate such dealing being something incidental to judicial proceedings. It is in no sense a matter with which any executive officer is concerned.

Amulya Chandra Chatterjee, Prokas Chandra Pakrashi and Biswanath Nasikar—for the Pleader.

Costello, J.—This matter comes before us on a reference by the District Judge of Jalpaiguri, under Section 14, of the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879. It appears that H who is a pleader practising at Alipurduar, while acting on behalf of a man named Bhojai Christian of that place in connexion with an application for remission of what is described as a jotedari donation, made a statement in the presence of the Tahasil Officer of Alipurduar who was dealing with the matter, as it appears in a judicial or a quasi judicial capacity, as a revenue officer, which statement was to the effect that if Rs. 5 had been paid to the Peshkar of the tahsil office, the remission would have been granted. The Peshkar concerned not unnaturally took exception to that remark and construed it, as indeed it might well have been, an imputation against his honesty and integrity in the execution of his office. The Peshkar instituted a case in the criminal Court against H under the provisions of S. 500, Penal Code, which is the section dealing with defamation as a criminal offence. It appears that the complainant, the Peshkar and the accused in that criminal proceeding, that is to say, the pleader with whom we are now concerned, arrived at some kind of compromise on the basis of which the criminal proceeding terminated.

As a part of that compromise H expressed his regret for what he had said and he further undertook to pay the expenses of Babu Asoke Ray who was the Tahsil

Officer before whom the offensive observation had been made. He had been summoned as a witness for the prosecution in the criminal proceeding. The criminal proceeding terminated in the manner as I have described on 30th November 1931. On 15th January 1932 Babu Asoke Ray submitted a travelling allowance bill in which he claimed a sum of Rs. 40-1-0; but upon H being asked to pay this amount he endorsed upon the bill a note in these terms:

"I think Sarat Babu, the Peshkar, ought to pay Asoke Babu's expenses, if any, as it was to his interest that the case was compromised; otherwise the result of the case would have been most serious against him. It was he who compromised the case."

It appears that the real terms of the compromise with regard to the question of this travelling allowance, were that H would pay to Babu Asoke Ray his expenses if the latter insisted upon payment, whether he was disposed either to forgo it in entirety or in part. Subsequently through the intervention of the Subdivisional Officer of Alipurdwar H agreed to pay to Babu Asoke Ray a sum of Rs. 27-3-0 in six monthly instalments; and thereupon the Subdivisional Officer made an order in these terms:

"As H agrees to pay the reduced amount of Rs. 27-3-0 in six instalments commencing from this month at Rs. 5 a month for five months and balance in the sixth month, and as he writes that his remarks of 18th January 1932 do not arise, Sarat Babu need not take any steps now as the money will not be recovered from him. H will deposit the money with me every month, with necessary money order fee."

That order was dated 6th February 1932. We are of opinion that it must be taken that that order was made by the Subdivisional Officer acting in a judicial capacity, inasmuch as he was the Magistrate who was dealing with the criminal case to which I have referred and who would have tried H upon the charge under S. 500, I. P. C., had that case been proceeded with. The position therefore was that on 6th February 1932 there was a definite order by a Court upon H to pay the sum of Rs. 27-3-0.

The next thing that happened however was that the person who was entitled to the travelling allowance, Babu Asoke Roy, did not agree to accept the sum of Rs. 27-3-0 in discharge of the bill which he had put forward which bill, as I have already said, was for the sum of Rs. 40-1-0 and it is clear that he—who was himself a Subdivisional Officer,—caused a letter to be sent to the Deputy Commissioner of Jalpaiguri in which he claimed the full amount. The Deputy Commissioner thereupon noted on the letter which he had received from Babu Asoke Roy a memorandum in these terms:

"S. D. O. Babu A. C. Ray has submitted this letter for my perusal. I agree that he should receive the travelling allowance to which he is entitled as a Government servant and that it should be paid in full by 15th March 1932 without fail. It is obvious that H requires firm handling."

Upon receipt of that memorandum the Subdivisional Officer concerned made a note to this effect: "Inform H and ask him to pay Rs. 40-1-0 by 15th March 1932 without fail." The information was conveyed to H in what is described, a notice on him to pay the amount, dated 24th February 1932. It is in these terms:

"To Babu H., Pleader.

As directed by the Deputy Commissioner you are informed that you will have to pay Rs. 40-1-0 as travelling allowance of Babu Asoke Chandra Ray in the case under S. 500, I. P. C., against you by 15th March 1932 without fail in full. I request you therefore to deposit the money with me, with eight annas as money order commission by that date positively."

Now, in passing, I would point out quite emphatically, that the question of the payment of this travelling allowance was entirely a matter to be dealt with by the Subdivisional Officer who had functioned as the Magistrate dealing with the case under S. 500, I. P. C. It was essentially a matter to be dealt with by a judicial officer, as something incidental to judicial proceedings and it was in no sense a matter with which any executive officer should have concerned himself as such. Therefore if the memorandum endorsed on a letter from Babu Asoke Ray, dated 19th February 1932 by the Deputy Commissioner was intended to be anything in the nature of an order or even a direction to the Subdivisional Officer, on the question of the amount which should be paid by H to Babu Asoke Ray or as to the conditions on which it should be paid, then in our view that was something which ought not to have been done.

We are of opinion that the Subdivisional Officer ought not, in any event, to have treated the memorandum made by the Deputy Commissioner, as if it was something in the nature of an order which he, as a judicial officer, could properly take notice of. The Subdivisional Officer ought to have dealt with the matter solely upon the footing that he was a Magistrate in charge of the criminal case. Therefore we are of opinion that the real and effective order with regard to the payment of the travelling allowance to Babu Asoke Ray was the order made by the Subdivisional Officer himself, in the first instance and dated 6th February 1932. That, in outline, is the substance of the case out of which the present proceedings before us arise. The conduct of H in connexion with this matter both as regards the observations which he made before the Tahsil officer and in connexion with the payment or rather with the non-payment of the travelling allowance to Babu Asoke Ray, was called in question and was inquired by the District Judge of Jalpaiguri and four charges were laid against H. The first was concerned with the allegation or imputation which H made against the Peshkar. The second had reference to the endorsement which he put on the travelling allowance Bill of Babu Asoke Ray to the effect that Sarat Babu ought to pay the expenses as it was to his interest that the criminal case was compromised.

I have already quoted the remark in question. The third charge related to H's non-payment of the promised and indeed the ordered instalments of the amount due from him to Babu Asoke Ray under the terms of the compromise in connexion with the travelling expenses. And the fourth charge was a general allegation that H had procured the case, brought against him under S. 500, Penal Code, to be compromised by means of false inducements and false promises. (After considering all the charges in seriatim, the judgment proceeded.) Looking at the matter as a whole, it seems to us that the question really resolves itself into this: as to what view we ought to take concerning this pleader's conduct in making the observations as he did and the implied insinuation against the character of the tahsil officer's Peshkar.

We are of opinion that it cannot be argued that this pleader was doing otherwise than in acting in his professional capacity, when he appeared on behalf of Bhojai Christian before the tahsil officer in Alipurduar. Therefore we have to ask ourselves whether we ought to come to the opinion that he has brought himself within the terms of S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act, read with S. 13, Cls. (b) and (f) of that Act; in other words, whether he was guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duties. S. 14 is material even when any pleader is acting in his professional capacity on behalf of his client in a proceeding in a revenue office. Therefore there can be no question whatever that this pleader at the time when he made the remarks about the Peshkar, was acting professionally and therefore if he was guilty of any grossly unprofessional or improper conduct, he would bring himself within the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court.

We are inclined to take a lenient view in this case however having regard to the fact that the aggrieved Peshkar thought fit to seek his own remedy for the insult which had been put upon him and for the injury which he suffered, by taking proceedings in a criminal Court for defamation. The Peshkar chose to compromise those proceedings accepting the apology which was offered to him by the pleader concerned. At the same time however we should not be doing our duty if we do not condemn in the strongest possible manner the action of the pleader in making an observation of the kind complained of. No doubt it was made in the heat of the moment and possibly when the pleader was irritated at having failed to secure what he was seeking on behalf of his client. At the same time no amount of irritation or disappointment would be any justification for any legal practitioner casting imputations upon the honesty and integrity of one of the officers of the Court before which he was appearing. Had the observation been made actually when the proceedings before the tahsil officer were taking place, he might have dealt with the matter on the footing that it was a gross contempt of Court. In this case so far as the actual hearing before the tahsil officer was concerned that had been concluded. Mr. Chatterjee on behalf of the pleader H has very ably and forcibly said all that could be said in extenuation of the offence which the pleader committed and has in effect apologized once more on behalf of his client. In all the circumstances of this case we are disposed to accept that apology, believing that this pleader will take notice of what I have said with regard to the impropriety of his conduct and that he will take good care to avoid any recurrence of an offence of a like nature. As regards the other charges all of which in one way or other were concerned with the payment of the travelling allowance, we are of opinion for the reasons which I have given as to the validity of the order of 24th February 1932, that H must obey the order of the Sub-divisional Officer made on 6th February 1932, and pay to Babu Asoke Ray the sum of Rs. 27-3-0, which was directed to be paid by him. No other order is necessary and the Reference is disposed of accordingly.

(a) Bengal Municipal Act (3 of 1884), Ss. 261 and 273—Making tiles without license—No publication of prohibition by Municipality proved—Accused is not guilty.

Unless the Municipality proves that the publication against making tiles was published under S. 234, Municipal Act, a person making tiles without license under S. 261, Act 3 of 1884, is not guilty under S. 273 (2). [P 347 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114, III. (e)—Official acts—Presumption cannot supply deficiency in proof.

Though official acts may be presumed to have been regularly performed such presumption cannot supply deficiency in the proof: 18 I C 651, Ref. [P 347 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 342 and 540—Failure to follow provisions of S. 342 vitiates trial.

Where long after the closing of the case a Magistrate examines a witness under S. 540, but does not further examine the accused under S. 342 failure to follow provisions of S. 342 vitiates the trial and S. 540 cannot cure the irregularities committed thereby. [P 348 C 1]

Order of Reference.—One Keshab Ch. Pal was charged under S. 273 (2), Bengal Municipal Act (3 of 1884) for having used a place as a kiln for making tiles within the Municipality of Hooghly-Chinsura without a license from the Commissioners as contemplated by S. 261 of the Act. The case was tried summarily and the accused was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 in default simple imprisonment for 30 days. It appears that the Municipality is in existence from the year 1864. There is a resolution of the Municipality dated 12th February 1867 by which under S. 77, Municipal Act of 1864 (B. C. Act 3 of 1864), the whole of the municipal area was declared to be a prohibited area within which bricks, &c., could not be manufactured without a licence. Ex. 6 (1) is the resolution. In 1868 by Ex. 6 (2), a resolution dated 27th July 1868, the prohibition was extended to tiles under the same section. The Act of 1864 was repealed by B. C. Act 5 of 1876. S. 285 of the latter Act corresponds to S. 77 of the Act of 1864. This section finds a place in Part 7 of the Act of 1876. Ss. 233 and 234 of the Act lay down the procedure by which the provisions of this part are extended and published. The present Act (of 1884) provides by S. 220 that such a provision of the Act of 1876 if once extended will be deemed to have been in force without further express extension thereof under the new Act. In this case the Municipality has not proved that any publication was made under S. 234 of the Act of 1876 and as such it cannot be said that the prohibition for making tiles is in force legally. The learned Magistrate in his explanation says that official acts may be presumed to have been regularly performed, but such presumption cannot supply deficiency in the proof: vide Mookram Ali v. Cuttack Municipality (1).

It further appears that the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., have not been followed. It appears from the summary form that the accused was examined once during the trial but the date of such examination does not appear from the form or from the order sheet. It however appears that on 23rd February 1931 long after the closing of the case and hearing of arguments the learned Magistrate examined: "One witness for the Municipality under S. 540, Criminal P. C." He also admitted into evidence several documents for prosecution on the same date and proceeded to pass orders in the case. Without examining the accused further under S. 342, Criminal P. C., or giving him an opportunity if he so desires to rebut all this evidence. The procedure in my opinion was highly irregular and prejudicial to the interest of the accused person. S. 540, Criminal P. C., was not meant to justify such a procedure and cannot cure the irregularities thereof. The whole trial was vitiated by the failure to follow the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. I accordingly recommend on the above grounds the setting aside of the conviction and sentence on the accused person.

Order.—This Reference must be accepted for the reasons stated in the letter of the learned Sessions Judge of Hooghly. The conviction of the petitioner Keshab Chandra Pal under S. 273 (2) read with S. 261, Bengal Municipal Act (3 of 1881) and the sentence passed on him are set aside. The fine if paid must be refunded.

Jogendra Kumar Roy and another—Opposite Parties.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 907 and 908 of 1932, Decided on 30th September 1932, against the order of Subdivl. Magistrates Howrah.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144—Magistrates should be cautious in exercising power under S. 144.

The Legislature by S. 144 of the Code has conferred very large powers upon Magistrates who have to deal with urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger. The larger is the power, the greater is the necessity to be cautious about its exercise. And the exercise of the power should be guided by having the following principles in view viz: (1) Courts, civil as well as criminal, exist for the protection of rights and therefore the authority of a Magistrate should ordinarily be exercised in defence of rights rather than in their suppression; (2) when an order in suppression of lawful rights have to be made it ought not to be made unless the Magistrate considers that other action that he is competent to take is not likely to be effective; and (3) the order, if made, should never be disproportionate to but should, always be, as far as possible, commensurate with the exigencies of any particular situation. [P 350 C 2; P 351 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. (as amended by Act 18 of 1923), Ss. 144 and 435—Order of Magistrate under S. 144 is open to revision.

Under S. 435 as amended by Act 18 of 1923 the High Court can revise an order of a Magistrate under S. 144, Criminal P. C., and in revision it has to consider not merely the legality of the order but their propriety as well. [P 351 C 1]

(c) Easements Act (1882), S. 18—Market franchise—No such right exists in Bengal.

In Bengal there is no such thing as market franchise or the right to hold a market conferred by grant from the Crown, nor can such right be acquired by prescription, and the proprietor of an old haat therefore has no monopoly or privilege which is entitled to protection and no immunity for competition: A I L 1920 Cal 255, Ref. [P 351 C 1, 2]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 144—Magistrate can depute another Magistrate to hold inquiry but he should come to his own conclusion on the materials.

It is competent for a Magistrate who has to make an order under S. 144 of the Code to depute another Magistrate to make an inquiry and submit a report and then to act on the report so submitted. But only so long as he applies his mind to the materials which are before him or which he may care to gather and come to his own conclusion as to their sufficiency or otherwise, his action cannot be open to objection. [P 351 C 2; P 352 C 1]

Mukerji, J.—These two Rules are directed against certain orders which have been passed by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Howrah under S. 144, Criminal P. C., in connexion with the starting of a haat in the town of Howrah.

The facts shortly put are the following: The employers of the opposite party in these Rules, who, for the sake of brevity, will be called the Chamarias, are the owners of a haat which goes by the name of Mangla haat and which has been in existence for about ten years and holds its sittings on Tuesdays at a site on the Chandmari Road, close to the Buckland Bridge. Kanhai Lal Memani and Lun Karan Das Memani, the petitioners in Revision Case No. 908 are partners of a firm styled Jewan Ram Ganga Ram and Co. This firm, presumably with the object of starting another hut in the locality, obtained a transfer of a lease of a plot of about 14 bighas of land which was held under the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta by one Srilal Chamarla. This plot of land abuts on Grierson Road and is situate quite close to the site of the hut belonging to the Chamarlas, being at a distance of only 600 ft. or so therefrom. On the plot of land so acquired there are, it is said, a number of permanent stalls, and on the remainder thereof the petitioners constructed a very large number of sheds and made arrangements for the sitting of a hut on Tuesday, 6th September 1932. On 2nd September 1932 two petitions were filed by the two persons who are the opposite party in these Rules—the said petitions being the exact replica of each other praying for an injunction against the two petitioners in Revision Case No. 908 and some other persons restraining them from starting the hut. These petitions were filed before the District Magistrate, who made them over to the Subdivisional Magistrate for disposal. Later on, a petition was filed by some persons alleged to be stall-holders in the Chamarlas hut, asking for action being taken against the Chamarlas under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The Subdivisional Magistrate made over all these petitions to a Deputy Magistrate Mr. Baruah for inquiry and report. On 5th September 1932, Mr. Baruah held an inquiry, examined the witnesses produced by the parties and submitted a report. On that on the same day the Subdivisional Magistrate heard the parties and made an order which concluded with these words:

"Having regard to the facts stated above I order an injunction under S. 144, Criminal P. C., issued against" the two petitioners in Revision Case No. 908 and some other persons to be their men being named here

"restraining them from opening the proposed new hut on Tuesday, 6th September 1932, or on any subsequent Tuesday within the period of two months from this date. I consider any action under S. 107, Criminal P. C., against Radha Kisson Chamarla and others as prayed for unnecessary, as no case has been made out for such an action and it seems to be unnecessary in view of the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., passed by me."

The District Magistrate was moved to rescind or alter this order under S. 144, Cl. (4), Criminal P. C., but on 12th September 1932 he declined to interfere. An application was made to the Sessions Judge for a reference to this Court for revision, but it was dismissed on 23rd September 1932. It is this order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., which forms the subject-matter of Revision Case No. 908.

The order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., spoken of above, as drawn up, described the plot of land, on which the proposed new hut was not to be held, as lying within certain boundaries given in the schedule, the eastern boundary mentioned therein being the river Ganges. In the body of the order however the boundaries were qualified in the following way: "Bounded as below, of which you have taken a sub-lease." As a matter of fact Jewan Ram Ganga Ram and Co.'s sub-lease did not include a plot of land which lay immediately on the bank of the river. Treating the order as being confined to only such land as was included within the sublease, it appears to have been decided to hold a hut on Tuesday, 6th September 1932, notwithstanding the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., mentioned above. This plot of land lying outside the sublease was fixed upon as the site and a lease thereof for a day is said to have been taken from the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta with the object of holding a hut thereon on that day. The police, on getting information of this intention, submitted a report to the Subdivisional Magistrate who on the same day made an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., ex parte against one Haji Fazlul Huq and others, who had taken the lease and were moving for the holding of the hut as aforesaid. Before the order was completed, advocates for the parties intervened, and at their request the order was kept in abeyance and it was decided to hold a local inspection. The Subdivisional Magistrate, accompanied by the same Police Officers and the advocates, went to the place where the new hut was being held. What the Subdivisional Magistrate saw on the spot may better be described in his own words used in an order that he subsequently passed. He says there:

"I found that a haut had been going on under a shed of the Port Commissioners on a site close to the site of the proposed rival haut (only a road intervening between them). I met an officer of the Port Commissioners there. I now find that he was Mr. Sumner, the Officiating Deputy Secretary of the Port Commissioners. He told me that the tin shed was in the khas possession of the Port Commissioners and had been leased out for that day only."

With the strong police force that was on the spot there was little chance of any breach of the peace; and being of opinion that an attempt to stop the haut at that stage might lead to trouble the Subdivisional Magistrate considered it better to let the haut go on, and left the place ordering the police to keep a watch. At the end of the day he received a report from the officer in charge of the Golabari P. S., that he had been present there with his force all day and there was no disturbance; and he therefore cancelled the order which he had made under S. 144, Criminal P. C., ex parte earlier in the day as aforesaid and which was meant for that day only. It appears that on 6th September 1932, after the Subdivisional Magistrate came back from the spot, a petition was filed before him by one of the members of the opposite party, in para. 5 of which it was stated that after the Subdivisional Magistrate had left the spot one of the stall-holders of Chamaria haut was roughly handled in the presence of the Police constables and that the matter had been brought to the notice of the Sub-Inspector who was there. It was prayed that an order under Cl. (3), S. 144, Criminal P. C., might be issued. The Subdivisional Magistrate sent this petition to the officer in charge of the Golabari Police Station for inquiry and report with special reference to the allegation aforesaid.

On 10th September 1932 the said Police Officer, Mr. C. C. Majumdar submitted a report. On that date also a petition was filed on behalf of the opposite party repeating their prayer for an order under S. 144, Cl. (3), Criminal P. C. This petition was also sent to the police for inquiry and report, and the police reported that they had already made a report on 10th September 1932. Those reports were taken up for consideration by the Subdivisional Magistrate on 12th

September 1932, on which date he made an ex parte order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., against the two petitioners in Revision Case No. 907 and certain other persons and the public generally—the two petitioners being Mr. Sumner, Officiating Deputy Secretary to the Port Commissioners and K. C. Das Gupta, Assistant Estates Superintendent of that body. The terms of this order were the following:

"I hereby direct the persons" (names given) "to abstain from allowing any land in their occupation or charge to be used for or otherwise assist in the holding of a haut and the public generally from frequenting or visiting any such haut within the boundaries noted below on Tuesday 13th September 1932, or any subsequent Tuesday within the period of two months from to-day."

Of the proceedings that subsequently took place no details need be given and it would be sufficient to say only this: that the Subdivisional Magistrate, on cause being shown, on 23rd September 1932, refused to rescind the ex parte order, made as aforesaid, under Cl. (4), S. 144, Criminal P. C. It is necessary to state only two more facts; that when cause was shown as aforesaid the officer in charge of Golabari Police Station, Mr. C. C. Majumdar, was examined as a witness, and the opposite party declined to call any other witness on their behalf; and that as a result of the application made to him under Cl. (4), S. 144, Criminal P. C., the Subdivisional Magistrate ordered the injunction issued by him on 12th September 1932 to run as from 5th September 1932, treating it as only supplementary to the injunction issued by him on the last mentioned date. It is the order of 12th September 1932 issuing the injunction under S. 144, Criminal P. C., and that of 23rd September 1932 by which the Subdivisional Magistrate refused to rescind it, that form the subject-matter of Revision Case No. 907. Now there can be no doubt or dispute that the legislature by S. 144 of the Code has conferred very large powers upon Magistrates who have to deal with urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger. That section enables a Magistrate to make temporary orders, irrespective of the rights of the parties concerned, provided that, to quote the words of the section:

"In his opinion . . . there is sufficient ground for proceeding under this section and immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable."

The larger is the power, the greater is the necessity to be cautious about its exercise. The statute itself has provided a safeguard in the shape of a time limit. Judicial decisions have also laid down certain principles which have to be borne in mind, and of these only a few may be mentioned here : Courts, civil as well as criminal, exist for the protection of rights, and therefore the authority of a Magistrate should ordinarily be exercised in defence of rights rather than in their suppression ; when an order in suppression of lawful rights has to be made it ought not to be made unless the Magistrate considers that other action that he is competent to take is not likely to be effective ; and the order, if made, should never be disproportionate to but should always be, as far as possible, commensurate with the exigencies of any particular situation. I am far from suggesting that there may not be cases when the Magistrate may feel called upon to restrain a person from the lawful exercise of his legal rights ; he is perfectly competent to take such a course under this section if, to quote the words of the section again :

"in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding under this section and immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable."

The amendment introduced by the Act of 1923, by deleting sub-S. (3) from S. 435 which till then existed, has made the order of the Magistrate open to revision. This Court therefore on the present rules has to consider whether the power which the Sub-divisional Magistrate undoubtedly has in this respect has been rightly exercised ; or, in other words, whether there were sufficient materials which would justify him in making the orders that he did. As a Court of revision this Court has to consider not merely the legality of the orders but their propriety as well : vide S. 435, Criminal P. C. As already stated, the Magistrate was not bound to maintain the rights of the parties, if the situation was such that such rights required to be suppressed or their exercise restrained for the time being.

So far as the rights are concerned the law is perfectly well settled. In Bengal there is no such thing as a market franchise or the right to hold a market conferred by grant from the Crown, nor can such right be acquired by prescription, and the proprietor of an old haut therefore has no monopoly or privilege which is entitled to protection and no immunity from competition : see Hem Chandra Roy v. Kristo Chandra (1). In England, notwithstanding the repeal of the Combination Laws the idea of regarding a conspiracy to impede the free course of trade as a criminal offence at Common law, which to some extent prevailed in the 18th century, continued to hold its ground, being regarded as a part of the more general principle that a conspiracy to injure, aimed at a specific person, could give rise to an action at the suit of the injured party, even though the acts of the individual conspirators were neither criminal nor tortious : see Quinn v. Leatham (2) at p. 510 and the cases cited in the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in that case. In the more recent decision of the House of Lords in the case of Sorrel v. Smith (3) which aimed at reconciling or explaining all the earlier decisions the following proposition has been enunciated :

"A combination of two or more persons for the purpose of injuring a man in his trade is unlawful, and if it results in damage to him, is actionable. If the real purpose of the combination is not to injure another, but to forward or defend the trade of those who enter into it, then no wrong is committed and no action will lie although damage to another ensues, provided the purpose is not effected by illegal means. A threat to effect a purpose which is in itself lawful gives no right to the person injured thereby."

The question to be considered is, do the materials on which the learned Magistrate acted afford sufficient grounds within the meaning of the expression as used in S. 144 of the Code. So far as the order of 5th September 1932 is concerned these materials are the petitions of the two parties and the report of the Deputy Magistrate Mr. Barua, that he had then before him. In this connexion a question has arisen as to whether it is competent for a Magistrate, who has to make an order under S. 144 of the Code to depute another Magistrate to make an inquiry and submit a report and then to act on the report so submitted. The legislature not having defined the materials on which the Magistrate may take action under S. 144 of the Code I think it must be held that the Magistrate would be competent to act on any credible information that may be available or which he may consider it proper to collect in any manner he chooses. So long as he applies his mind to the materials which are before him or which he may care to gather and comes to his own conclusion as to their sufficiency or otherwise, I do not think his action can be open to objection. It is true that so far as an order under Ch. 11 of the Code is concerned the legislature has not made any express provision for an inquiry by any other Magistrate, and it is also true that S. 148 of the Code makes the report of an inquiry, held for the purposes of Ch. 12 only, usable as evidence in the case.

1. A I R 1920 Cal 255=58 I C 879=47 Cal 1079.

The provision in S. 148 evidently has been made in view of the inquiry contemplated by sub-S. (4), S. 145 of the Code; and an omission of an express provision as to inquiry for the purposes of Ch. 11 can, in my opinion, hardly be regarded as forbidding the Magistrate from having one made for the collection of materials, in order to enable him to form his own conclusions. I am prepared to agree with the contention that the Magistrate who is to make the order is not competent to delegate his functions to some other Magistrate; but so long as the inquiry is limited to the purpose indicated above it cannot be said that there is any delegation in the real sense of the word. So far as the materials themselves are concerned, I am clearly of opinion that they were not sufficient. (After considering the evidence, the judgment proceeded). They cannot, in my opinion, suffice, in view of the circumstances of this particular case, to justify an order of the kind that was made on 6th September 1932. It is true that there were allegations before the Subdivisional Magistrate, as also before Mr. Barua, that there was apprehension of a breach of the peace proceeding from the side of the Chamarias. But such allegations evidently were not established. The Subdivisional Magistrate, as would appear from the portion of his order quoted above, held that no case had been made out for action against them under S. 107. He added:

"And it (i. e., action under S. 107) seems to be unnecessary in view of the order under S. 141, Criminal P. O., passed by me."

Of course if anything had been proved showing that it was the Chamarias or their men who were guilty of any unlawful acts, it is hardly likely that the Magistrate would have thought of stopping the holding of the proposed haut, and not any action against them under S. 107 of the Code as the remedy. So far as the order of 12th September 1932 is concerned, in addition to the materials to which reference has already been made, there was the allegation about a stall-holder of Chamaria's haut having been roughly handled by somebody interested in the setting up of the new haut. As already stated this matter was referred to the Officer in charge of the Golabari Police Station for inquiry and report. This officer submitted his report on 10th September 1910, and his endorsement on the petition forwarded to him shows that he held the necessary inquiry. Curiously enough his report of that date does not refer to this incident at all, and in his evidence he says:

"I never saw the man who made the complaint. I heard of the incident of the 6th."

The entry which is said to have been made in the police diary as regards this incident was not proved before the Court, nor was the officer who recorded it produced for examination. Before us it is said that the complainant stall-holder has been gained over, and no reliance is any longer placed on this incident. The only other material which has any bearing on the order of 12th September 1932 is the police report of 10th September 1932 which contains no facts beyond a statement of the circumstances which had weighed with the Subdivisional Magistrate in making his order of 6th September 1932. I should not omit to refer to the fact, upon which very great reliance has been placed in support of the order, namely, that the Subdivisional Magistrate had himself visited the new haut when it was being held on the 6th. No doubt his opinion formed on the spot is not a thing to be lightly passed over. But it should be remembered that it was the new haut that he visited where any disturbance of it was to take place at all, could take place only at the instance of the men of the Chamarias, and further that in point of fact there was no disturbance in that haut at all. Nor should it be forgotten that in the order that he recorded on that day, no facts were mentioned which could form the basis of an order under S. 144, Criminal P.C., and on the other hand he cancelled the injunction he had ordered for the day, and waited for a police report to see whether any further action should be taken. I am unable to hold that there were any materials sufficient for the purposes of the order of 12th September 1932.

In the view that I take of the merits I do not consider it necessary to deal in detail with the other grounds that have been urged against the latter order. But I think I should content myself with observing that if action under S. 144 of the Code was justified, it was quite open to the Magistrate to make the order upon the two petitioners in revision, Case No. 507, notwithstanding anything contained in the Calcutta Port Act, if in point of fact it was found, as it has been found, that they were persons who were aiding in the setting up of the hut. In my opinion the materials on the record were not sufficient to justify the orders complained of and the orders therefore must be set aside. The rules are accordingly made absolute and the orders against which they are directed are hereby set aside. It will be open to the learned Subdivisional Magistrate to take such other preventive action against the parties or any of them, should he consider such action necessary and justified upon the materials that he may have before him. And in this connexion we desire to invite his attention to the suggestion made by the learned Sessions Judge in this matter in his order of 23rd September 1932.

Order.—It appears to us that this rule must be made absolute upon at least one of the grounds on which it was issued. That ground is ground No. 1 and is to the effect that in the absence of a finding by the Magistrate that the petitioners were convening or collecting the assembly, or directing or promoting the procession, the conviction is fit to be set aside. By S. 32, Police Act of 1861, a person opposing or not obeying orders issued under various sections of which S. 30 is one is liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding Rs. 200. By S. 30, the District Superintendent of Police may, if certain preliminary conditions are satisfied, require by general or special notice that the persons convening or collecting certain assemblies or directing or promoting certain processions shall apply for a license. It is obvious that the purpose of the section is to give the police control of persons who organize or take charge of processions by requiring them to apply for a license. No punishment is prescribed by the Act for those taking part in a procession for which no license has been granted or applied for. It is clear on the evidence that in this case there was a procession in Baranagore on 20th October 1931. On 14th October 1931 the Assistant Superintendent of Police, Barrackpore, had issued a notice under S. 30, sub-S. (2) requiring conveners, collectors, directors, promoters of assemblies or processions of five or more men in the jurisdiction of the Baranagore Police Station to apply to him for a license for such assemblies or processions.

We assume, though it is by no means free from doubt, that the notice in the form in which it was given is a valid notice and within the powers of the Assistant Superintendent of Police as conferred by sub-S. (2). It is clear to us that the petitioners can only be properly convicted if it is established that they were directors or promoters of the procession of 20th October and were as such under an obligation to apply for a license for it. If they were merely ordinary members of the processions, S. 30, sub-S. (2) does not apply to them. There is no finding by the Magistrate that they were such directors or promoters.

The only evidence on the record which by a stretch of imagination can be said to bear on this point is that the petitioners were at the head of the procession and were wearing garlands. It does not appear that they alone among the processionists were garlanded. But even if there were evidence to that effect we are of opinion that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the Magistrate in arriving at the finding that the petitioners were directors or promoters of the procession in question. As I have pointed out he has in fact come to no finding upon the point. The evidence being such as I have described we do not think that any useful purpose will be served by ordering a retrial. We make the rule absolute, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Criminal Appeal No. 439 of 1932, Decided on 9th December 1932.

(a) Ordinance (11 of 1931), S. 34—Scope.

It is reasonably clear that the commitment stage is not included by the phrase "for which he was being tried at the promulgation of this Ordinance." In a case tried by the Sessions Judge the trial does not begin until after the order of commitment has been made.

[P 355 C 2]

(b) Ordinance (11 of 1931), S. 34 — "For which he was being tried," meaning explained.

Trials which were begun after the Ordinance had been passed are not put in the same position as the trials mentioned in the opening language of S. 34. There would be no point in making a special exception for the trials proceeding at the time of the promulgation of this Ordinance, if no trial once commenced could be interfered with by operation of any order made under S. 30. The correct way of applying the phrase "for which he was being tried" would be to ask oneself whether, the proceedings indicated by S. 271, Criminal P. C., had been commenced or not.

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 307 — Persons pursued by constables turning round and firing at them — Offence under S. 307 is committed.

Where certain persons who are clearly in fear of being apprehended by the police and find that they are being followed, turn round and fire at the constables, they commit an offence under S. 307. The circumstance that they did not succeed in hitting anybody is no reason for supposing that the cartridges were blank. Nor is the fact that they did not hit anybody or that the bullets were not found is material Khundkar and Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the two appellants before us were put on their trial before a Special Magistrate appointed under Ordinance 11 of 1931 on charges under S. 307, I. P. C., and Cl (e), S. 19, Arms Act. The case against the two accused is this: On 13th October 1930 at a certain ferry ghat in Jamalpur the complainant with another constable saw four men getting into a boat. They went down there and endeavoured to follow them. Thereupon the four men went up. Each of the two accused was among those four and each of them when he got to the top of the ferry ghat and saw that they were being followed by the complainant and his companion fired a revolver—one shot each from the top of the ferry ghat at their pursuers. The other two men ran away and these two men ran off after firing and were followed. They again fired in the course of the chase and the firing is said to have been made by putting their hands behind them—whatever it may mean. It appears also that the complainant had a revolver and fired some shots. No bullets were however found and nobody was hit. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that both the charges had been proved against both the accused and he convicted them and sentenced each of them to four years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 307, I. P. C., and to a further year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 19 (e), Arms Act. On this appeal, Mr. S. K. Basu for both the appellants has contended before us, first, that there is an objection to the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate; and, secondly, that the identification of the two accused before us as the persons who had fired is unsatisfactory. He has taken a third point also to the effect that, if the evidence against the accused is believed, the elements necessary to make out an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., are not sufficiently proved.

We have, first of all, to examine the objection as to jurisdiction. The form in which that objection was first taken before us was this: By S. 34, Ordinance 11 of 1931, it is provided that:

"No direction shall be made under S. 30 for the trial of any person by a Special Magistrate for an offence for which he was being tried at the promulgation of this Ordinance before any Court."

The date of the promulgation of this Ordinance was the last day of November 1931. It was said by Mr. S. K. Basu that in this case the accused were arrested on 14th November 1930, that they were put before a Magistrate and the usual inquiry held, and that it resulted in their commitment to the Sessions on 11th July 1931. Thereafter, certain bail applications were made and rejected by the Sessions Judge. On 19th September 1931, the case was transferred to the Fourth Additional Sessions Judge and, in November, certain applications for classification having been made to this learned Judge, and having been rejected, the case came on before him for trial on 18th January 1932. The accused were called upon to plead and they pleaded not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge began empanelling the jurors but, owing to certain challenges having exhausted the number of jurors present, the jurors were not able to be empanelled on that date. Consequently, the hearing was adjourned till 1st March 1932. On 28th April 1932 the direction of the Local Government was made purporting to be under S. 30, Ordinance 11 of 1931. In these circumstances, Mr. Basu contended, first of all, that although the case was not taken up by the Sessions Judge until 18th January 1932, for trial under S. 271, Criminal P. C., nevertheless the phrase in S. 34 of the Ordinance "for which he was being tried" was a phrase which would include the commitment proceedings, the stage of inquiry prior to the commitment, and therefore this case could be brought directly within the opening words of S. 34. I am of opinion that it is reasonably clear that the commitment stage is not included by the phrase "for which he was being tried at the promulgation of this Ordinance." The trial had not begun until after the order of commitment had been made, the Sessions Court not having seisin of the case. In my judgment that point in that form cannot be made good.

The second, and I think the more fundamental form of objection as to jurisdiction is this: It is said that, in any event, on 18th January 1932 the accused were being tried when they were called upon to plead and their plea was recorded. The mere fact that the case had to be adjourned in order that the jury might be empanelled was an accident which does not entitle any one to say that the trial had not commenced. The Sessions Judge had commenced the proceedings by taking the steps indicated by S. 271, Criminal P. C. That being so, the argument is that there was no power under the Ordinance to direct a trial by a Special Magistrate, if at the time of that direction the accused persons were already on trial for the same offence. We have to consider carefully the meaning and effect of Ss. 30 and 34 of this Ordinance. It will be observed that, if S. 30 be taken by itself, in a case where the Local Government is of opinion that there are reasonable grounds before them to think that certain persons have committed a scheduled offence or an offence punishable under the Ordinance the section says that it "may by order in writing direct that such person shall be tried by a Special Magistrate." So far, no attention seems to be paid to the circumstance that the accused may already be on trial or that an inquiry may be in progress in connexion with the same offence. The matter is put simply as if the Local Government has come to a certain conclusion and directs a trial to be held by a Special Magistrate for a particular offence. When we come to S. 34 we see that the saving for persons who are already on their trial is a saving confined to those persons who were being tried on the date of the promulgation of the Ordinance and this provision has a marked negative value and would not seem to put such persons on the same footing as persons who later on were on trial before an ordinary Court at the time when the direction of the Local Government was made. If we carefully study S. 34, we find that having given a direction that the existing trials are not to be interfered with—by existing trials I mean the trials that were in progress on the date of the promulgation of the Ordinance—the section goes on to say that:

"save as aforesaid, a direction under either of the said sections may be made in respect of any person accused of a scheduled offence."

If therefore it is legitimate to stop there, it would seem that that provision authorizes such direction except in the cases excluded by the opening words of the section. But the concluding phrase of the section—"whether such offence was committed before or after the promulgation of this Ordinance"—trenches upon a different matter. That is intended to make it clear that the date of the offence has nothing to do with the applicability of the present procedure. It is contended by Mr. Basu that the main feature and purpose of S. 34 is to make it clear that an offence, although committed before the promulgation of this Ordinance, may be dealt with by the special procedure. Mr. Basu suggests that, as the Local Government prior to the promulgation of the Ordinance would have had no opportunity of considering whether a special procedure was desirable or not, it might have been contended consistently with the general idea that no existing trial was at any time to be disturbed, that there was a special reason for disturbing an existing trial if it was in progress on the date of the promulgation of the Ordinance and that the opening words of S. 34 are intended "ex abundanti cautela" to negative such contention. For this reason he says that we are not to draw any inference from the opening words to the effect that trials which were not in existence at the promulgation of the Ordinance were not to be interfered with.

It seems to me that that is a very difficult construction to put upon S. 34. If we consider the course of legislation leading up to this section, Mr. Basu's view becomes even more difficult to maintain. By the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908, S. 2, a scheme was provided by which certain offences were to be tried before a Special Bench of the High Court and the procedure was that where the Magistrate had taken cognizance of any offence specified in the schedule the Local Government could make an order which would attract the special provisions of the Act. By sub-S. (2) it was provided that:

"no order shall be made in any case in which an order of commitment to the High Court or Court of Session has been made under the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898; but save as aforesaid, an order may be made in respect of any offence whether committed before or after the commencement of this Act."

That appears to be the original of the provision which was afterwards repeated in the Ordinance of 1931. Under the Act of 1908 the making of an order of commitment whether to the High Court or to the Court of Session was to put an end to the power of the Local Government to apply the special procedure and we know that the procedure was to be applied in cases where the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the offence. It would seem therefore that unless there was an order of commitment that provision would apply even although the trial before the Magistrate was proceeding. The next time this provision was made was by the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1925, which was made by the Governor of Bengal under the special power conferred by S. 72, Cl. (E), Government of India Act. There by S. 3 it was provided:

"(1) The Local Government may by order in writing direct that any person accused of any offence specified in Sch. 1 shall be tried by commissioners appointed under this Act; and (2) no order under sub-S. (1) shall be made in respect of or be deemed to include any person who has been committed under the Code for trial before a High Court; but save as aforesaid an order under the subsection may be made in respect of or may include any person accused of any offence specified in Sch. 1 whether such offence was committed before or after the commencement of this Act."

It is clear enough therefore that the making of an order of commitment to Sessions was not enough to prevent the Local Government under this Act from applying the special procedure, though an order of commitment for trial before the High Court would of itself bar the application of the special procedure. The reason no doubt was that it was not thought that the competency of the local legislature would extend to an interference with cases pending before the High Court. The Ordinance with which we are now concerned however is an Ordinance made by the Governor-General exercising powers which are identical with those of the Central Legislature. It has not therefore been thought necessary to make any discrimination between trials at the Session and trials before the High Court on commitment, and the saving which is made by S. 34 is confined to trials that were in progress on the date of the promulgation of the Ordinance. But with that exception it is said that a direction may be made in respect of any person accused of any scheduled offence. It seems to me impossible therefore to say that trials which were begun after the Ordinance had been passed were put in the same position as the trials mentioned in the opening language of S. 34. There would be no point in making a special exception for the trials proceeding at the time of the promulgation of this Ordinance, if no trial once commenced could be interfered with by the operation of any order made under S. 30. The Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages Act (12 of 1932) repeats in S. 29 the same language as S. 34, Ordinance 11 of 1931, which is now before us. It is indeed a very large power that is given to the Local Government in this way. If an order is to have the operation of bringing to an end a trial that is already in progress, no doubt such a power as that would be readily liable to the greatest abuse. On the other hand, so far as trials before a Magistrate are concerned, I think it was early found necessary to eliminate altogether the idea that the special procedure is inapplicable whenever the trial before the Magistrate has begun.

It is very difficult to say at what stage—apart from the very earliest stage—trial does begin before a Magistrate. There is some ground for arguing that the moment the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence the trial commences. On the other hand, people may argue that in a warrant case not until the charge is framed can the trial be said to have begun. It has to be remembered that in many proceedings before a Magistrate the position is that the Magistrate makes up his mind at a late stage either to deal with the case himself or to make an order of commitment: S. 347, Criminal P. C. When he does, in fact, make an order of commitment, then, of course, the magisterial proceedings are mere enquiry. He does not know in many cases until towards the end whether the order is to be made or not; and I think it has been found impossible to exercise the power of applying the special procedure under a limitation of that power—never to interfere with an existing trial. As each of the enactments to which I have referred, namely of 1908, 1925 and 1931, have been made, the liberty given to the Local Government seems to have been made wider and when finally, in S. 34, Ordinance 11 of 1931, we find an express saving for those trials which were in existence on 30th November 1931, I do not think it possible as a matter of construction to say that an order under S. 30 is bad merely because it interferes with a trial begun subsequent to 30th November 1931. I think were it necessary to decide the matter, that the correct way of applying the phrase "for which he was being tried" would be to ask oneself whether, the proceedings indicated by S. 271, Criminal P. C., had been commenced or not. But in the present case, the order of the Local Government was made before the trial in the narrower sense had commenced, that is to say, the jury had not been empanelled, the prosecution case had not been opened and no evidence had been taken. This second form of objection to the jurisdiction fails and should be overruled.

On the facts, I am of opinion that the Special Magistrate's judgment should be confirmed. He points out that the evidence of identification is given by no less than four persons and he points out that this has been corroborated and amply corroborated by the circumstance that the complainant mentioned the names of both the accused as his assailants immediately after the occurrence. I have no doubt therefore that on the question of identification the Special Magistrate's judgment is correct.

Upon the question whether it is sufficiently proved that all the elements of S. 307, I. P. C., are present in this case, I think there is no difficulty. Certain persons are clearly in fear of being apprehended by the police. When they find that they are being followed they turn round and fire at the constables. In these circumstances it is a very great strain on one's imagination to suppose that they were using revolvers loaded with blank cartridges when there is no evidence to indicate that they were so doing. The circumstance that they did not succeed in hitting anybody is no reason for supposing that the cartridges were blank. The question whether there was any smoke or not is not material for the purpose of the present question. We have it that the persons turned round and deliberately fired, though they did not hit anybody. That is no reason for supposing that they were not attempting to hit; it is much more likely that they wanted to hit. I am not impressed by the argument that because the bullets have not been found we ought to assume that no case has been made out under S. 307, I. P. C. As regards the sentences, I regard them to be light and I see no reason to interfere with them. This appeal therefore must be dismissed.

Costello, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Criminal P. C. (1898). S. 258—Warrant case—Charges framed—Parties not appearing on adjourned date—Magistrate cannot act under S. 258.

In a warrant case, some of the witnesses were examined and charges were framed and the case was adjourned to a particular date. On that day the parties did not appear and the Magistrate thinking that the proposed compromise might have materialized dealt with the case under S. 258, Criminal P. C., and recorded an acquittal:

Held: that he had no right to do so as charges had already been framed and that the acquittal order should be set aside. [P 358 O 2]

Pearson, J.—This was a warrant case before the Magistrate. Summons was issued under S. 323, I. P. C. Some of the witnesses were examined and charges framed. The case was ultimately adjourned till 28th June 1932. In the meantime it appears that certain negotiations for settlement had been going on, which had previously been brought to the notice of the Magistrate. On that particular day 28th June, when the case was called on, the parties did not appear and the Magistrate thought that it was due to the fact that the settlement had materialized and that the parties had made up their differences. Accordingly, he dealt with the case under S. 258, Criminal P. C., and recorded an order of acquittal. Strictly speaking, there is no doubt that this order cannot be justified. The mere fact of the absence of the accused or complainant would not warrant an order of this kind to be made. The learned District Magistrate with reference to the present rule says that he is not in a position to support the order of acquittal and the trying Magistrate would fain have set aside his order at a later stage in the day had he found himself able to do so. I think it is clear that the order that he did make was wrong. He could not have acted under S. 258, Criminal P. C., because charges had already been framed.

In the events that have happened it turns out that the Magistrate had no right to pass this order in the manner that he did. The rule is accordingly, made absolute and the order complained of is set aside. The trial will be proceeded with on that footing.

Brahmacharai and Sudhir Kumar Kastgir—for Opposite Party.

Ameer Ali, J.—This is a reference under S. 27, Workmen's Compensation Act, by the Commissioner for Bengal. The question referred is as to the meaning of the expression "unmarried daughter" in S. 2 (1) (d) of the Act. The applicant is the daughter of the deceased workman; she is a widow and it is not disputed that she lived with and was maintained by her father during widowhood for about eight years. She was at the date of the death of her father his only relative. Before the Commissioner the applicant relied upon the case of Moti Bai v. N. W. Ry. (1) in which it was held that the expression "unmarried sister" included widowed sister. The learned Commissioner had certain doubts as to the correctness of that decision and at the request of both parties to the proceeding he has referred the question to this Court in a careful and well-considered letter of reference dated 20th July 1932. The Commissioner's two main reasons for questioning the correctness of the decision referred to are expressed by him at the end of his letter of reference as follows:

"First I find great difficulty in holding that discussions of the construction of settlements and wills were in pari materia, [he refers to the English authorities which formed the basis of the decision in Moti Bai's case (1)]; and secondly, there being no element of de facto dependency in the definition in the Act, the observations at p. 232 (of 13 Lah.) Moti Bai's case (1) appear to me to introduce an extraneous factor into the discussion."

With both these observations I agree subject to this, that I do not read the remarks at p. 232 as meaning that the applicant's claim was adjudged or awarded on the basis of de facto dependency. I read them as meaning that where the legislature has sought to give the connotation of the word "dependants" by setting out descriptions of certain relatives, and one of these descriptions is uncertain, it is relevant to consider who according to the ordinary notions of the people as regarded as "dependants."

With regard to the meaning of the word "unmarried" the learned Commissioner expresses his own view at the end of Cl. 3 and the beginning of Cl. 4 of the letter of reference as follows: (1) that the word "unmarried" has a primary and a secondary significance; (2) that in its primary or ordinary signification the word "unmarried means" "never having been married"; and (3) that the application of the secondary meaning of the word unmarried is entirely a matter of context and circumstances. These propositions he founds upon a reference to the dictionary and his reading of the English authorities to which he had access.

With regard to the dictionary meaning of the word I am however of opinion that the view taken by the learned Commissioner is not correct. In all the general dictionaries to which I have referred—Murray's Dictionary, Johnson's Dictionary and some of the later ones—the meaning given is as "not married" or "single" and another meaning given is as "never having been married." On the other hand in Stroude's Judicial Dictionary, which of course is based upon legal decisions, there is a definite division into primary and secondary meanings—the primary meaning being given as "never having been married."

For a discussion of the authorities and the circumstances under which the Courts have held one or other meaning to apply reference may be made to three passages in Jarman on Wills, Edn. 7, respectively, at pp. 589, 1251 and 1597. I propose to refer to certain of the cases cited in order of date.

In Moberly v. Strode (2), "never married" is said to be "the common and usual meaning in a will" and again as "the common acceptance of it in language." At p. 454 there is a reference to the Statute 3 Will and Mary Ch. 11, S. 7 (a Poor Law Act) where "unmarried" is used as not married at the time. In Maugham v. Vincent (3), at p. 331, "never married" is referred to as "the common use of the word, but not 'necessarily the meaning'; 'strictly speaking it would mean not being in a state of marriage or otherwise "discoverte." In Clarke v. Colls (4), (a report which was not available to the Commissioner) at p. 612 it is said that the expression "may without violence of language mean either," and at p. 615 it is referred to as "capable of two constructions" "the context must determine."

The argument in that case was based not upon primary and secondary meaning, but upon redundancy. In Day v. Barnard (5), at p. 221, it is said that the word "unmarried popularly and most frequently means never married," but "the popular sense is not the grammatical or dictionary sense." That it is a word therefore which has "a flexible meaning." In Dalrymple v. Hall (6), at p. 716, it is stated that the ordinary meaning is "never married;" and in the result the Judge decided that as there was no context to indicate the meaning of the word "unmarried" he would attribute to it the ordinary meaning "without ever having been married." In Re. Sergeant (7) at p. 576 it was stated that the "primary and natural sense" is "never married" and that if the instrument is colourless it would be construed in that sense. Lastly in Blundell v. De Falbe (8), at p. 577, it is stated that "never married" is "the first of the meanings, the more ordinary and the more usual," but that it is "a very flexible word and is constantly used in ordinary life in each of the two meanings."

I would therefore prefer to state the result of the authorities as to the meaning of the word as follows: (1) That the dictionary or grammatical sense of the word is not married; (2) that the popular and more usual sense is never having been married; (3) that the word is commonly used in either sense and is therefore a "flexible" or equivocal term; (4) that for this reason the meaning must in all cases be discovered from the context; (5) that in the case of deeds and wills where there is no context, where the document is completely colourless, the popular sense will usually be adopted.

In other words I think it is putting it too high to say that in all cases there is a primary meaning and a secondary meaning or that the first is the rule and the second is the exception. With regard to the special rules for the construction of Statutes one rule is that words may and normally should be construed in their popular sense: see Maxwell, Edn. 7, p. 47. There is however another rule that words should be construed so as to advance the remedy provided by the Act: see p. 59 and the following. The two cases illustrative of this rule which have some topical connexion with the present case are Jones v. Davis (9), where in a Statute, relating to another matter altogether, "single woman" was construed so as to include as a married woman living apart from her husband. In King v. Inhabitants of Wymondham (10), a case which arose out of the Poor Law Statute I have referred to, "single and unmarried" in an "examination" was interpreted as "never having been married," the converso case. With regard to the context of the word in the present case the view taken by the Commissioner is expressed on the last page of the letter of reference as follows in the following manner:

"The words in the definition constitute an inclusive list of all the nearer relatives; on marriage a daughter acquires a new relationship . . . and I see nothing in the definition of dependants to warrant a supposition that on the death of her husband she resumes the original relationship."

The comment which occurs to me is as follows: a daughter undoubtedly acquires a new relationship on marriage. She does not however lose the old relationship; she remains a daughter. Once a daughter always a daughter: qua relationship she is a daughter before, during and after marriage. On the other hand the legislature has attached a qualification or condition that in order to participate a female child must not only be a daughter, but she must be an "unmarried" daughter. The question is what is the meaning of that qualification. Does it exclude daughters once, but no longer, married? I think not. It appears to me that the important portion of the context to read in connexion with the definition is the operative part of S. 8 which provides for one payment to be distributed at a special time or period—the death of the employee—among particular persons. According to the English authorities and also I think in common conversation, when “unmarried” forms a qualification in the description of a person who is to receive a sum of money at a definite time or period, the meaning “not married” appears to be appropriate: see Leshingham Trust 21 Ch. D. 703 and Jarman on Wills in particular at p. 1252. For these reasons I agree with the decision in 13 Lah. 228 (1) and construe the expression “unmarried daughter” in S. 2, 1 (d) of the Act as including widowed daughter.

Rankin, C. J.—I agree and I would only add that, in my judgment, while it is quite true that the definition of dependency is made by the statute by a list of certain relatives, it is quite clear that in the case of a daughter the mere relationship to the workman was not regarded as itself a sufficient test. The statute has by speaking of “unmarried daughter” introduced an element extraneous to the mere question of relationship to the workman and I think it is legitimate in considering the effect of the word “unmarried” in such a case as that to consider it as a factor chosen by the legislature because in many cases at least it has a certain bearing upon the question of dependency in fact. I think, therefore, that there is no reason to dissent from the decision of the High Court of Lahore in Moti Bai's case (1); and, with all respect to the Commissioner who has put before us a very well-reasoned opinion, I am not prepared to depart from the principle laid down in that case. The applicant will have her costs before the Commissioner and before us from the employers. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at three gold mohurs.

The High Court would interfere and reduce a sentence in revision even although the convicted person fails to exercise his right of appeal and does not himself move the Court in revision, and the application is made by a third party, where the convicted person has insuperable difficulties in agitating grievances in the manner provided by law; but where the convicted persons are men of position holding university degrees and practising as lawyers and they do not appeal from the judgment convicting them, the High Court will not entertain an application for reduction of sentence at the instance of third party even though the sentences are very heavy.

Order.—This is an application made by one Mr. Ambika Charan De, described as the Joint Secretary of the District Bar Association, Sylhet. He has obtained this Rule on behalf of 23 persons who were tried by the Extra Assistant Commissioner, Sylhet, and convicted of offences punishable under Ss. 145 and 151, I. P. C. They have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment ranging from two years rigorous imprisonment under S. 145 to six months rigorous imprisonment under S. 145. They have all been in addition sentenced to six months under S. 151, but the Extra Assistant Commissioner directed that in each case the sentences should run concurrently. It appears that the accused persons on 26th January 1932, formed a procession which started from the Congress Office in the town of Sylhet. They are said to have proceeded in such a way that the traffic was not obstructed. When they reached the Government Muslim Hostel, they were met by a party of police officers under the command of the Assistant Superintendent of Police, who directed them to proceed by a route different from that which they were hitherto following. They thereupon sat down on the ground in the public road and, it is said, caused obstruction to the traffic. The Superintendent of Police and the Additional District Magistrate, Mr. Mitra, arrived shortly after this. Mr. Mitra considering that the procession was likely to cause a breach of the public peace commanded it to disperse.

It is not suggested that at any stage, Mr. Mitra exceeded the powers which the law gives him. After five minutes as the meeting had failed to disperse, Mr. Mitra directed Mr. Jacques, the Assistant Superintendent of Police to disperse it by force. This Mr. Jacques did and arrested the accused persons. At the trial they refused to take any part in the proceedings or to make any statements. The evidence therefore proving the facts which I have set out was uncontradicted. Moreover the accused have not seen fit to prefer an appeal from their convictions and sentences as they were entitled to do under the law. I will assume however for the purposes of dealing with the case that the petitioner is entitled to move this Court in revision although by reason of the provision of S. 439, sub S. (5), Criminal P. C., this Court is precluded from entertaining any proceedings by way of revision at the instance of a party who could have appealed but has not done so.

First with regard to the convictions the petitioner admits that no exception could be taken to the conviction under S. 151. With regard to the conviction under S. 145 it was a question of fact to be dealt with and decided by the Extra Assistant Commissioner whether the assembly of which the accused persons were admittedly members had an unlawful common object. He has found as a fact that they had the common object of resisting the execution of lawful orders given by the Assistant Superintendent of Police and the Additional District Magistrate. There is ample evidence to justify him in coming to the conclusion. It appears that no general or special notice had been issued under S. 30 (2), Police Act, 1861. Therefore no exception could be taken to the procession on the ground that no license had been applied for or issued. However the conduct of the processionists in sitting on the ground when ordered to take a different route and refusing to disperse when called upon to do so, coupled with the fact that the conduct of the accused proved that the procession was animated by hostility to the established Government, amply justified the Extra Assistant Commissioner in finding that from the very outset, or at any rate from the time Mr. Jacques gave directions to the processionists to go by another route, the processionists were determined to disregard and disobey any lawful orders that the police or the Magistrate might give him. Therefore the conclusion to which the Extra Assistant Commissioner has come, has evidence to support it, and speaking for myself, I have no doubt whatever that it is the right one.

With regard to the sentences they are undoubtedly heavy, and we are far from saying that it is not possible to imagine circumstances in which this High Court would interfere and reduce a sentence in revision even although the convicted person fails to exercise his right of appeal and does not himself move the Court in revision, and the application is made by a third party. We can conceive circumstances in which there might be insuperable difficulties in the way of the convicted person agitating his grievances in the manner provided by law. No such circumstances exist in this case. All the convicted persons are educated and it is not denied, but on the contrary emphasized, that the ring leaders who have received the heaviest sentences are men of position and that many of them hold University degrees and are practising lawyers. In our opinion in this case we cannot entertain an application for reduction of sentence at the instance of a third party, the convicted persons not having seen fit to appeal. This being so we discharge the Rule.

Criminal Appeal No. 427 of 1932, Decided on 19th December 1932.

Penal Code (1860), S. 366-A—Accused inducing girl between 16 or 18 years without force or fraud to go from any place with intent to have illicit intercourse with himself is not guilty of any offence.

The person who induces a girl of an age between the years of 16 and 18 without force or fraud to go from any place with the intention that she will have illicit intercourse with himself does not commit any offence. The new section, however, makes it an offence in the case of such girl if she is induced by a person to go from any place with intent that she may be or knowing that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person. [P 263 C 1, 2]

Suresh Chunder Talukdar and Joy Gopal Ghose—for Appellants.

Khundkar and Fanindra Nath Sanyal—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case we directed the appeal to be re-argued because it turns upon a comparatively recent amendment of the Penal Code, namely, what is now S. 366-A which was added by Act 22 of 1923. At the original hearing, Mr. Talukdar contended that, if the two accused persons were found to have induced the girl to go from her father's house to some other house, nevertheless, if the intention or knowledge was that she would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with themselves and not with another person, the offence under S. 366 A would not be made out. It appeared to me at the time that this state of the law was a little paradoxical and I confess I did not appreciate that so much can be said for that argument. The case before us is of a widowed girl. It is fairly evident that the jury were not prepared to find that she was under 16 years of age. It is also evident that the jury were not prepared to find that force or fraud had been used upon her. They acquitted both the accused persons therefore of the charge under S. 366, I. P. C. By a majority, however, they convicted the accused under S. 366-A; and we have to see what the learned Judge's charge was as regards that particular offence.

Now, the learned Judge told the jury that he did not agree that under S. 366-A it was necessary to show that the illicit intercourse was to be with some other person besides the accused. It appears that, as the law now stands, the person who induces a girl of an age between the years 16 and 18 without force or fraud to go from any place with the intention that she will have illicit intercourse with himself does not commit any offence. The new section however makes it an offence in the case of such girl if she is induced by a person to go from any place with intent that she may be or knowing that it is likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse with another person. We have to see what the case is as regards each of the two appellants before us. The prosecution case as against the appellant Abbas apparently is that he was ultimately minded to get married to this girl if he could. She was a Hindu girl and he was a Mahomedan. The prosecution case however was that when this girl came away from her father's house with the accused she was taken from place to place and from house to house for a certain number of nights, and the learned Judge left it to the jury as it was a question for the jury to determine whether there was any intention of illicit intercourse. On the other hand, it is clear enough according to the prosecution case that the accused Abbas was taking the girl because he wanted apparently to marry her or to have illicit intercourse with her himself and therefore he is not guilty under S. 366-A and apparently not guilty also of any other offence the girl being over 16 and under 18 years of age.

As against the other appellant Ujir, no doubt, it might be said that if the intention was that Abbas would have intercourse with her it was open to the jury to convict him under S. 366-A; but in that case it would be very necessary indeed that it should be shown that Ujir did something by way of inducing the girl. It is much more probable that Abbas did whatever was necessary to induce her to go. There is the evidence of the girl herself that she went of her own accord and there is no material on the record to show that Ujir did anything particular at the time the girl left her father's house. On the whole, it appears to me therefore having reconsidered this matter that the conviction of the appellants cannot stand. I think that there are no materials before us which would justify us in ordering that either of these two accused be retried. I would therefore direct that the appellants be acquitted and discharged.

Emperor—Opposite Party.Criminal Appeal No. 1070 of 1932, Decided on 7th February 1933.

(a) Ordinance (10 of 1932) — It is under Ordinance-making power of Governor-General to alter and amend Letters Patent—Government of India Act (1915), S. 106—Letters Patent (Calcutta) (1865), Cl. 22.

Section 106, Government of India Act, leaves the definition of the High Court's original criminal jurisdiction to be made by the Letters Patent and the High Court derives a particular original criminal jurisdiction from Cl. 22, Letters Patent, 1865. It is within the power of the Indian legislature to alter and amend the Letters Patent and consequently within the Ordinance-making power of the Governor-General under the Government of India Act.

(b) Ordinance (10 of 1932), S. 48—It is duty of Special Judge to make reference to Local Government when question is raised by defence under S. 48.

Where the Local Government acting under S. 32 is of opinion that the offence was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace and at the trial upon a question being raised, on behalf of the accused that the offence, it committed at all, was not committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace the Special Judge refuses to refer the matter under S. 48 to the Local Government, he being of opinion that this course would be futile in view of the declaration contained in the order directing the form of the trial, the Special Judge fails in his duty for the duty of the Special Judge is to make a reference at the time the question is raised. It may be quite true that it would have been open to the Special Judge to raise the question himself at the beginning of the trial; it may be quite true that he was not obliged to make a reference the moment the point was taken if he had made it some time or another before he gave final judgment in the case. But in thinking it futile to make a reference the Special Judge omitted to consider whether it would not be equally futile to go on with the trial of the case without making the reference.

(c) Ordinance (10 of 1932), S. 48 (2)—High Court cannot act under S. 48 (2)—Criminal P. C., S. 428 is not applicable—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 428.

It is not competent for the High Court to decide upon the fact whether the offence was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace because the statute intends that matter to be left solely with the Local Government. It is quite true that by S. 428, Criminal P. C., the High Court has ample power to take additional evidence or to order additional evidence to be taken; but this is not a question of taking evidence. This is a question of referring a certain matter to the Local Government for administrative order.

However the High Court has, under S. 423, Criminal P. C., power to order a retrial by a Court of competent jurisdiction with power to order a commitment. [P 365 C 2; P 366 C 1]

Khitiish Chunder Chuckerbutti, Panchanan Ghosal and Benoy Krishna Bose—for Appellant.

Khundkar and Anil Chander Roy Chowdhury—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the appellant together with a number of other persons was tried before a Special Judge under Ordinance 10 of 1932. The charges were really three—conspiracy to murder, abetment of attempt to murder and harbouring a person who had taken part in an attempt to murder, the latter charge being laid under S. 212, I. P. C. The appellant was acquitted by the Special Judge on the first two charges but he was convicted of the offence under S. 212 and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The evidence upon which the appellant has been in the end convicted of the offence of harbouring is very short and simple. It consists really, as the Special Judge puts the matter of the judicial confession of the accused himself coupled with corroboration in a letter found in the room in which the accused was arrested and alleged to be in his handwriting. At the hearing of this appeal two contentions were raised upon which I shall say something first. The first contention was that in this case Ordinance 10 of 1932 was invalid and ineffective because it was contrary to the provisions of the Government of India Act which vests original criminal jurisdiction in this High Court within the limits of the town of Calcutta. In my judgment there is nothing in that contention. S. 106, Government of India Act, leaves the definition of this High Court's original criminal jurisdiction to be made by the Letters Patent and we derive a particular original criminal jurisdiction from Cl. 22, Letters Patent, 1865. It is within the power of the Indian legislature to alter and amend the Letters Patent and consequently within the Ordinance-making power of the Governor-General under the Government of India Act. In any case however the argument has little substance because it appears that this offence was committed partly at all events within the 24-Parganas and the Special Judge who tried the case was a Special Judge for the area of 24 Parganas among other areas. That point therefore fails altogether.

The second question with which it is necessary to deal is this: The Local Government under S. 32 made a special order directing the Special Judge to try this particular case. In the special order made by the Local Government in advance of the trial it was recited that the Local Government was of opinion that the offence was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. At the trial which proceeded according to the method of warrant cases the learned Judge on the fourth day proceeded to frame charges. Then for the first time a question was raised on behalf of this accused that the offence, if committed at all, was not committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace. The learned Special Judge referring to the recitals in "the order already made by the Local Government" refused to refer the matter to the Local Government at that stage, he being of opinion that this course would be futile in view of the declaration contained in the order directing the form of the trial. In this Court it has been contended that the learned Special Judge was not justified in refusing to refer the matter as is required by sub-S. (2), S. 48 of the Ordinance. In my opinion it cannot be a good reason for refusing to obey the direction of an enactment in a matter of this kind that the Court thinks that no good purpose would be served by obeying. Assuming that the Local Government is not obliged to decide the question according to the evidence taken in the case it is at all events within the discretion of the Local Government to have some regard to that evidence, and if on the fourth day of the trial the learned Judge was to obey the Statute I think it was his duty to make a reference at the time the question was raised. It may be quite true that it would have been open to the learned Judge to raise the question himself at the beginning of the trial; it may be quite true that he was not obliged to make a reference the moment the point was taken if he had made it some time or another before he gave final judgment in the case. But in thinking it futile to make a reference the learned Special Judge omitted to consider whether it would not be equally futile to go on with the trial of the case without making the reference. The Statute nowhere says that this question should be determined by the Local Government in advance and the particular provision of S. 32 under which the Government's order was made begins with the phrase "subject to the provisions of S. 48." Nothing therefore that the Local Government could do under S. 32 would escape being subject to the provisions of S. 48 and S. 48 begins by saying:

"No Court shall try any offence unless it is an offence punishable under this Ordinance or was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace."

Notwithstanding anything contained under S. 32 the Special Judge was prima facie prohibited from trying this case unless it satisfied that condition; but by Cl. 2, S. 48 it is said that:

"the question whether or not an offence is of the nature described shall not be raised in any Court other than the Court trying the offence and where such question is so raised then, if the Court is that of a Special Judge the question shall be referred to the Local Government."

It seems to me that in these circumstances in order to give himself power to deal with this case the Special Judge was under an obligation to carry out the requirements of sub-S. (2). The requirements of sub-S. (2) not having been carried out, it does not appear to me that there has been any determination so as to satisfy the Statute upon the question whether the offence was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace.

In these circumstances, it has been pressed upon us by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer that as the point can be raised at any time and be referred to the Local Government we ought to make such reference now. It is clearly not competent for us to decide ourselves upon the fact whether the offence was committed in furtherance of a movement prejudicial to the public safety or peace because the Statute intends that matter to be left solely with the Local Government. Upon consideration I am not prepared to make any such reference by this Court. It is quite true that by S. 428, Criminal P. C., this Court has ample power to take additional evidence or to order additional evidence to be taken; but this is not a question of taking evidence. This a question of referring a certain matter to the Local Government for administrative order. I see nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code giving us power to deal with such a position as that and while it is very tempting to say that this Court of appeal has all the powers of the original trial Court I am not certain, looking to the history of the various editions of the Criminal Procedure Code, that that proposition in all its universality is true in our criminal law. The matter however is more difficult by reason of the provisions of the Ordinance itself which prohibits the question from being raised in any Court other than the trial Court; and it is rendered more difficult still by the consideration that the Ordinance having ceased to take effect the Court itself, if I may use the expression, is no longer functioning.

We have however under S. 423, Criminal P. C., power to order a retrial by a Court of competent jurisdiction with power if we think fit to order a commitment. In my judgment, having regard to the fact that this accused was acquitted of all charges, save the charge under S. 212, I. P. C., having regard to the fact that the local jurisdiction under S. 182 is equally good in the Presidency town and in the 24 Pargannas and having regard to the fact that the case under S. 212 is now an exceedingly simple one, the proper course for us to adopt is to allow the appeal, to set aside the conviction and the sentence and to direct that the appellant be retried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate upon a charge under S. 212, I. P. C., only in his ordinary jurisdiction. We intend to decide upon a review of all the matters which would be proper for a Magistrate to consider under S. 347, Criminal P. C., that it is not necessary and desirable that this man should be committed to the Sessions upon this charge and that the Chief Presidency Magistrate shall try the case himself.

Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China—Plaintiffs.

v.

Imperial Bank of India—Defendants.

Original Civil Suit No. 1053 of 1928

Decided on 29th June 1932.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 178—Pawnee in possession of goods agreeing to be trustee of plaintiff—Goods pledged to defendant—Defendant acting bona fide and without knowledge of trust—Pledge is valid—Insolvency of pawnee—Plaintiff is not entitled to recover goods—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1908), S. 52 and Trusts Act (1882), Ss. 3 and 64.

The shippers of K. T. & Co., an importer firm used to draw bills of exchange on them for the price of goods shipped. The plaintiff used to finance shippers by discounting these bills and took as security bills of lading and other documents relating to goods and the shippers executed letters of request and hypothecation in favour of the bank. It was a term in the contract that the documents attached were not to be delivered until payment of relative bills. The bank in breach of the agreement with the shippers handed over the bills of lading and the documents to the importer firm before payment and took in return certain documents called trust receipts. Thus the firm got the documents and goods before payment. By the trust receipt it was provided that until payment the firm was to hold the goods and sale proceeds as trustees of the bank. After getting delivery of goods, the importer firm pledged them with the defendant bank who took them in good faith without knowing about the trust receipts and were having effective control over them. The defendant bank had allowed overdraft to the importers who became insolvent when they were liable to pay both the banks. The plaintiff bank claimed the goods contending that the pledge to the defendant bank was invalid.

Held: that as the importer firm was in possession of the goods and as the defendant bank had no knowledge of the trust receipts, the pledge was valid whatever might be the effect of the trust receipts, that as the importer firm was not the legal owner there was no bona fide trust that the real object of the trust receipts was to defeat the provisions of S. 52 (2) (c), Insolvency Act and that even if the pledge to the defendant bank were to be invalid, the plaintiff bank could not sue for recovery of the goods as the property in the goods would vest in the Official Assignee: *AIR 1930 Cal 171; AIR 1932 Cal 80 and Joy v. (b) Contract Act (1872), S. 17—Allegation of fraud should be made clearly and promptly.

Court will not allow allegations of fraud to be made lightly, or otherwise than with the utmost precision and particularity, and above all promptly. [P 371 C 1]

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 415—Ingredients for offence mentioned.

To constitute the offence of cheating there must be active deception, by which the accused must (a) fraudulently or dishonestly induce the person to deliver property etc. or (b) intentionally induce him to do or omit something which causes damage etc. to him, or there must be a dishonest concealment of facts, with the like results. [P 372 C 1]

(d) Penal Code (1860), S. 25—"Defraud."

The word "defraud" is not defined in the Code, but connotes generally an intention to deceive, coupled with the possibility of doing injury. [P 371 C 1]

(e) Contract Act (1872), S. 17—Fraud—Meaning explained—Mere silence is not fraud.

It is doubtful whether the definition in S. 17 is intended to apply to the word "fraud" in S. 178; the definition requires either an intent to deceive or to induce a contract, by a false suggestion known to be false, or the active concealment of a fact or a promise made without any intention of performing it, or any other act fitted to deceive, or any act specially declared by law to be fraudulent. Mere silence is not fraud unless there is a duty to speak, or unless it is equivalent to speech. [P 372 C 1]

Judgment.—The firm of Kerr Tarruck & Co., prior to the month of October 1927, used to carry on business in Calcutta as importers and dealers. Their shippers used to draw bills of exchange on them for the price of the goods shipped. The plaintiffs used to finance the shippers by discounting these bills, or by issuing other bills in exchange, and took, as security the bills of lading and other documents relating to the goods, and the shippers from time to time executed letters of request and hypothecation in favour of the plaintiffs. These bills of exchange were called advance bills as distinguished from other bills of exchange which were handed to the plaintiffs by the shippers for collection only. By the terms of the letters of request and hypothecation, it was agreed inter alia, that the plaintiffs should accept the shippers' bills of exchange drawn upon their indentors (in this case Messrs. Kerr Tarruck & Co.) accompanied by bills of lading, invoices and marine insurance policies purporting to represent the relative merchandise shipped. The documentary bills were to be forwarded by the plaintiffs to their agents (in this case their Calcutta Branch) and the shippers undertook that their respective drawees (in this case Kerr Tarruck & Co.) would accept the bills on presentation and pay them at maturity. It was a term of the contract that the documents attached were not to be delivered until payment of the relative bills.

In consideration of the plaintiffs accepting their bills, the shippers undertook to pay the amount required to meet the acceptances in case the plaintiffs did not receive cover before maturity, or should the amounts received be insufficient, and to pay interest in case of default. Further in case of default by either the shippers or their indentors the plaintiffs were authorized to sell the goods. Kerr Tarruck & Co., had knowledge of these terms and of the terms of the contracts of sale, and in particular of the fact that the bills were D/P: that is to say, payment must be made on or before delivery of the shipping documents. The plaintiffs used to send the bills of exchange, with the bills of lading and other documents, to their branch in Calcutta and Kerr Tarruck & Co., accepted the bills. Thereupon and before obtaining payment, the Calcutta branch used habitually to hand over the bills of lading and other documents to Kerr Tarruck & Co., and take in exchange certain documents called trust receipts. This practice had been followed for 20 years prior to the year 1927, though obviously it was done in breach of the contract between the plaintiffs and the shippers contained in the letters of request and hypothecation, because it enabled Kerr Tarruck & Co. to obtain delivery of the documents and the goods before payment.

By the terms of the trust receipt it was provided that, in consideration of the plaintiffs having handed over the shipping documents in respect of goods hypothecated to them as collateral security for the due payment of the relative draft drawn upon and accepted by Kerr Tarruck & Co. the latter firm undertook to land, store and hold goods until sale as trustees for the plaintiffs, and in the event of sale by Kerr Tarruck & Co., to receive the gross proceeds as trustees for the plaintiffs, and forthwith to pay them in full to the plaintiffs. Further, Kerr Tarruck & Co. agreed, in case the goods were sold by them on credit, to obtain from the purchaser a promissory note for the price, payable on demand, and endorse it in favour of the plaintiffs forthwith, if called upon to do so, and to receive any sums paid in discharge of the notes, on behalf of the plaintiffs to whom such sums should belong, and to hold them as trustees for the plaintiffs and to pay them to the plaintiffs as and when received.

It is clear from the evidence that neither the plaintiffs nor Kerr Tarruck & Co. ever intended that these terms, which were printed, should be adhered to either strictly or in full. This was admitted by Mr. Pollock, Mr. Warren and Mr. Warwick, sub-agents of the plaintiffs. For example, Kerr Tarruck & Co. were not expected to pay the gross proceeds of sale to the plaintiffs forthwith or at all. One of the witnesses of the plaintiffs described this term as "silly." They were to meet the relative bills of exchange at maturity and this they did invariably, over a long period of years, and until they became insolvent. Further, goods, such as corrugated iron sheets and sugar, were not stored, nor ever intended by either party to be stored in the godown but were sold ex jetty. Moreover when goods were sold on credit Kerr Tarruck & Co. did not obtain promissory notes from the purchasers, but took bazar chits instead, nor did they pay the sums received in discharge thereof to the plaintiffs, when or as received, and when the plaintiffs became aware of these departures from the terms of the contract they acquiesced rather than risk the loss of good customers of high commercial repute and good standing, such as Kerr Tarruck & Co. were recognized to be. This is confirmed by the correspondence. In fact Mr. Warwick had to admit that the terms of the trust receipts contained in the first two, which are the main clauses of the agreement, had never been adhered to in practice. Having thus obtained the shipping documents, Kerr Tarruck & Co. used to get delivery of the goods from the ship and either sell them ex jetty or store them in a godown being the top flat of "D" division of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse at No. 102/2, Clive Street, Calcutta, which they rented, and in which large quantities of other goods were stored.

For many years Kerr Tarruck & Co. were customers of the defendants and for more than 15 years had had an overdraft account on the basis of cash credit agreement, which was renewed every six months. This was secured by a pledge of all goods stored from time to time in the godown in the Bengal Bonded Warehouse, over which the defendants at all material times exercised effective control. Control was effected by placing one of the defendants' godown sarkars in charge of the godown and the goods stored therein. This man wore upon his coat a metal badge engraved with the name of the defendants. The doors of the godown were secured by locks belonging to the defendants which also were engraved with their name. Every morning, the sarkar used to get the keys from the accountant of the defendants and open the godown. During the day, he remained in charge, and checked and passed all goods going in and out, and made a report daily to the defendants. He used to sit at a table in the entrance to the godown, and at the end of the day he locked up the godown and returned the keys to the defendants. While the godown was open the keys used to hang on the door staples. Kerr Tarruck & Co. also put their own locks on the doors, and kept their own sarkar there who, under the terms of the cash credit agreement, entered all movements of goods in a register, which was open to the inspection of the defendants, and supplied them daily with a schedule or copy of the entries in the register.

By an agreement in writing, which was renewed from time to time, Kerr Tarruck & Co. were permitted to remove from the godown as many as 30 cases per day without special reference to the defendants, and the sarkar was instructed accordingly, but for the removal of any cases in excess of that number Kerr Tarruck & Co. had to obtain a specific delivery order from the defendants, without which the sarkar would not allow the goods to pass. The maximum overdraft allowed, including interest thereon, was Rs. 7 lakhs, but at no time was it to exceed with interest 75 per cent of the market value (not being in excess of the normal value) of the goods for the time being pledged, that is to say, stored in the godown. The balance of the overdraft outstanding at any time was repayable on demand, and in default the defendants might sell the goods without notice.

It is admitted that the defendants received in good faith the goods thus stored and pledged with them. They had no knowledge of the arrangement between Kerr Tarruck & Co. and the plaintiffs, and believed that the goods belonged to Kerr Tarruck & Co. absolutely. In fact, Kerr Tarruck & Co. gave them written assurances to this effect, from time to time. On the other hand, Kerr Tarruck & Co. never informed the plaintiffs that they were pledging the goods so obtained under the terms of the trust receipts, to the defendants.

But the plaintiffs used to send officials to inspect and check the goods in the godown from time to time, and no attempt was made either by Kerr Tarruck & Co. or the defendants to conceal the fact that the latter were in possession and control of the godown and the goods contained therein and, in my opinion, such possession and control was open and effective and ought to have been apparent to any one exercising reasonable care and intelligence. Further, the plaintiffs were aware that the godown contained large quantities of goods in which they had no interest.

On 12th October 1927, Kerr Tarruck & Co., became insolvent, and the defendants locked up the godown, and placed upon it a notice marked "Imperial Bank, mortgagees, in possession." At this date, Kerr Tarruck & Co., were liable to the plaintiffs for considerable sums of money in respect of bills of exchange so accepted, and to the Imperial Bank in respect of their overdraft. All except two of such bills fell due after the date of the insolvency. On 14th October the plaintiffs claimed the goods in which they were interested and the defendants replied giving particulars of their pledge. Subsequently all the goods in the godown were sold by arrangement between the various parties interested therein, and the proceeds are being held by the defendants pending the decisions of the Court in this and other suits. On 11th May seven months after the insolvency, the plaintiffs issued their plaint in this suit. They contended that the alleged pledge to the defendants was invalid and of no effect, because the shipping documents and/or goods had been dealt with by Kerr Tarruck & Co., fraudulently by concealing the terms and conditions on which the goods were held by them. That is to say, they contended that the alleged pledge was invalid because Kerr Tarruck & Co., had defrauded the defendants. The latter contended inter alia that the plaintiffs by their actions had permitted the defendants to believe that Kerr Tarruck & Co., were the owners of the goods or entitled to deal therewith, and to act upon such belief, and that in consequence the plaintiffs were estopped from disputing the validity of the pledge.

The case came on for hearing on 17th January 1929, when counsel for the plaintiffs asked for an adjournment on the ground that the Official Assignee was about to file a plaint, asking for a declaration that the goods in question belonged to the general body of creditors of Kerr Tarruck & Co., and that it would be a waste of money to proceed with the suit in the circumstances. This application was refused and the case proceeded. The following issues were raised : (1) Are the plaintiffs entitled to maintain the suit ? (2) What, if any, was the property vested in the plaintiffs, in the goods which were the consideration for the bills of exchange mentioned in Ex. B to the plaint (a) before; and (b) after the delivery by the plaintiffs to Kerr Tarruck & Co. of the relative bills of lading ? (3) Did Kerr Tarruck & Co. hold such goods or any of them as trustees and/or as agents for the plaintiffs ? (4) Did Kerr Tarruck & Co. validly pledge such goods or any of them to the defendants ? (5) Are the plaintiffs estopped ? The hearing was adjourned from time to time and continued for several days ; a number of witnesses were called and both parties closed their cases save and except for counsel's final speeches.

Meanwhile, on 28th January 1929, the decision in the case of Rahimbux Ashan Karim v. Central Bank of India, Ltd. (1) was upheld on appeal. Thereupon, it became apparent, in the light of that decision, that the defendants would probably succeed in this case, on the pleadings as they then stood, their position and claim as valid pledgees within the terms of the old S. 178, Contract Act, which was then in force, being much stronger than that of the Central Bank of India, Limited, in the case cited. That being the position, the Advocate-General, on behalf of the plaintiffs, applied for leave to amend the plaint and to raise a new issue by alleging that the documents and/or goods had been obtained from the plaintiffs by Kerr Tarruck & Co., by fraud and the offence of cheating, and to rely upon proviso 2, S. 178. On 19th April 1929, judgment was given on this application, which was granted upon the terms that the plaintiffs should pay to the defendants the whole of the costs of the suit up to the date of the amendment, and the further hearing was adjourned, with leave to both parties to call further evidence. The hearing was resumed on 27th January 1932, when the plaint was further amended by adding the following particulars of fraud :

(a) Obtaining bills of lading and other documents on the representation that the terms of the trust receipts would be carried out, and that such terms had been carried out in the past, and by inducing the plaintiff bank to part with such documents on such representations. The said firm acted as it did without any intention of carrying out such representations. (b) Concealing the fact that it had a cash credit account with the Imperial Bank secured by the pledge of all goods stored and to be stored in the "D" division of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse. (c) Obtaining the goods covered by the documents with the intention of pledging the same with the Imperial Bank and by concealing the said intention from the plaintiff Bank.

Subsequently, further evidence was called. The arguments on the resumed hearing were directed largely to the question, what is the legal relation created by so-called "Trust Receipts." This question was considered in the case of In re Nripendra Kumar Bose (2), and my remarks therein have been explained and amplified in the judgment of Ameer Ali, J., in the case of In re. Sumermull Surana (3) with which I agree. So far as the present case is concerned the question can be disposed of shortly : Whatever be the relation created as between the plaintiffs and Kerr Tarruck & Co., whether the trust receipts created contracts of agency or something more, such as a trust, they cannot affect the defendants, who had no knowledge of them and who, bona fide, had given valuable consideration for the goods pledged. (S. 64, Trusts Act.)

It seems to me quite clear that, Kerr Tarruck & Co. were in possession of the goods within the meaning of the old S. 178, Contract Act, and could and did make a valid pledge of them to the defendants apart from any question arising under the terms of the second proviso. Further, I am satisfied, for the reasons given in the two cases to which I have just referred and in the circumstances of this case, that no trust was or could be created by means of the trust receipt, and that the goods were not and could not have been delivered by the Chartered Bank to Kerr Tarruck & Co. or held by them upon trust. Where anyone holds property in trust, bona fide, whether the trust is express or implied, he is in possession as the legal owner: Joy v. Cuampbell (4): Trusts Act, S. 3. It is clear that Kerr Tarruck & Co. were not the legal owners. They knew that their contract with the shippers was that the property in the goods should not pass, and delivery should not be given, except upon payment, and they knew that the plaintiffs had given delivery to them in breach of the contract of hypothecation between the plaintiffs and the shippers. Further, the plaintiff's case is that Kerr Tarruck & Co. were not the owners of the goods.

The real object of such documents as trust receipts, in this as in many other cases, seems to be to try and defeat the provisions of S. 52 (2) (c), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and this Mr. Warwick was finally constrained to admit was the real object of the plaintiffs in issuing them. (Q. and A. No. 159 of his deposition, dated 28th January 1932.) In any case, such would be the effect if permitted. This would offend against the provisions of S. 4, Trust Act, as also would the involved breach of contract between the Chartered Bank and the shippers. If no trust was created and contrary to my opinion the pledge to the defendants was invalid for any reason, then the logical result of the plaintiffs' contentions would be that S. 52 (2) (c), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act would apply and the goods would form part of the property of the insolvents divisible amongst their creditors, as being goods in the order or disposition of the insolvents, in their trade or business, by the consent and permission of the true owner under such circumstances that they are the reputed owners thereof. This follows from the plaintiffs' contention that they are hypothecatees, that is to say, the true owners of the goods within the meaning of the section.

Such being the case, it would appear to be unnecessary to consider that part of the plaintiffs' case which rests upon allegations of fraud, because in such a case the plaintiffs would not be entitled to maintain the suit, the property in the goods having vested in the Official Assignee. Further, the plaintiffs, as regards the shippers, were in a similar position to that which they alleged against Kerr Tarruck & Co. Admittedly, they had obtained the shipping documents from the shippers upon the representation that they would not part with them, except upon payment, when their intention was immediately to deliver them to Kerr Tarruck & Co. in exchange for the trust receipts. Thus they were guilty of fraud or the offence of cheating and their claim in this suit is founded upon such tort-feasance. The contention is that the goods in suit were obtained from the plaintiffs by Kerr Tarruck & Co. by means of an offence or fraud within the meaning of the second proviso to the old S. 178, Contract Act. The plaintiffs do not rely upon the first proviso. Seldom has a case based upon allegations of fraud started under a heavier handicap. It is perhaps unnecessary for me to repeat that the Court will not allow such allegations to be made lightly, or otherwise, than with the utmost precision and particularity, and above all promptly.

That their old and trusted customers, Kerr Tarruck & Co., had defrauded them, never entered the heads of the plaintiffs until at least 15 months after the insolvency. During this long period, when the plaintiffs, presumably, were in fairly constant communication with their legal advisers, not a word was said about fraud having been committed against the plaintiffs, and their case was launched and came to hearing without any mention of so serious an allegation. It is not contended that any new facts were disclosed during this interval, upon which this new charge could be founded, except the awkward fact which arose as the result of the decision in the case of Rahimbux Ashan Karim v. Central Bank of India Ltd (1) to which I have referred. In other words, this allegation of fraud is an afterthought. It has been raised upon the advice of lawyers, and it is clear from the evidence of Mr. Pollock that the officers of the plaintiff bank have experienced great difficulty and much searching of heart before they could be induced to swear upon oath, and with any sense of decency or honesty, that Kerr Tarruck & Co. had defrauded or had intended to defraud the plaintiffs. I have been informed that this is a kind of representative suit, and is being financed by several of the banks who wished to have the question raised by the issue of trust receipts finally decided. I cannot help regretting that the plaintiffs did not pursue the original intention to the end, without introducing fresh allegations of fact which in all the circumstances of this case, I cannot help thinking are not honestly believed to be true nor honestly contended. Nevertheless, I will deal with them upon the supposition that they have been truly alleged, and that they were omitted from the original plaint either by forgetfulness and inadvertence on the part of the officers of the plaintiff bank, or by negligence on the part of their legal advisers.

The pledge to the defendants was of goods, not documents, therefore we are concerned with the second proviso to S. 178 only so far as it relates to goods. In the first place it is difficult to see how the proviso can apply in the particular circumstances of this case. The lawful owners of these goods were the shippers, not the plaintiffs. Kerr Tarruck & Co. obtained them from the shipowners who were in lawful custody of them. Assuming that the plaintiffs were the agents of the shippers for the purposes of the proviso, Kerr Tarruck & Co. obtained the documents not the goods from the plaintiffs. It may however be possible to contend that Kerr Tarruck & Co. obtained the goods from the shipowners, who were in lawful custody of them, by means of an offence or fraud committed upon a third party, namely, by getting the shipping documents, which are, in the words of Bowen, L. J., "the key to the warehouse" from the plaintiffs by means of an offence or fraud, and that this is sufficient to bring them within the terms of the proviso. The word "offence" is not defined in the Contract Act, but in the General Clauses Act, S. 3 (37), it is defined as "any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force." The offence alleged by the plaintiffs is that of cheating, within the meaning of S. 415, I. P. C., which is as follows :

"Whoever, by deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to consent that any person shall retain any property, or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property, is said to "cheat".

Explanation.—A dishonest concealment of facts is a deception within the meaning of this section.

Therefore to constitute this crime, there must be active deception, by which the accused must (a) fraudulently or dishonestly induce the person to deliver property, etc., or (b) intentionally induce him to do or omit something which causes damage, etc., to him, or there must be a dishonest concealment of facts, with the like results. "Fraudulently" means doing a thing with intent to defraud (S. 25, I. P. C.). The word "defraud" is not defined in the Code, but connotes generally an intention to deceive, coupled with the possibility of doing injury. "Dishonestly" means with the intention of causing wrongful gain or loss (S. 24, I. P. C.). Wrongful gain or loss means gain or loss of property by unlawful means. (S. 23, I. P. C.).

"Fraud" is defined in S. 17, Contract Act. It is doubtful whether this definition is intended to apply to the word "fraud" in S. 178 and cogent reasons are adduced by the learned authors of Pollock and Mulla on the "Contract and Specific Relief Acts," Edn. 5 at p. 639, why it should be confined to the substantive wrong of deceit. But, whether or not these arguments are sound, the definition requires either an intent to deceive or to induce a contract, by a false suggestion known to be false, or the active concealment of a fact or a promise made without any intention of performing it, or any other act fitted to deceive, or any act specially declared by law to be fraudulent. Mere silence is not fraud unless there is a duty to speak, or unless it is equivalent to speech. There is no evidence, in this case, of active deception or concealment, and I am satisfied that there was no intention to deceive or to defraud. No one in this case, except the learned counsel appearing for the plaintiffs, has had the courage frankly to state otherwise, though some witnesses have been induced to say that they had suspicions, whatever that may imply.

The firm of Kerr Tarruck & Co. carried on business in Calcutta prior to its insolvency for more than 70 years, and during all that time it is admitted that it held a very high reputation for commercial integrity. At all material times Mr. B. N. Sircar acted for Kerr Tarruck & Co. of which firm he was the senior partner; no one has suggested that he has ever been known to be or act otherwise than as an upright and honest business man. I do not believe that he ever had any intention to deceive or to act fraudulently or dishonestly; nor do I believe that the plaintiffs were induced to issue the shipping documents, by any deception or active or passive concealment on his part or on the part of his firm. Throughout all this time, Kerr Tarruck & Co. never failed to meet every bill at or before maturity, generally before. I do not believe that either party ever intended the conditions of the trust receipts to be observed. They were and are devices created in an attempt to defeat the provisions of S. 52, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, in case of insolvency. In my belief Kerr Tarruck & Co. had no more idea that, in pledging the goods to the defendants, they were acting wrongfully or in breach of any contract, than the plaintiffs had, when they disregarded the plain terms of their contract with the shippers. The plaintiffs never relied or intended to rely on the security (if any) afforded by the trust receipts. They relied upon the reputation and proved integrity of Kerr Tarruck & Co. No effort was made to conceal the pledge to the defendants. The representatives of the plaintiffs were allowed to inspect the goods and the godown, whenever they wished to do so, and the engraved locks of the defendants were on the doors, and their godown sarkar wearing conspicuously a metal badge with the name of the bank upon it, was always present. They were well aware that large quantities of goods were stored in the godown, which were not covered by the trust receipts.

In my opinion, the facts show that Kerr Tarruck & Co. honestly believed, so far as they ever directed their minds to the question, if at all, that they were entitled to deal with the goods as they thought fit, subject to their obligation to meet the bills when they fell due, and that the property in the goods had passed to them on delivery. Just as the plaintiffs honestly believed that they were justified in issuing the shipping documents in return for trust receipts, the truth seems to be, that some, and perhaps many, business men nowadays, though of undoubted integrity, have scant regard for the sanctity of contracts, or even of trusts, or for meticulous adherence to their terms. Mr. Warwick's evidence under cross-examination is full of enlightenment upon this aspect of the case. Perhaps their cynical disregard of what was once considered to be the corner-stone of modern civilization is not surprising. There have occurred recently striking and notorious examples of breaches of contracts which had been confirmed and sanctified with all the deliberation and solemnity of Acts of the legislature itself and as deliberately broken. But it is my belief that those who treat contractual obligations with such scant respect will generally and in the long run have cause to regret their actions, and the result in this case is, that there must be judgment for the defendants with costs.

RANKIN, C. J. AND MITTER, J.

Jogendranath Das—Defendant —Appellant.

v.

Damodardas Khanna — Plaintiff — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 134 of 1929, Decided on 8th July 1932, against decree of Fourth Addl. Sub-Judge, 24-Pargannas, D/- 16th February 1929.

(a) Accounts—Jama wasil baki—Interpretation which avoids errors must be preferred.

In extracting the meaning of an account jama wasil baki the first assumption which the Court must make is that the account may be consistent and correct. An interpretation, which avoids imputing to it glaring errors, is to be preferred to an interpretation, which involves the conclusion that an error has been made and successive further errors have counter-balanced its effect. [P 375 C 1]

(b) Accounts—Jama wasil baki—Year stated in Bengali and double figure year for purpose of rent—Period explained.

In the jama wasil baki when the year is stated in the Bengali style the year referred to is the year of occupation in respect of which the rent is due and when the year is stated in double figures in English dates the year meant is the financial or official year in which the Collector's duty to recover it arose and in which the Collector could reasonably expect to receive it.

(c) Sale—Revenue sale—Defaulting tenant is not entitled to possession of buildings on land on payment of rent.

At a revenue sale, the buildings do not pass with the land and the defaulting tenant is not entitled to retain possession of the buildings on the land upon the payment of an equitable rent. The tenant can either remove the building or give them to the landlord or purchaser at a reasonable valuation : A I R 1926 P C 135, Ref.

Rankin, C. J.—The defendant appeals from the decree made in a suit brought for purpose of setting aside the sale of a holding in Panchannagram. The sale was held on 21st December 1926, for the default of payment of revenue or rent, which accrued due on 23rd March 1926 and for which the latest date for payment, under the orders of the Board of Revenue was 28th July 1926. This is described as the rent or revenue for the Bengali year 1332, which corresponds to the period 14th April 1925 to 13th April 1926. Apart from a subsidiary question, which has reference to certain buildings on the land, the only question upon this appeal is the question whether there was any arrear of revenue for 1332 to justify the revenue sale.

The terms of the tenancy are to be collected from the kabuliyat executed by the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title and dated 19th April 1876, a few days after the beginning of the Bengali year 1283. The kabuliyat states that the rent is to be at the rate of Rs. 6.6.6 per year and that the tenants will deposit the said rent in the Collectorate within 28th March each year. According to the contract therefore the rent for a year was not payable in advance, but was payable about a fortnight or three weeks before the end of each year of tenancy. The year of tenancy is not stated to be the Bengali year, but if it extended from 19th April of one year to 11th April of the next, it coincided, save for a few days, with the Bengali year. The financial year or official year, for purposes of revenue, begins on 1st April and ends on the last day of March.

In order to determine whether, in December 1926, the plaintiff had failed to pay the sum of Rs. 5-15-6, the sum to which the rent of Rs. 6-6-6 had been reduced, due in respect of his occupation of the land for the Bengali year 1332, or perhaps more accurately for the period 19th April 1925 to 18th April 1926, which is the question before us, we have to examine the jama wasil bakis of this holding. These are accounts kept by the office of the Collector of the District of 24-Pargannas and the dispute between the parties is as to their meaning. In other words, as the Judicial Committee pointed out in a case of similar character having reference to Dihi Panchannagram : Narendra Nath Dutta v. Abdul Hakim (1), the question before us is a question of fact: whether a certain sum was paid before a certain date or then remained unpaid, and the entries in these jama wasil bakis are to be regarded as a narrative of monetary transactions, a narrative of which the meaning is to be got at by considering what is said and the manner of saying it.

The accounts produced begin with the year 1899 and continue down to the date with which we are concerned. The first thing to be collected from them is that from 1899 down to 1910, the tenant paid a sum equivalent to the annual rent in June of each year. Thereafter down to 1924, he paid his rent in each year generally in July, once or twice in June and once or twice later. In the year 1921, for some reason, he paid twice, paying Rs. 6-6-6 in addition to the annual demand, which at that time was Rs. 6-1-9. For the first part of the period comprised in these accounts, namely, down to 1914, the last date for payment of arrear of rent for the purpose of avoiding a revenue sale was 28th June of each year. From 1914, it was 28th July each year. Now the sole question upon these accounts is this: whether they show that the payments, which were made, were payments of rent in advance, in the sense that the payments made in June or July, were made in respect of the rent due from the tenant in respect of his occupation of the land from April immediately before the payment was made until the March of the following year, or whether they show that they were made in respect of the year of occupation which ended in the previous April, and for the rent which became due under the contract on the 28th of the previous March. This is the same question which has given trouble before in at least two cases in this Court, but on a question of fact I propose to take no notice of other cases and to examine the documents by themselves.

It appears to me to be demonstrable on the face of these accounts that the latter of the two alternatives above stated is the correct one. We are not asked to assume, nor could we assume, that any arrear or overpayment existed prior to the period dealt with in these accounts. As the entry for 1899 is defective, in that it puts no date to define the period in respect of which the payment is being made, it would have to be filled up, if at all, consistently with the subsequent entries. We must either neglect the first item altogether, or we must fill up the gap, as if the "demand" were defined by the year 1899-00—it makes no difference which we do. Taking the next three entries, the question is what is meant by "demand for 1900-01," "demand for 1901-02" and "demand for 1902-03." Does it refer to the rent which became due on the 28th March of the first of the two years mentioned—i. e., in 1900, 1901 and 1902—or does it refer to the rent which at the time of payment in June had not yet become due and would not become due until the following March? We may bear in mind on this question that we are dealing with accounts kept by a revenue officer and that 1900-01 is the financial or official year. The learned Advocate General for the plaintiff respondent, contends that each year, when the tenant paid his annual rent in June, he was paying rent which, under the contract, would not be due until the following March and for which the tenant had, until the following June, time in which to pay, for the purpose of avoiding a revenue sale. This he contends must be the meaning of the words "current rent" or "current demand."

Now, in the year 1903, the accounts as kept show a change of method. The date 1902-03 is followed by "1309 B.S." and in each June, as the tenant pays, he is said, for the next five years, to pay in respect of the demand for 1309, 1310, 1311, 1322 and 1313 respectively. In 1908, the former method is reverted to and the demand is defined by the year 1908-09. This goes on consistently till 1915-16. Again a change of method is introduced and the account reintroduces the Bengali year as defining the demand in respect of which the payment has been received. 1915-16 is followed by 1322 B. S. and thereafter the account continues in terms of the Bengali year.

Now, if we are to extract the meaning of an account the first assumption which we must make is that the account may be consistent and correct. An interpretation, which avoids imputing to it glaring errors, is to be preferred to an interpretation, which involves the conclusion that an error has been made and successive further errors have counter-balanced its effect. We will therefore examine the three transition periods in this account, concentrating upon the fact that the year 1902-03 is followed by 1309 B. S., that the year 1313 B. S., is followed by 1908-09 and that the year 1915-16 is followed by the year 1322 B. S. If we are not to assume that the Collector's officer is in each case making a highly serious mistake, it seems to me to follow that the payments made by the tenant in June or July had reference to the rent which was due on the previous 28th March in respect of the year of occupation which concluded on the 18th April thereafter and which was finally demandable for purpose of revenue sale in the middle of the calendar year. From 28th March till 18th April, the rent for the previous year had certainly been due under the contract. That however was a short period of three weeks and during most of these three weeks the year of occupation had itself not come to an end. April 1902, for example, to April 1903 was the Bengali year 1309. The payment made in June 1902 is put down as referable to the demand 1902-03; payment in June 1903 is defined as the demand for 1309. If, in June 1902, the tenant had paid his rent from 19th April 1902 till 18th April 1903, then when he comes next June to pay his rent in 1903, how can that rent be put down as referable to 1309 B. S.? Clearly it cannot. 1902-03 is the revenue year in which the Collector had to see that he got his rent by the 28th June, for the year of occupation which ended in the middle of the previous April. The year "1309 B. S.," shows that a change is being made to define the demand in a more simple and more natural way by giving the Bengali year for which the rent was paid—that is the year of occupation in respect of which the rent was due. If the original method be continued after the year 1902-03 until we come again to the year 1908-09, it will be found that there has been no mistake. 1908-09 comes in in its proper place consistently with 1902-03.

Let us look then at the change from the method employed to record the payment made in June 1907 to the method employed in recording the payment made in June 1908. From 1313 B. S., we change in the following year to 1908-09. The year 1313 began on 14th April 1906, and ended on 13th April 1907. Why should it then be followed by the figures 1908-09? Are we to say that when 1902-03 was followed by 1309, the tenant is recorded as paying rent twice and that when 1313 B. S., is followed by 1908-09 a year has been allowed to drop out? Clearly not. By the rent due for 1313 B. S., we mean, or any ordinary tenant would mean, by that expression, the rent which he had to pay by June 1907 if he wanted to avoid a revenue sale. The rent for the following year 1314 B. S., that is, April 1907 to April 1908, was demandable on pain of revenue sale by June 1908. It is true that for three days before the beginning of the financial year 1908, it had been payable under the contract, though the period of occupation extended for a few days beyond the end of the Bengali year 1314. The successive entries are quite consistent, if it be remembered that when the year is stated in the Bengali style the year referred to is the year of occupation in respect of which the rent is due and that when the year is stated by double figures the year meant is the financial or official year in which the Collector's duty to recover it arose and in which the Collector could reasonably expect to receive it. The same reasoning applies to the transition from 1915-16 to 1322 B. S. In both years the payment was made in July and in the second it was made at the 11th hour. The learned Subordinate Judge, consistently with the contention before us, was invited to hold that here again the same rent had been paid twice and solemnly recorded by successive entries in the books. He has accepted this contention and says "this appears to be clear."

An examination of the jama-wasil baki will show that the change of method which had been introduced in 1903 and abandoned in 1908 was again being introduced, but that it was introduced more carefully with an explicit statement as to what was being done. As the learned Advocate-General's contention involves that the payment made in June 1903 as being for 1309 B. S. was a second payment for the same period as had been covered by the payment in the previous year, it may well be that simple-minded tenants had been attracted by the same argument and that the reversion to the old system in 1908 was not unconnected with a certain amount of confusion which the change of 1903 had caused. Be that as it may, we see that after 1916 the Bengali year is deliberately adopted to define the demand in respect of which the payments are received; and we find further that in the transition year the demand is carefully defined.

The payment received in July 1916 is stated to be current for 1322 up to 28th July 1916. This can only have reference to the rent which, on 28th March 1916, became due under the contract in respect of the year of occupation which ended on 18th April 1916, and which was finally demandable under the orders of the Board of Revenue on 28th July 1916. This entry, like the entry of 1309, shows one that the previous entry had reference to the financial year which began a fortnight before the end of the period of occupation in respect of which the rent was due. 1322 B. S. is not a financial year at all. The change is not merely from what may be called the English style to the Bengali style. The Bengali style tells one that the demand is being more simply defined by a reference to the Bengali year, which in everybody's mind is the year during which the tenant has enjoyed the land and for which the sum is due. The period of occupation could not naturally be defined by the financial year which for purposes of collection and account is of primary interest to the revenue.

If this be right, the controversy is really at an end. There was no double payment in respect of the year of occupation 1322. The rent for 1323 was timeously paid in July 1917. In 1924, the rent had dropped from Rs. 6-6-6 to Rs. 6-1-9 and this was timeously paid in July 1918. In July 1919 rent was paid for 1325 at the old figure of Rs. 6-6-6, which was an overpayment of four annas nine pies. Taking this overpayment into account, the rent for 1326 was paid in September 1920. For 1327, there was for some reason a double payment, one of Rs. 6-6-6 and another of Rs. 6-1-9 so that the account was Rs. 6-6-6 in credit. The rents for 1328 to 1330 were at the reduced figure of Rs. 5-15-6 and were duly paid, though in the last case not until December. In 1331 nothing was paid, but the account being Rs. 6-6-6 in credit, there was no arrear, seven annas still standing to the credit of the tenant's account. For 1332 nothing was paid in 1926, and then in December 1926, the holding was sold for arrears of revenue. The Collector was quite within his rights.

When the case of Narendra Nath Dutta v. Abdul Hakim (1) was decided in this Court by Chatterjea and Graham, JJ., they came to a conclusion of fact upon jama-wasil-bakis, in which the entries may have been of the same character as those before us, though the contractual date for payment was 28th June and the year of occupation ended 6th July, dates which make a good deal of difference. I do not propose to discuss the facts of another case upon a question of fact. But it may be worthwhile to notice that the decision in this Court in Narendra's case (1) was given in August 1924 and that on 4th June 1925 the same matter of these holdings in Panchannagram came before Walmsley and B. B. Ghose, JJ., in an unreported case Ramlal Chaudhuri v. Bijaygopal Mukherji (2). In that case, as in the previous case and in this case, the parties had taken copies of these technical accounts and had proceeded in the trial Court to dispute about their meaning without taking the trouble to call any evidence from the Collectorate by a person familiar with these accounts who might be qualified to explain them. Walmsley and B. B. Ghose, JJ., thought fit in this Court to receive the evidence of a clerk from the Collector's office. They appear to have come to the conclusion that the "demand each year is shown as being for the period ending 28th July, that is to say, in the account for the Bengali year 1325 or the financial year ending 31st March 1919, the demand is shown as being for the year ending 28th July 1919."

I cannot take into account the evidence in another case, even if I had the record of it. Proceeding entirely upon the internal evidence of the accounts before me, which are quite explicit after 1916, I conclude that the accounts are consistent throughout, no years being dropped out and no payments being recorded twice in respect of the same year. During the period, for which the account is kept in terms of the financial year, there is, in this case, only one instance of payment being made after the Collector's final date in June or July. In that case the payment is entered as being in respect of an arrear. But the figures 1913-14 do not occur in the printed sheet, though the payment was undoubtedly received in that financial year. Upon this account, I think it enough to say that the demand is shown, where the financial year is employed, as being for the financial year in which the rent is finally demandable, that is in which on 28th July the holding becomes liable to sale, and that the demand is shown as "current" up till 28th July of that year.

I may here observe that for each payment the tenant gets a chalan or receipt, which presumably shows full particulars of the rent which he has liquidated. The tenant has not produced any one of these, preferring doubtless that his arguments as to double payment should be considered without them. My finding of fact upon the evidence is contrary to that of the learned Judge and I think the appeal should be allowed. It has been called to our attention that the plaintiff has certain buildings which at the date of suit stood on the holding. As the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have expressed an opinion that the plaintiff's right, if the sale were valid, would be to retain possession of them upon the payment of an equitable rent to the defendant we are asked by the appellant to negative this view. While it is clear that at a revenue sale the buildings do not pass with the land [Narayan Das v. Jatindra Nath Roy (3)], the learned Advocate-General has not defended the view that the defaulting tenant is entitled to retain possession of the buildings on the land upon payment of an equitable rent. The appellant is willing that the plaintiff should, if he so desires, remove the buildings; or if he does not desire to remove the buildings, the appellant is willing to take them at a reasonable valuation. This does full justice to the rights of the respondent and we will order accordingly. The result is that the appeal is allowed with costs and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs. But in our decree we will make the order which I have indicated as regards the buildings.

Mitter, J.—I agree entirely with my Lord, the Chief Justice both in the reasons and conclusions of his judgment in this case.

Second Appeal No. 365 of 1930, Decided on 10th June 1932, against decree of Sub-Judge, Bogra, D/- 25th September 1929.

Landlord and Tenant — Gift of occupancy holding without consent of landlord—Landlord is not entitled to eject transferee.

The principle that on a sale of an occupancy holding the landlord in the absence of his consent is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding does not apply to transfers of such holding otherwise than by sale or mortgage, e.g., by gift. Even if it be held that the above principle applies to transfers by gifts, where there is an agreement between the donor tenant and the donee by which the donor tenant occupies some portion of the land, the landlord is not entitled to eject the transferee as before this question can arise, he must show that he has a right of re-entry as against the original tenant: 42 Cal 172 (F B), Dist. [P 378 C 1; P 379 C 2]

Jateendranath Sanyal — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the ejectment of the defendants from a certain non-transferable occupancy holding, on the allegation that they are in possession thereof as trespassers. The original tenant was one Kamalkamini Debi. Defendant 2 is the daughter of Kamalkamini and defendant 1 is the husband of defendant 2. Defendant 3 is a bargadar in actual cultivating possession of the land in suit. In 1322 B. S. Kamalkamini executed a deed of gift in respect of certain properties, including the holding in suit, in favour of her daughter and her son-in-law, defendants 1 and 2. This was at or about the time of the marriage of defendant 1 to defendant 2, and since that time defendant 1, together with his wife, defendant 2, has been living with his mother-in-law Kamalkamini as ghar-jamai, and has been in possession of the land in suit by virtue of the deed of gift executed in his favour by Kamalkamini, and by realization of his share of the paddy grown on the land by the bargadar, defendant 3. It may be observed that this bargadar, defendant 3, used also to cultivate the land under Kamalkamini before she executed the deed of gift in favour of defendants 1 and 2. It may further be observed that, although Kamalkamini has admittedly not paid any rent to the landlord for some years back, previous to that and subsequent to the execution of the deed of gift, the rent for the years 1325 to 1327 and the first quarter of 1328 were realized from her by suit.

It is common ground that the transfer was effected without notice to the landlord and without his previous or subsequent consent, and in those circumstances the question arises whether there has been an abandonment of the holding by Kamalkamini, and whether the landlord is entitled to treat the defendants as trespassers and to eject them from the land. On behalf of the appellant, reliance is placed on that portion of the decision of the Full Bench in Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (1), in which it is laid down that:

"where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding."

It is contended that although the decision of Dayamayi's case (1) relates expressly to transfers for value of occupancy holdings, the principles laid down apply with equal force to other kinds of transfers, such as transfer by gift, in which the whole holding is transferred and in which the tenant does not retain any subsisting interest in the holding. This contention cannot, in my opinion, be supported. The decision in Dayamayi's case (1) was based on a consideration of a number of previous and to some extent conflicting decisions regarding the effect of transfers for value of occupancy holdings, or of portions of such holdings, and also on a consideration of changes that were taking place in economic conditions in so far as such changes influenced and were influenced by the extension of the practice of the sale or mortgage of occupancy holdings with or without the landlord's consent.

This being so, it does not at all follow that the principles laid down in Dayamayi's case (1) with regard to transfers for value of occupancy holdings ought to be regarded as being applicable to transfers of such holdings otherwise than by sale or mortgage, e.g., by gift. Transfers by gift, unlike transfers by sale or mortgage, are few and far between, and suits for ejectment arising out of such transfers are probably rare. Moreover, transfers by gift generally take place between persons who are related to one another, and their frequency or infrequency is probably in no way affected by changes in economic conditions, as in the case of transfers by sale or mortgage. This being so, I am of opinion that, although transfers by gift may, in certain circumstances, amount to or result in abandonment, no inference of abandonment can be drawn from such transfers on the authority of the decision in Dayamayi's case (1), which relates exclusively to transfers for value.

Assuming however for the sake of argument, that the principles laid down in Dayamayi's case (1) apply with equal force to transfers by gift, the appellant is confronted with a further difficulty in the use of the word "ordinarily" in the passage in the decision in Dayamayi's case (1) quoted above. The use of the word "ordinarily" in this connexion appears to me to point to the conclusion that although an inference of abandonment may be drawn from the fact of the entire holding having been transferred, the door is left open to the tenant or his transferee to show that special circumstances exist which would negative such an inference. It seems to me that such special circumstances have been proved to exist in the present case. Although the transfer of the holding has to some extent affected the legal rights of Kamalkamini and of the defendants, as amongst themselves, the legal rights of the landlord have not been materially affected. There has been no cessation of cultivation and no repudiation on the part of Kamalkamini of her liability to pay rent to the plaintiff. Kamalkamini has continued to live in the same house, and the bargadar has continued to deliver the tenant's share of the paddy grown on the land to the inmates of that house for the enjoyment of Kamalkamini and the other members of her household.

The only real difference that the transfer of the holding to the defendants 1 and 2 has made is that the title in the holding, as against Kamalkamini, is now vested in them, and they now vested in Kamalkamini's house and share in the enjoyment of the crops grown on the land. It has been repeatedly held that, even if the entire holding is transferred neither the original tenant nor his transferee is liable to ejectment provided the tenant continues to occupy some portion of the land by virtue of some sort of agreement between him and his transferee, but as far as I am aware it has never been held that, in order that the position of a tenant and his transferee may be safeguarded as against the landlord, it is necessary that the agreement between them should be of a legally binding nature. It seems to me that, in certain circumstances, an informal agreement between them would have the same effect, even though it might not be legally binding. This seems to be the position in the present case, Kamalkamini having made some sort of arrangement with her son-in-law to the effect that he and his wife should come and live in her house and that they should all share in the enjoyment of the crops grown on the land.

It may be said that even if the above view of the matter is correct, it applies only as between the landlord and the original tenant, but that the transferees, having acquired no title as against the landlord, are in the position of trespassers and are liable to be ejected from the land. This contention has been raised more than once in similar cases that have come before this Court and has, in recent years, invariably been negatived. Before the question of ejecting the transferee can at all arise, the landlord must show that he has a right of re-entry as against the original tenant. This right he may seek to establish either by showing that the conditions laid down in S. 87, Ben. Ten. Act, have been fulfilled, or that the case comes within the purview of the rules laid down in Dayamayi's case (1). Even if, under the rules laid down in Dayamayi's case (1), an inference of abandonment may be held to have arisen from the fact that the entire holding has been transferred, it is still open to the tenant or to his transferee to show that circumstances exist which negative that inference. As already stated, I am of opinion that the rule laid down in Dayamayi's case (1) does not apply to the present case, and I am further of opinion that, even if it does, the inference of abandonment that may arise on the application of that rule will, in the particular circumstances of this case, have to be negatived.

I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he has a right of re-entry as against the original tenant, from which it follows that he has no right to eject the original tenant's transferees and to take khas possession of the land in suit. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs and the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court are affirmed.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge of Burdwan affirming an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Asansol by which he directed the attachment of a debt secured by a mortgage of immovable property in favour of the judgment-debtor. It appears that the Asansol Motor Engineering Ltd. obtained a decree against Dharanidhar Ray, a minor who was represented by his guardian ad litem Swarupini Devi and in execution of the said decree has attached a mortgage bond executed in favour of the judgment-debtor by Raja Bon Behari Singh. The attachment has been made according to the provisions of O. 21, R. 46, Civil P. C., by a written order prohibiting the mortgagee, the judgment-debtor in this case, from recovering the mortgage debt and Raja Bon Behari Singh, the mortgagor, from making payment thereof until the further order of the Court. To this attachment the judgment-debtor through his mother, the guardian ad litem, takes exception and contends that as the mortgagor Raja does not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which has directed the attachment and as the mortgaged property is not also situated within the jurisdiction of the said Court the attachment of the mortgage debt is illegal. This objection has been overruled by both the Courts below, hence the present appeal.

In this appeal it is contended that as the mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage O. 21, R. 46 does not apply. But this contention which was faintly urged was abandoned and it is now conceded that the mortgage is really a simple mortgage. It is argued that as the mortgaged property is situate in Manbhum and as the garnishee mortgagor also resides at Manbhum the Asansol Court which is the attaching Court has no jurisdiction to issue the prohibitory order on the garnishee, and reliance has been placed in support of this contention on the case of Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jaganath (1). It is said that the proper procedure is that the decree-holder should apply for the transfer of the decree for execution to the Manbhum Court, and after the decree is so transferred he should apply to the Manbhum Court to issue a prohibitory order upon the mortgagor from paying the debt to the judgment-debtor. We are unable to accept this contention. The locality of a mortgage debt is where the mortgage bond is found and it is admitted in the present case that the mortgaged bond is with the judgment-debtor who resides within the jurisdiction of the Asansol Court. In the case of New York Life Insurance Co. v. Public Trustee (2), Pollock, Master of the Rolls, quoted the rule of law applicable to this matter from the judgment of Lord Abinger in Attorney-General v. Rywens (3). Lord Abinger said this:

"As to the locality of many descriptions of effects, household and moveable goods, for instance, there never could be any dispute; but to prevent conflicting jurisdictions between different ordinaries, with respect to choses in action and titles to property, it was established as law, that judgment debts were assets, for the purposes of jurisdiction, where the judgment is recorded; leases, where the land lies, specialty debts, where the instrument happens to be; and simple contract debts, where the debtor resides at the time of the testator's death."

A mortgage debt is a specialty debt as opposed to a simple contract debt. Lord Atkins, J., in the New York Insurance case (2), just referred to, pointed out that in respect of specialty debts the test has always been not the place and residence of the debtor, but the actual place where actual document constituting the specialty exists, namely, where the piece of paper, is to be found. The piece of paper, i. e., the mortgage bond in the present case, is found with the judgment-debtor in Asansol and that is the locality of the mortgage debt. The mortgage debt is also payable at Asansol where the judgment-debtor mortgagee resides, for unless a particular place be agreed upon for payment of the mortgage debt a personal tender is generally necessary: see Fisher on Mortgage, Edn. 6, para. 1504. It is competent to a Court under O. 21, R. 46 to issue a prohibitory order upon a person resident outside the limits of its jurisdiction in respect of property which is within its jurisdiction and the mortgage bond which is the property sought to be attached is within the jurisdiction of the Asansol Court. And it has been correctly held in the majority of the High Courts in India that for the purposes of the execution a debt due to a judgment-debtor under a hypothecation bond is moveable property within the meaning of O. 21, R. 46, Civil P. C.: see Nataraja Iyer v. The South Indian Bank of Tinnevely (4).

The case of Begg Dunlop and Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (1) is distinguishable in its facts. There the decree under execution was obtained in the Court of Burdwan against the judgment-debtor residing in Burdwan and there was a debt due to the judgment-debtor from the firm of Messrs. Begg Dunlop & Co. and Williamson Maggor & Co., two firms of merchants carrying on business in the town of Calcutta; the debts being also payable in Calcutta, and in those circumstances it was held that it was not competent to a Court in execution of a decree for money to attach, at the instance of the decree-holder, a debt payable to the judgment-debtor by a non-resident outside the jurisdiction. In the present case the property attached is within the jurisdiction of the attaching Court although the garnishee is resident outside its jurisdiction. In Begg Dunlop's case (1) both the garnishee as well as the property sought to be attached were outside the jurisdiction of the Court which directed the attachment. Besides in the Begg Dunlop's case (1) the debt was not a specialty debt but a simple contract debt and the locality of the simple contract debt is within the area of the local jurisdiction within which the debtor for the time being resides: see Commissioner of Stamps v.

Hope (5). For the reasons given above we are of opinion that the conclusion reached by the Courts below is right and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Second Appeal No. 587 of 1930, Decided on 2nd June 1932 against decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Chittagong, D/- 19th September 1929.

Deed—Construction—Some rules stated.

The character of a document has to be determined mainly with reference to the terms of the document itself. More attention should be paid to what the document itself says than to a mere existence of a description expressive on the margin of the document.

[P 382 C 1 P 384 C 2]

The intention of the parties must be deduced from the language in which the document is couched and not by reference to the particular religious beliefs or ethical doctrines of the persons using them: Case law referred. [P 385 C 2]

A document was expressed to be a kabala and the transferee was in the possession of the property. There was a clause that the transferor was to get back the property if he paid the purchase amount and an equal amount within eight years from date of document. In the margin of the document there happened to be an expression kat kabala. The transferor failed to pay the amount and get back the property within eight years, but subsequently sought to redeem the property on the ground that the document was one for mortgage by conditional sale.

Held: that the transaction was an out and out sale and not a mortgage. [P 386 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated 19th September 1929, whereby he reversed the decision of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Patiya, dated 5th September 1927. The suit, out of which this matter arises, was instituted on 20th December 1926, and the plaintiffs were claiming to redeem certain lands, originally held by their predecessor in kayami raiyati right. The plaintiffs claimed to redeem those lands upon the allegation that they were mortgaged by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title to one Ashkar Ali on 23rd Jaistha 1260 M. E., corresponding to 5th June 1898. The defendant asserted that he had been continuously in occupation of the lands in question from the date just mentioned up to the time of the institution of the suit on 20th December 1926. The real defence to the plaintiffs' claim was that the document dated 23rd Jaistha 1260, was in law not a mortgage but was a deed of sale by which the lands therein referred to were sold, but subject to re-purchase, the condition of such re-purchase, being if the transferor repaid the sum stated to be the price together with an equal amount of profit within a period of eight years from the date of the document then he would be entitled to get back the lands transferred by him. The plaintiffs were ready and willing to pay to the defendant an amount equal to the principal sum and an equal amount by way of profit in order to redeem the lands from the defendant.

The only question which arises for determination in this appeal is the short point whether or not the document of 23rd Jaistha 1260 was a mortgage by way of conditional sale or was an out and out sale. It is admitted by the defendant that if that document is a mortgage, then the plaintiffs have not lost their right to redeem the lands and that they are entitled to succeed in their suit. On the other hand, if the document effected an out and out sale of the lands then the plaintiffs long since lost their right to buy back the lands, and their suit fails. The question whether a document of this character is a mortgage or an out and out sale has to be determined mainly with reference to the terms of the document itself. Lord Davey in giving the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Bal-kishen Das v. Legge (1) said with reference to a matter of this kind:

The case must therefore be decided on a consideration of the contents of the documents themselves with such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may be required to show in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts.

In the present case it appears that the plaintiffs sought to support their contention that the document of 23rd Jaistha 1260 was really a mortgage, by referring to statements in a petition which had been put forward in connexion with certain execution cases by the defendant, in which the defendant had described the document with which we are now concerned as kat-kabala. In my opinion, however, as the filing of that petition was an event which occurred some time subsequent to the execution of the document, it is not a matter which falls within the latter part of the proposition laid down by Lord Davey and accordingly that petition ought not to be taken into account one way or the other for the purpose of deciding the point at issue between the parties in the present proceedings. It is to be observed, from the dates which I have already mentioned that some 28 years had elapsed from the time when the bargain was made between the parties to the time when the present suit was instituted and therefore in endeavouring to construe the terms of the document, one must bear in mind the observations of Lord Cranworth, L. C., in the well-known case of Alderson v. White (2) where he said:

What is there to show that it (that is to say the document then under consideration) was intended to be a mere mortgage? I think that the Court, after a lapse of 30 years, ought to require cogent evidence to induce it to hold that an instrument is not what it purports to be, and I see but little evidence to that effect here.

That passage in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor has been quoted in a number of cases since and always with approval, notably by Lord Atkinson in the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Jhanda Singh v. Wahiduddin (3). The same passage had previously been referred to by Sir Barnes Peacock in giving the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (4). Owing to the lapse of time in the present case, I think one is bound very carefully to scrutinize the actual provisions of the document of 23rd Jaistha 1260 before approving the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, who came to the conclusion that the view taken by the learned Munsif that the transaction was an out and out sale was not correct and that the transfer was really by way of mortgage. There is another important passage in the judgment of Lord Cranworth in Alderson v. White (2), which also has been relied upon in subsequent cases where a point similar to the present one was under consideration. That passage is in the following terms:

The rule of law on this subject is one dictated by commonsense that prima facie an absolute conveyance, containing nothing to show that the relation of debtor and creditor is to exist between the parties, does not cease to be an absolute conveyance and become a mortgage merely because the vendor stipulates that he shall have a right to repurchase. In every such case the question is, what, upon a fair construction, is the meaning of the instrument?

In order to decide what is the meaning of the instrument now before me, one must therefore look at the precise terms of the document itself. They are as follows:

This kabala for absolute sale of lands and rent sheweth:—"I possess, separately, in kayomi raiyati right the lands measuring 1 kan! 4 gandas and 2 karhas, at an annual rent of Rs. 2-15-0 in proportion to my share, out of the total lands and rents described below with details regarding mauza, mehal, dags, etc. Now, owing to my necessity, for clearing up my debts, I sell the said lands absolutely to you at the price of Rs. 44. You, being possessor in my right and title, continue to enjoy and possess the said lands in succession of sons and grandsons downwards, with all its tenements and hereditaments. On no occasions, I or my successors-in-interest should claim or have the right to claim the said lands; if such a claim is ever made, it will be disallowed. If ever there be any impediments to your purchase or possession, then you shall be able to realize the principal amount and an equal amount of profits with costs and interest at the rate of one anna per rupee per month from me personally and from my moveable and immovable properties—calculating the date of the cause of action from the date of your disposition. I have not created any charge on the said lands, etc., by any deed in favour of anybody; if the creation of any such charge be proved, then I shall be liable to be prosecuted under the Penal Code. Be it known that if the said principal amount and the equal amount of profit be paid to you within the period of eight years, then you shall return back the said lands with this kabala. Under these terms I execute this absolute sale-deed."

It is to be observed that the document begins with the words:

"This kabala for absolute sale of lan and rent sheweth."

The document therefore at the outset purports to be a deed of sale and also to sell absolutely the lands described in it at the price of Rs. 44. The transferee is not only to be the possessor in the right and title of the transferor, but is to continue to enjoy and possess the lands in succession of sons and grandsons downwards, but on no occasion shall the transferee or his successors-in-interest claim or have the right to claim the said lands and, if such a claim is ever made, it is to be disallowed. It seems to me therefore that, on the face of this document, it is an absolute sale of the lands described therein and that it operated as a transfer of the property in those lands to the present defendant immediately upon the execution of the document. The learned Subordinate Judge has been greatly influenced by the fact that in the margin of the document there is a writing in these terms "kat-kabala: lands 1 kani 4 gandas 2 karhas, amount—Rs. 44." The learned Subordinate Judge, contrary to the view of the Court of first instance, came to the conclusion that that endorsement on the document must have been put there by or with the knowledge and assent of the defendant and therefore afforded some indication that the parties themselves intended the document to operate as a mortgage by conditional sale. The appellate Court below seems to have placed more reliance on the presence of the expression kat-kabala in the margin of the document than on the presence of the word kabala in the body of the document itself. Whereas, on the other hand, the learned Munsif said:

"The words 'kabala of sale' are very significant and had the transaction been really a mortgage there was no bar in writing the words 'deed of conditional sale' in place of 'kabala of sale'."

In passing, I may point out that it seems that, in its origin, the expression kat-kabala meant no more than a conditional agreement or any deed of conditional sale stipulating that if by a certain date the purchase price or money advanced be not paid, then the sale would become absolute: see Wilson's Glossary, p. 267. It seems clear that originally the expression was not used as necessarily meaning a mortgage. Mr. Sen, on behalf of the defendant-appellant in this appeal, has drawn my attention to the case of Kinuram Mondol v. Nitye Chand Sirdar (5), and in particular to a passage in the judgment of

Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., at p. 402, where he says:

"Let us look at the documents. There can be very little doubt upon the face of the first document that it was an out and out sale. The language of the document is clear, that the defendants did sell the property in question, and they speak of this document as a clear deed of sale divesting all rights for a consideration of Rs. 875, which they say is 'its proper value at the present time.' The purchasers were to become entitled to all the rights of the vendors and to possess and enjoy the property with their 'heirs, sons and grandsons, etc.' This clearly is an out and out sale."

Mr. Sen points out that in the present case, the document is not one of the kind where there is a provision that, if the transferor does not repay the price with or without some addition by way of compensation within a certain time, then and in that event, the property will pass to the transferee, which in effect was the situation as regards one of the documents in the case, to which I have just referred. Mr. Sen lays much stress upon the point that, as regards the document in the present case, the effect was that the property passed at the time of its execution and that the provision relating to the getting back of the property was in these words:

"If the said principal amount and the equal amount of profit be paid to you within the period of eight years, then you shall return back the said lands with this kabala. Under these terms I execute this absolute sale-deed."

Mr. Sen accordingly argues that the property in question passed immediately upon the execution of the document and the transferors had merely the right to get back the property the event of their taking advantage of the condition within the specified period of eight years. Mr. Rakshit on the other hand, on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents to this appeal, relied upon and emphasised the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge in the course of his judgment in support of his view that the transaction was really a mortgage and not an out and out sale. In particular Mr. Rakshit says that the clause in the document, to which I have just referred, is really in favour of the plaintiffs because there is no stipulation in the document providing for a re-conveyance of the land in question. It simply provides that "you (that is, the transferee) shall return back the said lands with this kabala." Those words, says Mr. Rakshit, clearly indicate that the transaction was a mortgage, seeing that what the parties agreed to was that if the principal and an equal amount of profit were paid within a period of eight years the transferor would get back the lands and the kabala would be handed over for cancellation. On the whole I think the view put forward by Mr. Sen is correct and moreover I think I ought to give greater weight to the fact that the document is expressed to be a kabala (i. e., a deed of sale) and to the provisions in it indicative of absolute conveyance of the lands, rather than to the other fact already discussed, namely, that in the margin there happens to be the expression "kat-kabala." In my opinion, such an endorsement placed outside the actual terms of the documents by no means necessarily stamps the instrument with the character of a mortgage.
